Mr. SHERLEY. I understand that, but they would have a claim against the Government which having once been decided by the Court of Claims would probably be paid as we pay other claims.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I will state to the gentleman I understood that there are many thousands of claims against the Government, and it is a very difficult and strenuous undertaking to get one of them adjudicated with the Court of Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. In order to make the record complete I shall ask permission to insert in the RECORD the contract itself.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. The contract is as follows:

1. This agreement, made this 1st day of April, 1910, by and between the United States of America (hereinafter referred to as the United States), party of the first part, acting through its Department of Justice, and William S. Eames and Thomas C. Young, architects, being copartners practicing their profession under the firm name "Eames & Young" (hereinafter referred to as the architects), parties of the second part, witnesseth: That—

2. Whereas the architects are now under employment by the United States as architects for the United States penitentiaries at Atlanta, Ga., and Leavenworth, Kans., under contract which expired by limitation on June 30, 1909, the buildings are not yet completed, and it is the mutual desire of the parties to renew said employment until said buildings shall be completed;

3. Now, therefore, it is hereby mutually contracted and agreed between the parties hereto, as follows:

4. The United States hereby reappoints and reemploys the architects (who accept said employment) as architects for the buildings hereinafter described, and for the period of time beginning January 1, 1910, and continuing until the construction of all of said buildings has been completed, provided that Congress shall make the necessary appropriations to continue said work.

5. The buildings, in connection with which architectural services are to be rendered under this contract, consist of the main cell wings, the administration building, the hospital building, wall surrounding prison, and addition to stables at Atlanta, Ga.; and the main cell wings, rotunda, administration building, and the hospital building at Leavenworth, Kans.

6. The professional services to be rendered by the architects shall consist of:

7. The necessary conferences, the preparation of preliminary studies, working drawings, large scale and full-size detail drawings, specifications, and of the general direction and customary supervision of the work. This is understood to mean the usual architectural services in connection with said construction.

8. The architects shall furnish specifications from time to time when necessary for the proper letting of contracts for materials, etc., and also such oral or written instructions or directions as are necessary for the proper information of the superintendents of construction.

9. The United States will advertise for and obtain the necessary proposals for materials, contract work, or things as may be required under the specifications, and shall receive and open same on the specified date. Such proposals may, in the discretion of the Department of Justice, be referred to the architects, who shall carefully consider them and recommend the acceptance of the one which, in their opinion, is the lowest and best, with a view solely to the interests of the United States in connection with its use for structural purposes.

10. The architects shall issue certificates of payment to contractors, upon written notice from the wardens that the materials or things have been duly received and checked by the superintendents of construction, according to the terms of the contract.

11. The supervision or superintendence to be furnished by the architects shall consist of such inspection, by themselves or their authorized representative, of the buildings and works in process of erection, completion, or alteration as may be necessary to ascertain whether the work is being executed in general conformity with their drawings, specifications, or directions. This embraces schedules of materials in such form that proposals may be obtained thereon; estimates of quantities where necessary, approval of materials, approval of shop drawings; expert advice, all necessary correspondence.

12. The architects shall have authority, and it shall be their duty, to reject any part of the materials or work that they find does not conform to the said drawings, specifications, and instructions, and to order its removal and reconstruction. They shall also have authority to act according to their judgment in all emergencies that may arise during the construction, and to order such changes in the work as they may consider necessary, and to determine and define the meaning of the drawings and specifications.

13 The architects shall furnish two sets of blue prints of all scale drawings needed for use at each penitentiary, but the cost of all additional blue prints and of all reproductions of drawings or specifications for the use of intending bidders or contractors shall be paid by the United States.

14. The working drawings, which shall in general conform to approved preliminary studies, with such minor or incidental modifications as may be necessary or desirable to carry them out to their best conclusions, shall be subject to the approval of the Attorney General.

15. After a definite scheme as to any part of the work has been approved by the United States, any changes in drawings, specifications, or other working papers or documents that may be required by the United States, shall be considered extra work and compensated as such. Any extra labor or expense which may fall upon the architects as the result of the delinquency, insolvency, or bankruptcy of any contractor or material man shall be considered extra work and compensated as such.

16. The drawings and specifications, as instruments of service, are and shall remain the property of the architects; and the United States, though retaining said blue prints, shall not use them for any other building.

17. The compensation for the contract services to be rendered by the architects shall be ascertained as follows:

It is agreed that the estimate of cost of completing said buildings under present plans from the continuation of the date of this agreement by any party other than the Government would be as set forth below, the Government being enabled, by the use of convict labor, to complete said construction at a less sum; and it is further agreed that the architects shall be paid a commission of 5 per cent on the amounts herein estimated as the value of said completion, as set forth in detail in the following table:

Payments to be made to the architects of such commission shall be apportioned as follows:

For design	1 per cent.
General drawings and specifications	1½ per cent additional.
Details and specifications	1 per cent additional.
Superintendence	1½ per cent additional.
Total	5 per cent.

The said respective commissions of 1 per cent "for design," 1½ per cent for "general drawings and specifications," and 1 per cent for "details and specifications," shall be due when said "design," "general drawings and specifications," and "details and specifications," respectively, shall be completed and delivered by the architects. The commission of 1½ per cent on account of superintendence shall be due quarterly as the work proceeds in proportion to the amount of work done. And the commissions as herein set forth shall be paid as they severally become due, except when, in the opinion of the Attorney General, to make such payments would so deplete the available appropriations as to cause delay or interfere with the progress of the construction work, in which event payment shall not be made until sufficient funds are available for the purpose. In no event shall a greater amount be paid the architects than is actually due them at the time of payment for services actually performed.

18. With respect to any building or work not included in this contract the construction of which shall hereafter be directed by the Attorney General, it is agreed by the parties hereto that no commission for architectural services shall be paid under this contract. Architectural services for such building or work shall be subject to a new contract, if the parties hereto mutually desire to enter into the same, based upon an estimated value as in the case of the buildings covered by this contract.

19. It is mutually agreed by the parties hereto that the terms of a certain contract between Eames & Young and Charles J. Bonaparte, former Attorney General, which covered the employment of Eames & Young as architects for the penitentiaries herein mentioned for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, are hereby extended to cover the period between the expiration of that contract and the time when this contract goes into effect.

20. In case any part of the work covered by this contract shall be changed then the estimate of the value of the same, as it appears in the foregoing tables, shall be revised so that it shall represent the cost of completing said work according to the changed plans, were said work to be performed by any party other than the Government.

21. In case any part of the work covered by this contract shall before completion be abandoned, or indefinitely postponed by the United States, the compensation of the architects shall be in accordance with the schedule hereinbefore mentioned showing the apportionment of their commission of 5 per cent for such services as shall have been actually performed by them.

22. The United States will pay for the services of two competent superintendents of construction, one for each of said penitentiaries, who will conduct and execute the work according to the plans, specifications, and directions of the architects, and in other respects under the supervision and orders of the warden, acting as the local representative of the United States on the works.

23. The United States shall, in addition to the compensation herein provided, pay the following expenses:

24. The actual, reasonable, and necessary traveling expenses of the architects, or their representatives or employees, while engaged in the performance of the work covered by this contract, it being understood that it will be necessary to some extent to travel, especially between St. Louis, Washington, Atlanta, and Leavenworth.

25. Telegraph, telephone, and messenger service reasonably necessary to the conduct by the architects of the contract service.

26. The reasonable expense of surveys, and of chemical and mechanical tests.

27. Franked envelopes and wrappers, and official stationery, reasonably adequate to the needs of the architects in performing the contract work, shall be furnished to them by the United States, to be used by the architects only in accordance with law and with the regulations of the Post Office Department.

28. It is further covenanted and agreed by and between the parties hereto that in case both of said parties of the second part shall through any cause become unable to complete the foregoing contract, or if the conduct of the said parties of the second part is such that the interests of the United States are thereby likely to be placed in jeopardy, or if the said parties of the second part violate any of the conditions or stipulations of this contract, the Attorney General, acting for and in behalf of the said party of the first part, shall have the right to revoke this contract and the commission awarded thereunder as to the portion then unperformed, and to complete or cause to be completed said contract; and he may, in his discretion, use for that purpose all designs, plans, details, drawings, specifications, etc., which may have been prepared by said parties of the second part, provided, in such case, however, that the parties of the second part shall receive equitable compensation for all services properly performed under this contract up to the date of its revocation, such compensation to be fixed by the Attorney General upon the basis of the percentages herein provided for. It is agreed, however, in order to prevent the suspension of the contract services through a dissolution, by death or otherwise, of said firm, parties of the second part herein, that the services hereunder may and shall thereafter be rendered by the survivor or successor in practice of said firm, and such dissolution shall not be construed to constitute inability to complete this contract within the meaning hereof.

29. It is an express condition of this contract that no Member of or Delegate to Congress, or other person whose name is not at this time disclosed, shall be entitled to any share in this contract or to any benefit to arise therefrom; and it is further covenanted and agreed that this contract shall not be assigned.

30. In witness whereof the parties hereto have signed triplicate copies hereof, by their respective authorized representatives, the day and year first above written.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
By GEO. W. WICKERSHAM,
Attorney General.

EAMES & YOUNG,
By T. C. YOUNG,
Member of firm.

Witnessed:
JAMES H. HENNESSY.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Penitentiary, Atlanta, Ga.: For continuing the construction of the United States Penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga., $75,000, to be available immediately and to remain available until expended, all of which sum shall be so expended as to give the maximum amount of employment to the inmates of said penitentiary.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. May I ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] how much time he thinks this item will take with his amendment?

Mr. HOWARD. I do not think it will take over 10 or 15 minutes. It will depend on how much time the committee might want.

Mr. MANN. Will it be perfectly agreeable to the gentleman to offer it to-morrow?

Mr. HOWARD. Perfectly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman might offer the amendment now and let it be considered to-morrow.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 6, page 112, by striking out "$75,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$179,900."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 25069, the sundry civil appropriation bill, but had come to no resolution thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. PETERS, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Robert Downing (H. R. 15220), Sixtieth, Sixty-first, and Sixty-second Congresses, no adverse report having been made thereon.

SALTON SEA (S. DOC. NO. 846).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of the Interior inclosing an appeal from the board of supervisors of Imperial County, Cal., for further appropriations of money and futher works for the protection of lands and property in the United States against the flood waters of the Colorado River.

In my message dated February 2, 1912, transmitting data of the work of the Interior Department, published as House Document No. 504, Sixty-second Congress, second session, there is contained a report of the engineer in charge of the work of protection done under the act of June 25, 1910, appropriating $1,000,000 for this purpose, and also a report of a special board convened by my direction to review this report and advise what further work should be done along the lower Colorado River for the protection of the interests of the United States. In this report of the special board, dated June 7, 1911, there will be found a recommendation that certain additional work should be at once executed, and an estimate of $1,000,000 as necessary for this work .

In my message I stated that I did not at that time make a definite recommendation, for the reason that the plan to be adopted for the betterment of conditions near the mouth of the Colorado River proves to be so dependent on a free and full agreement between the Government of Mexico and the Government of the United States as to joint expenditure and joint use that it is unwise to move until we can obtain some agreement with that Government which will enable us to submit to Congress a larger plan, better adapted to the exigencies presented than the one adopted. As stated in this message, the matter was being pressed upon the attention of the Mexican Government and favorable progress has been made in the negotiations. However, it is not probable that the negotiations with Mexico can be consummated before the adjournment of Congress, and it is therefore desirable to provide against a possible emergency which may arise after Congress has adjourned.

Since the report of the special board above referred to a part of the work proposed has been executed, and it is believed that the work will prove adequate for the protection of the lands in Imperial Valley against serious overflow during the present flood, which materially exceeds the average flood in volume, but as shown in the letter of the Secretary of the Interior the Colorado River, since the date of the report of the special advisory board, began and has continued to cave its banks, until the protecting levee on the Mexican side, about 7 miles below the intake of the Imperial Canal, is threatened, and apprehensions are aroused that the Colorado will again cut a deep channel into the Imperial Canal and flow again into Salton Sink, with disastrous results to American lives and property.

I request that the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior be followed and that an appropriation of $1,250,000 be made to meet any emergencies that may arise for the construction of levees and revetments along the Colorado River and for the protection of property in the United States from damage by the flood waters of that river, and to be expended, in whole or in part, for the purposes stated and under the direction of the President of the United States.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 14, 1912.

LEGALIZATION OF CERTAIN CONVEYANCES, UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD CO.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill H. R. 16689 be laid before the House. It is on the Speaker's desk.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 16689) legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Union Pacific Railroad Co., with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. As I understand it, the Senate amendments propose to strike out the entire House bill and insert a new one in its place. Has the gentleman carefully examined the Senate amendments?

Mr. NORRIS. I have.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to give any reason why the Senate took the action that it did?

Mr. NORRIS. Well, in regard to some of the provisions I can say to the gentleman that they were put in to satisfy some of the members of the Senate committee who were doubtful as to the constitutionality of the bill. My own judgment is that they have not improved it in that respect. I had no doubt about it before.

Mr. MANN. Is there any change from the House bill by the Senate amendment that affects the purpose of the House bill?

Mr. NORRIS. No, sir; none whatever.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that, after the bill passed the House, the Kansas question came in, so that that had to be covered.

Mr. MANN. I think that came up in the House.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but it was changed somewhat in the Senate. Now, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

Mr. FINLEY. I should like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska about how much land is involved here the titles to which will be quieted and settled by this proposed legislation?

Mr. NORRIS. There could be the possibility of conflicts of title involving a strip running along the Union Pacific Railroad through Nebraska and through Kansas, and from the Kansas and Nebraska lines to Denver, and from Denver to Cheyenne. I can not give the gentleman, and I do not think anyone else can, the exact number of acres involved, because it is not the same in all cases. This simply validates any conveyances that have been made of portions of the right of way by the railroad company, or validates the title to any other portions that have been held by the settlers adjoining the right of way, sufficiently long, and under the proper circumstances, to give them title by adverse possession.

Mr. FINLEY. Does this legislation cover anything more than the right of way and town lots adjacent?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Not at all.

Mr. NORRIS. It does not.

Mr. FINLEY. It does not cover the land grants generally?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no; it has no reference to them whatever. There was a dispute between the railroad company and the settlers, both in the country and in the towns, about a strip of land on each side. Recently the railroad company has been claiming a 400-foot right of way, and through the State of Nebraska, for instance, the settlers claimed it was only 200 feet. In parts of Colorado the settlers claimed that it was only 100 feet, and the same in Kansas.

Mr. FINLEY. This is one of the land-grant railroads?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; it is. All the land involved was originally granted to the railroad company by Congress.

Mr. FINLEY. The Senate amendment does cover more land and validates more titles than the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. No.

Mr. NORRIS. I think not, although there is a difference in the width. The House provided as to a portion of this right of way that it should not be less than 200 feet, and that in Colorado it should not be less than 100 feet. The Senate amendment changes that and leaves it the same in all the States.

Mr. FINLEY. I will say to the gentleman that I served in two or three Congresses on the Pacific Railroads Committee, and I obtained some little knowledge of land grants to the railroads, and their conveyances, and so forth. Of course, I personally know nothing of this question, and I understand the gentleman is unable to give the House any definite information as to how much land is covered or what titles are validated outside the right of way.

Mr. NORRIS. There is not anything outside of the right of way.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. It is all a part of the right of way.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, June 15, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 15, 1912.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. BACON took the chair as President pro tempore under the previous order of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate communications from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact and conclusions of law filed by the court in the following causes:

Eleanor L. and Henry C. Lovell, sole heirs of Henry C. Lovell, v. United States (Portsmouth (N. H.) Navy Yard) (S. Doc. No. 847);

Richard Allen v. United States (Washington Navy Yard) (S. Doc. No. 849); and

No. 23, Annie I. Fernald Crowell, widow (remarried) of Alonzo Fernald, deceased; No. 27, Margaret A. Norton, widow of Daniel C. Norton, deceased; No. 32, Emma S. Wherren, administratrix of James W. Wherren, deceased, v. United States (Portsmouth (N. H.) Navy Yard) (S. Doc. No. 848).

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit a conference report on House bill 17681, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, being a full agreement, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. FORT DAVIS AND FORT DU PONT PARKS, AND SO FORTH.

"The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to prepare a highway plan to change the location and width of Alabama Avenue SE., between Pennsylvania Avenue and Hillside Road, and to make such changes in the location of intersecting streets as may be necessary to provide proper connection with the new location of Alabama Avenue: Provided further, That under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to institute in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary to preserve the sites of Fort Davis and Fort Du Pont for park purposes, and to provide a connecting highway between these sites by widening Alabama Avenue to 150 feet, comprising in all approximately 41.25 acres of land, as shown on plans filed in the office of the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia. There is hereby appropriated an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of said condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages: Provided, however, That if the amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said proceedings as damages for and in respect of the land to be taken in the condemnation proceedings herein authorized plus the costs and expenses of the proceedings, not less than one-third and all in excess of $21,334 shall be assessed by the jury as benefits, which when collected shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the United States in equal parts.

"Hereafter, the United States shall not bear any part of the cost of the acquisition of land for street extensions, but when the condemnation of any land for such purpose is authorized by law the total cost of the land and the expenses of the condemnation proceedings shall be assessed as benefits; in any case where land is condemned for a parkway, including a street or streets, where such parkway is of considerable length with relation to its width, not less than one-half of the cost of the land including the same fraction of the expenses of the condemnation proceedings shall be assessed as benefits; and in any case where land is condemned for a public park, not less than one-third of the cost of the land including the same fraction of the expenses of the condemnation proceedings shall be assessed as benefits.

"The public parks authorized and established by this act shall become a part of the park system of the District of Columbia and be under the control of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 422, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment, restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended as follows: Renumber the section to read: "SEC. 8."; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 424, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 10. On and after July 1, 1912, fees collected by the District of Columbia shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in equal parts, as follows, namely: Fees of superintendent of weights, measures, and markets; fees of surveyor's office; health department fees; pound fees; fees for railing permits; fees for building permits; fees for electrical permits; bathing-beach fees; fees from public convenience stations; fees for tax certificates; fees of the municipal court; and fees collected by the building inspection division on account of permits, certificates, and transcripts of records issued by the inspector of buildings; and the surplus fees of the recorder of deeds and register of wills, together with the tuition of nonresident pupils in public schools, and the tax of one-half of 1 cent paid by any street or other railroad company for each passenger carried across the Highway Bridge; and the annual wheel tax on all automobiles or other motor vehicles."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 16689. An act legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Union Pacific Railroad Co.;

H. R. 18956. An act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 23557. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the secretary of state of New Mexico, transmitting a certified copy of house joint resolution No. 30, adopted by the legislature of that State, memorializing Congress to appropriate $6,000,000 for dikes and levees on the Rio Grande River, which, with the accompanying resolution, was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint resolution 30, memorializing Congress to appropriate $6,000,000 for dikes and levees on the Rio Grande.

Whereas the present flood in the Rio Grande, which has destroyed bridges, inundated cultivated fields, and caused great property loss, recalls the fact that such floods have been of almost annual occurrence in the past; and

Whereas the Government of the United States has never appropriated any moneys for the construction of dikes and levees upon the banks of said river: Therefore be it

Resolved by the legislature of the State of New Mexico, That the Congress of the United States is hereby memorialized to appropriate and set aside the sum of $6,000,000 to be expended as by law provided in the construction of dikes and levees upon the Rio Grande with a view to restraining its waters to its natural channel; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of New Mexico be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit authenticated copies of this memorial to the Vice President of the United States, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

E. C. DE BACA,
President of the Senate.
JOHN JOERNS,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
ROMAN L. BACA,
Speaker of the House.
FRANK STAPLIN,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Indorsed: Filed in office of secretary of state of New Mexico, June 7, 1912, 6 p. m.

ANTONIO LUCERO, Secretary of State.

CERTIFICATE OF COMPARISON.

STATE OF NEW MEXICO,
Office of the Secretary.

I, Antonio Lucero, secretary of state of the State of New Mexico, do hereby certify that there was filed for record in this office at 6 o'clock p. m., on the 7th day of June, A. D. 1912, house joint resolution No. 30, memorializing Congress to appropriate $6,000,000 for dikes and levees on the Rio Grande, and also that I have compared the following copy of the same with the original thereof now on file, and declare it to be a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of New Mexico, at the city of Santa Fe, the capital, on the 10th day of June, A. D. 1912.

[SEAL.] ANTONIO LUCERO, Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented petitions of the officers of Ridgefield Park Post, Daughters of Liberty, of New Jersey, praying for the adoption of the so-called illiteracy-test amendment to the immigration law, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the American Society of Tropical Medicine, favoring the creation of a national commission for the study and prevention of malaria, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

Mr. HITCHCOCK presented a petition of the congregation of the Emmanuel Baptist Church, of Mead, Nebr., praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of members of the Gage County Medical Society, of Nebraska, praying for the establishment of a department of public health, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GARDNER presented petitions of Bear Mountain Grange, No. 62, Patrons of Husbandry, of Harrison; of Barbers' Local Union No. 101, of Rumford; and of sundry citizens of Rockport and Canton, all in the State of Maine, praying for the establishment of a governmental system of postal express, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of sundry citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of legislation to maintain the present water rates in the District, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of the District of Columbia, remonstrating against the incorporation of the Virginia Terminal Co., which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21221) making a grant of lands for school purposes in block No. 31, town site of Powell, Shoshone reclamation project, Wyoming, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 888) thereon.

Mr. HITCHCOCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2953) to grant an honorable discharge to George P. Chandler, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 889) thereon.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4973) authorizing the President to appoint Rudolph Ullmer a first lieutenant on the retired list, submitted an adverse report (No. 890) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to which were referred certain bills granting pensions and increase of pensions, submitted a report (No. 891), accompanied by a bill (S. 7160) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which was read twice by its title, the bill being a substitute for the following Senate bills heretofore referred to that committee:

S. 449. Susannah Roberts.
S. 1531. John Hedge.
S. 1777. Albert Whitehead.
S. 2614. Henry Ackerman.

S. 6861. William L. Baird.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan, from the Committee on Territories, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 38) to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. GORE, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 106) creating a joint commission on public highways, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (S. 3132) granting a pension to Deborah B. Roman, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 895) thereon.

Mr. HEYBURN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20684) providing for the sale of the Lemhi School and Agency plant and lands on the former Lemhi Reservation, in the State of Idaho, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 896) thereon.

Mr. SMOOT. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 7030) to provide for a permanent supply of coal for the use of the United States Navy and other governmental purposes, to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 897) thereon.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, that is not a unanimous report.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not say that it is; I said that it is a report from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely want the RECORD to show that I made the statement; that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

UINTAH INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, the bill (S. 6934) to provide for an extension of time for payment of all unpaid payments due from homesteaders on the Uintah Indian Reservation, and I submit a report (No. 893) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for information before the request for unanimous consent is acted upon.

Mr. SMOOT. The committee amendment proposes a substitute for the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute will be read.

The SECRETARY. The committee report to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That any person who has heretofore made a homestead entry for land which was formerly a part of the Uintah Indian Reservation, in the State of Utah, authorized by the act approved May 27, 1902, and acts amendatory thereto, shall, upon application to the register and receiver of the land office in the district in which the land is located, and upon payment of 5 per cent of the price of said land, be allowed an extension of time of one year within which to submit proof on his entry and make payment therefor: Provided, That said 5 per cent shall be accepted as interest for said year and shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians as a part of the proceeds received for the lands: Provided further, That any entryman may, upon the same conditions, obtain a second extension, and no more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide an extension of time for submission of proof by homesteaders on the Uintah Indian Reservation."

Mr. SMOOT. I should like also to have the report of the committee accompanying the bill printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report this day submitted by Mr. SMOOT was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 893, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR PAYMENTS ON HOMESTEADS, UINTAH INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands, submitted the following report to accompany S. 6934:

The Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 6934) to provide for an extension of time for payment of all unpaid payments due from homesteaders on the Uintah Indian Reservation, having given the same careful consideration, beg leave to recommend that the following substitute be adopted in its stead:

"Be it enacted, etc., That any person who has heretofore made a homestead entry for land which was formerly a part of the Uintah Indian Reservation in the State of Utah, authorized by the act approved May 27, 1902, and acts amendatory thereto, shall, upon application to the register and receiver of the land office in the district in which the land is located, and upon payment of 5 per cent of the price of said land, be allowed an extension of time of one year within which to submit proof on his entry and make payment therefor: Provided, That said 5 per cent shall be accepted as interest for said year and shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians as a part of the proceeds received for the lands: Provided further, That any entryman may, upon the same conditions, obtain a second extension and no more."

The purpose of the bill is to relieve settlers on the former Uintah Indian Reservation from the necessity of paying for their homesteads at the present time. Conditions are such that it would be impossible for a large majority of the homesteaders to make the required payment this year, and consequently, unless some relief is accorded them, their homesteads will be forfeited to the Government. Since the opening of this reservation the settlers have had an exceedingly difficult time to eke out an existence, owing to a number of reasons. Before the land can be made productive at all water must be put upon it, and most of the settlers have expended practically all their means in doing this and in making other necessary improvements upon their homesteads. Senator SMOOT, who introduced the bill, presented a number of petitions signed by most of the settlers on the Uintah Indian Reservation, praying for the relief which this bill gives them. The bill will be a great boon to these settlers, and the committee recommends that it be passed.

The following report on the bill was submitted by the Secretary of the Interior:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, June 8, 1912.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your request for a report on S. 6934, "A bill to provide for an extension of time for payment of all unpaid payments due from homesteaders on the Uintah Indian Reservation."

The statutes under which the Uintah lands were opened (act of May 27, 1902, 32 Stat., 263; act of Mar. 3, 1903, 32 Stat., 998; act of Mar. 3, 1905, 33 Stat., 1069) do not provide for payment of installments; the homestead entrymen must, at time of submitting proof, pay $1.25 per acre, which is the entire price of the land. Consequently, the language of the bill referring to installments is not properly applicable.

These lands were opened to entry under the proclamation of July 14, 1905, and the first entries were made between August 28 and October 26, 1905. The seven-year period allowed by section 2291, Revised Statutes, for submission of proof on these entries, will therefore expire within the current year. The relief it may be desired to afford these homesteaders could be granted by simply extending the time allowed for submitting their proofs.

Information has been received regarding the very hard climatic conditions encountered by these people, and there appears to be no doubt that they are entitled to some relief. However, it is suggested, as in the report on the Coeur d'Alene bill (H. R. 18661, 62d Cong., act of Apr. 15, 1912, Public, No. 120), that it would not be wise to grant an extension of two years; the preferable course would be to allow an extension for one year, subject to a single renewal of a like period.

Moreover, since the present laws do not provide for interest on the price of these lands, it is thought that in justice to the Indians, to whom the money is ultimately payable, the entrymen securing extensions should be required to pay, in advance, interest on said price. This interest has, in the recent Coeur d'Alene act, been fixed at 5 per cent per annum.

Consonant with the above suggestions, the department respectfully recommends that the bill be amended before enactment in accordance with the draft herewith submitted.

Very respectfully,
SAMUEL ADAMS,
First Assistant Secretary.

JOSEPH B. FORBES.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, the bill (S. 421) to correct the military record of Joseph B. Forbes, and I submit a report (No. 892) thereon. It is a short bill, and I ask for its consideration.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is it intended to reinstate a deserter?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is a charge of desertion, and the committee have reported favorably on the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is it a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is. I do not know how many members of the committee were present when it was considered, but no one objected to a favorable report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. The committee report to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of the pension laws Joseph B. Forbes, who was a second lieutenant of Company H, Second Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said organization on the 10th day of November, 1862: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will inquire what Senator reported the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It was reported by myself as a member of the committee, though the soldier is not a constituent of mine, but a constituent of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Utah has looked into the matter, I suppose.

Mr. SMOOT. I have, and also every member of the committee. It follows the same mode that has been followed by the committee in many, many other cases.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suppose the soldier's record is not clear in the department.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. But if the committee has examined it I will not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Joseph B. Forbes."

PORTRAITS OF JUSTIN S. MORRILL AND JOHN TYLER MORGAN.

Mr. WETMORE. From the Committee on the Library I report a resolution, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 347) was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on the Library is hereby authorized to purchase two portraits, one of the late Senator Justin S. Morrill, of Vermont, and the other of the late Senator John Tyler Morgan, of Alabama, both painted by Carl Gutherz, at a cost not to exceed $1,000 each, the same to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. WETMORE. I ask that the report of the committee, No. 894, accompanying the resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report this day submitted by Mr. WETMORE was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 894, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

PORTRAITS OF SENATORS JUSTIN S. MORRILL AND JOHN TYLER MORGAN.

Mr. WETMORE, from the Committee on the Library, submitted the following report to accompany Senate resolution 347:

The Committee on the Library beg to report the following Senate resolution and recommend its passage:

"Resolved, That the Senate Committee on the Library is hereby authorized to purchase two portraits, one of the late Senator Justin S. Morrill, of Vermont, and the other of the late Senator John Tyler Morgan, of Alabama, both painted by Carl Gutherz, at a cost not to exceed $1,000 each, the same to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate."

In the history of the United States only four men have been elected to the Senate for six full terms—John Sherman, of Ohio; Justin S. Morrill, of Vermont; William B. Allison, of Iowa; and John T. Morgan, of Alabama.

In 1909 the Senate purchased a portrait of Senator Allison, and the opportunity is now presented of securing at a reasonable price the portraits of Senators Morrill and Morgan, painted by Carl Gutherz, an artist of high reputation.

Justin S. Morrill, of Vermont, was born April 14, 1810, and died December 28, 1898, aged 88 years 8 months and 14 days.

He entered Congress March 4, 1855, near the end of his forty-fifth year, and served in the House of Representatives 12 years—to March 3, 1867. His service in the Senate commenced March 4, 1867, and continued to the time of his death—31 years 9 months and 24 days.

Senator Morrill was elected to the Senate six times, and at the time of his death was the oldest Senator and had a longer period of service consecutively than any other Senator. Since the death of Senator Morrill his record of continuous service in the Senate has been surpassed by Senator Allison.

Senator Morrill had a longer continuous service in the Senate and House of Representatives than any other person since the organization of the Government.

Senator Morrill became chairman of the Committee on Finance in 1877, and retained that chairmanship until his death, with a hiatus of four years only—from 1879 to 1881, when Senator Bayard was chairman, and from 1893 to 1895, when Senator Voorhees was chairman.

He was the author of the Morrill Tariff Act of 1861, and had a conspicuous part in all the fiscal and tariff legislation during his nearly 44 years in Congress.

He formulated and secured the enactment of the land-grant agricultural college act of 1862, and its amendatory acts, resulting in the founding of colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts in all of the States.

John Tyler Morgan, of Alabama, was born June 20, 1824, and died June 11, 1907, at the age of 83 years, less 9 days.

Senator Morgan's term of service in the Senate began March 4, 1877, and was continuous for 30 years 3 months and 7 days. He was six times elected to the Senate, and died in the fourth month of his sixth term.

He became a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations December 5, 1878, and served on that committee to the time of his death, as its chairman from 1893 to 1895, and for 22 years as the ranking minority member.

Almost in the beginning of his service in the Senate Senator Morgan became the advocate of an interoceanic canal to connect the Atlantic and the Pacific, and he more than anyone else contributed to the accomplishment of this great enterprise.

Senator Morgan was appointed by President Harrison a member of the Bering Sea Arbitration Tribunal which met in Paris in 1893, and the portrait proposed to be purchased was painted in Paris during the sittings of the tribunal.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 7161) extending the time for the repayment of certain war-revenue taxes erroneously collected; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 7162) to amend section 801 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SMITH of Arizona:

A bill (S. 7163) authorizing the State of Arizona to select lands within the former Fort Grant Military Reservation and outside of the Crook National Forest in partial satisfaction of its grant for State, charitable, penal, and reformatory institutions; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. BROWN:

A bill (S. 7164) granting an increase of pension to William W. Lane; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland:

A bill (S. 7165) to authorize the elimination of part of North Dakota Avenue from the permanent system of highways plan; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. KERN:

A bill (S. 7166) granting an increase of pension to Job S. Sims (with accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 7167) granting an increase of pension to Rachel B. Purdy (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 7168) for the relief of Dudley Simms (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRIGGS:

A bill (S. 7169) to transfer Capt. Frank E. Evans from the retired to the active list of the Marine Corps; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 7170) granting a pension to Emma W. Lloyd; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TILLMAN:

A bill (S. 7171) for the relief of Dora D. Walker; to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARDNER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $43,880 for additional quarantine facilities at Portland, Me., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 25069), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—MICHAEL R. SHULTZ.

On motion of Mr. GUGGENHEIM, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill (S. 640, 62d Cong., 1st sess.) granting an increase of pension to Michael R. Shultz be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

EDWARD W. WHITAKER.

Mr. BRANDEGEE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 348), which was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with a full and detailed statement of the military history of Edward W. Whitaker, late lieutenant colonel First Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Cavalry, and brevet brigadier general United States Volunteers, such statement to show the promotions he received, the recommendations therefor, a list of the engagements in which he participated, the recommendations on which he was tendered an appointment as captain in the Seventh United States Cavalry, copy of his letter declining such appointment and of accompanying papers, if any; also copies of orders and other papers connected with his military history.

FLAG OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HEYBURN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 345), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether or not at any time or under any circumstances any flag, emblem, or banner is raised above the Stars and Stripes on any vessel, building, or ground under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department of the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 346), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether or not at any time or under any circumstances any flag, emblem, or banner is raised above the Stars and Stripes over any fort, encampment, building, or ground under the jurisdiction of the War Department of the United States.

STATISTICS OF CORPORATIONS.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I send to the desk a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 349) was read as follows:

Whereas the Senate requested certain information of the President regarding the profits and business of certain corporations for the year 1910 and 1911, as specified in Senate resolution 321; and

Whereas the President, in a message on June 11, indicated that the statistics relating to said corporations could not be furnished until the Senate indicated more specifically what corporations should be included: Therefore

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, advised as follows:

First, that the corporations engaged in the iron and steel industry, regarding which information is desired, are the 1,048 corporations embraced in the census report for 1910;

Second, that the corporations engaged in the woolen industry, concerning whose business and profits the Senate asks information, are the 1,050 corporations embraced in the report of the Census Office of 1910;

Third, that the corporations engaged in the cotton industry, concerning whose business and profits the Senate asks information, are the 1,328 corporations embraced in the report of the Census Office of 1910;

Fourth, that the corporations engaged in the sugar-refining business, except beet sugar, concerning whose business and profits the Senate asks information, are the 233 corporations embraced in the report of the Census Office of 1910;

Fifth, that the corporations engaged in the beet-sugar industry, concerning whose business and profits the Senate asks information, are the 58 corporations embraced in the report of the Census Office of 1910;

Sixth, that attention is also called to the fact that Bureau of Corporations has such information as will assist in the compilation of these statistics and the classification of corporations; and

Seventh, that the President is requested to have the Bureau of the Census and the Commissioner of Corporations cooperate in preparing the information requested in Senate resolution 321.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I did not hear the first paragraph or two of the resolution. The Senator has heretofore submitted a resolution asking for information, which was agreed to. Is the Senator now instructing the President what procedure he shall take to collate and transmit the information? Is that the purpose of the resolution?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The President replied to that resolution in a message on June 11 by stating that he was not in a position to furnish the information unless the Senate would indicate more specifically the corporations for which the statistics were desired.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is entirely satisfactory, if the President sent such a communication, but I was not aware of the fact.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

THE "TITANIC" DISASTER (S. DOC. NO. 850).

Mr. CURTIS. At the request of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM], I ask that the document which I send to the desk be printed as a public document in the type in which it is now printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent for the printing of the speech of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] on the Titanic disaster as a public document in the same type in which it is now printed. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object to this request because of the fact that there are Members of the Senate who are especially interested in having this particular document printed in this particular way, but I wish to say that I hope it will not be considered as a precedent for similar requests hereafter. This is the first time that such a request has been made. I recognize, however, that it is a case that perhaps never will happen again. Therefore I shall not interpose an objection.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Utah that while a case similar to the Titanic disaster may never again happen, I am not prepared to say that there will not be very many cases where it will happen that it would be better to have a speech of a Senator printed in different type from that usually employed. While the Senator from Utah says it may not become a precedent, I ask him why the same privilege should not be accorded any matter that is published as a public document? Why should it not be printed in the same type?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what appeals to me more than anything else is the fact that the brother of one of our Senators was lost in that frightful disaster, and he asks that this be done. So I do not feel like interposing an objection.

Mr. McCUMBER. With the Senator's explanation, I would not oppose the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, an order therefor will be entered.

THE CHEMICAL SCHEDULE—UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I find in the RECORD this morning that yesterday, during the temporary absence of some Senators from the floor and in the midst of a speech upon the chemical schedule (H. R. 20182) without any general knowledge to even the scant attendance of Senators, it was undertaken to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement as to the vote to be taken upon House bill 20182, and the RECORD recites that it was agreed, by unanimous consent—that on the 2d day of July, immediately after the termination of the routine morning business, the Senate resume the consideration of the unfinished business, and that a vote be taken upon the bill and all amendments thereto before the end of that legislative day.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. SIMMONS. The calendar day.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was coming to that. It appears also from the RECORD that the word "calendar" was substituted for "legislative" in describing the day. I regret very much that any such action was taken, because we have a unanimous-consent agreement that practically precludes any opportunity to any Senator to discuss any measure prior to the 1st day of July. The recesses provided for in the unanimous-consent agreement already entered into—and, I think, concurred in by the House—will render it impossible for any Senator to have opportunity for discussing the chemical schedule. I think it is very unfortunate, and it may possibly prove somewhat embarrassing in the future, if it is insisted that a unanimous-consent agreement can be entered into in the midst of a speech, when Senators had a right to expect that no such proceeding would be undertaken during a Senator's speech. I say that it is most unfortunate.

No Senator has a right to assume that any other Senator is as indifferent as to the necessity for discussing a measure as he is. Senators may feel indifferent in regard to the necessity or the propriety of discussing proposed legislation, but they have no right to assume that any other Senator is indifferent to the necessity or the duty of doing so.

Unanimous-consent agreements should only be proposed when there is a quorum of the Senate present and when there is a normal attendance of the Senate; and there should be a rule, if there is none, that would prevent the granting of unanimous consent to take a vote upon a measure in the midst of a speech being made upon that measure.

I do not feel that I am called upon to express myself as strongly as I feel in reprobation of such a practice. If there is any one act that is performed by the Senate that more than another demands perfect candor and a spirit of perfect fairness, it is the act of obtaining unanimous consent for the disposition of pending legislation; and just as soon as it becomes apparent that this parliamentary proceeding is to be used for the purpose of gaining an undue advantage, that will be the end of unanimous-consent agreements in this body.

I feel that any Senator who desires to discuss that measure has been unfairly treated. I am a member of the committee that reported the bill; I had already given notice that I intended to discuss it, and yet we are to be confined to the calendar day of July 2 to discuss one of the most important tariff schedules that has come before the Senate at any time, and all through taking advantage of a time when there were perhaps not to exceed six or seven Senators on the floor to obtain a record unanimous-consent agreement.

I realize the delicate position in which Senators are placed who object or who feel compelled to object, as I do this morning, to this action; but to those who do not know from actual observation the conditions under which this unanimous-consent agreement was obtained, any effort to change it would be charged by such persons as an attempt to avoid an agreement based upon the honor of Senators, so that it is readily to be seen that we have been placed in an embarrassing position. We have taken away the opportunity to debate this question up to a period only a few hours prior to the time fixed for its ultimate disposition. My mind questions the reasons that impel the change from the legislative to the calendar day.

Has any Senator the right to assume or to presume that Senators not present and Senators who are absent with the consent of the Senate have no interest in this legislation because they have not? They have given Senators a just cause of complaint. I will not be personal in this matter, but I want to try to impress upon the minds of Senators that they have posted a watchman, they have set a picket who will be on duty against a repetition of such injustice.

It could not have been done upon the assumption that when those who did it had spoken the end of reason had been attained, or that they stand recognized as holding the proxy for every other Senator to participate in legislation upon this subject.

Have I said enough to impress upon the minds of Senators my views in regard to this way of making an agreement that rests upon the honor of every Senator in the body? Have I said enough to impress my views that the usurpation of the right of another man to participate in an agreement resting upon the honor of that other man is not permitted or recognized among men?

The unanimous-consent proceeding in this body is one resting upon the principle of individual respect for the honor and conscience of each Senator. I give notice now that when the next tariff bill is before the Senate, which will be Calendar No. 675, House bill 21213, I shall object to the fixing of a time for a vote upon the bill by unanimous consent, and I will expect that fair treatment, not only for myself but for every other Senator, by those who shall then assume to be in what is sometimes called the control of the bill.

Under the rule there seems to be no way of avoiding the evil act of yesterday.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I thought the Senator from Idaho was through.

Mr. HEYBURN. With all due courtesy to the Senator, that occurs sometimes when Senators in their individual judgment think another Senator has talked as long as they think he ought to have talked, and they assume that he is through. It is a bad habit. I am through.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 750.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask the Senator from Minnesota if he will not withhold the request to permit me to make some observations with respect to the matter on which the Senator from Idaho addressed the Senate.

Mr. NELSON. Certainly; I withdraw the request.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the request for unanimous consent was made by me. It was made, as the Senator from Idaho suggests, during the speech of the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. I did not make the request until I had conferred with Senators on this side of the Chamber and with Senators on the other side of the Chamber. It had been represented to me that no Senator on this side of the Chamber, except the junior Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from Maine desired to speak upon the bill. The Senator from North Carolina advised me that his speech would probably not occupy more than 10 minutes. I was not aware of the fact that the Senator from Idaho had given any notice that he desired to discuss the bill. No notice to that effect appears upon the calendar, and I was out of the Chamber when the Senator stated his purpose to discuss this schedule. I was advised that there would probably be no speech made on the other side of the Chamber on the bill except one. Under these conditions it was thought, after conference, that we could easily reach a vote and allow every Senator who desired to speak an opportunity to speak on the second day after we reassemble.

My request, Mr. President, was for unanimous consent that we take a vote upon this bill during the legislative day of July 2. A suggestion was made from the other side of the Chamber that I change the request from the legislative to the calendar day, and I made that change in compliance with that suggestion from the other side of the Chamber.

I am sure I have no desire to interfere with the freedom of debate upon this question, and if I had supposed that more time was necessary in order that Senators who desire to speak might have an opportunity to do so, I certainly would not have felt like limiting the time to one day, and I suggest to the Senator from Idaho that we meet again on the 1st day of July, and I shall be very glad to ask that the bill be laid before the Senate on the first day. I do not think there is anything in the way. If there is, it can easily be gotten out of the way, because this has the right of way, so that we may have not one, but two days for its discussion. I am quite sure that during two days every Senator will have full opportunity to speak.

I want to assure the Senator from Idaho, for myself, that I had no purpose to take any snap judgment in the matter. We conferred about it. The Senator did not happen to be in the Chamber. If he had been, he probably would have been spoken to about it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] has already given notice that on Monday, July 1, he will ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. That will not interfere with the unfinished business.

Mr. HEYBURN. The naval appropriation bill or any other appropriation bill has certain rights of way.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator is mistaken——

Mr. HEYBURN. I am reading from the calendar.

Mr. SIMMONS. As to the bill having the right of way against the unfinished business. It would have the right of way, probably, against other matters, but this bill is the unfinished business of the Senate, and at 2 o'clock it would be the regular order.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I think we might relieve the situation somewhat by keeping in mind the fact that we can meet at an earlier hour on that day. We could meet at 10 o'clock, if need be, or 11 o'clock at any rate, and thus gain an additional hour. That would enable the Senator from Idaho to occupy such time as he may wish.

Mr. SIMMONS. I certainly have no objection to meeting at an earlier hour on both the 1st and 2d of July, so as to give ample opportunity for discussion. I must confess that I did not know the Senator desired to speak. I had been advised repeatedly that there would be only one speech on the other side of the Chamber, and that it would not occupy more than two hours.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I can understand that the Senator might have received that impression, because, when the metal schedule had been reported and the question was being discussed as to when a vote might be had upon it, it was stated that only two Senators—naming them—would speak on the bill. Of course, that was an irresponsible statement, but it was probably based upon just such an assumption. To be perfectly candid, so far as I am concerned, I intend that the habit which seems to be growing up in this body of certain Members arrogating to themselves an assumed leadership and dictatorship without consulting with all other Senators shall be broken up.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator——

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not including the Senator from North Carolina in that.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wanted to say to the Senator——

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator from North Carolina, representing this measure upon the floor, of course is justified in seeking to get it to a vote. What I object to is an attempted assumption of power which in this accidental case was realized. I desire to see that all Senators in this body stand one the peer of the other. This thing of looking at the almanac to see how long some one has been here, looking at the Congressional Directory to see in what class of service a Senator is, is a piece of impudence; it is unworthy of a Senator. I do not believe that Senators, like some other things, ripen with age, always. Sometimes they do, but not always.

Now, Mr. President, I acquit the Senator from North Carolina of intentionally having sought to shut out any Member from discussing this bill, but it was the result of the action. No request for unanimous consent should be made except when a quorum of the Senate is present. The mere accident that a Senator takes advantage of an opportunity to go to lunch, or that many do, should not be taken advantage of either to call up a measure or to agree by unanimous consent during his absence, because it might get through then and would not at another time.

I say all this in good temper, but I say it within my rights, and I say it with the hope that it may find others in this body who approve of it. I regard the action of yesterday as one that will undermine the orderly procedure of this body and the possibility of getting unanimous consent for anything.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I was in the Senate Chamber when the unanimous-consent agreement was made, and I wish to assure the Senator from Idaho that if it had not been for a conference held with him I never would have agreed in his absence to a request fixing a time for a vote.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will permit me, I am a member of the Committee on Finance. I sat with the Senator in the meetings of that committee, and there is no member of that committee who was not advised of my position in regard to every one of these tariff schedules.

Mr. SMOOT. I will remind the Senator of the conference I refer to.

On Thursday, the Senator will remember, the question arose as to whether we could get a vote upon the bill to-day, and as I understood him at that time he was perfectly willing that a vote should be taken upon it to-day.

Mr. HEYBURN. I expressed my dissent in unqualified terms. I said—and I am going to be perfectly candid now, and I hope the Senator will not consider it a breach of confidence—I said whenever we had votes enough to beat the bill, without discussing it, I was willing to have a vote, but I wanted something more than the conjecture of somebody upon which to base it, because, so far as I am concerned, I am opposed to this measure and I am ready to vote upon it whenever a vote will beat it, and I am ready to discuss it until there are votes enough to beat it.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator from New Hampshire heard what was said at the time we were discussing it, and I take it for granted——

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator will take my word for what I say, regardless of what he takes for granted. He need not refer to the Senator from New Hampshire or anyone else.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to say, if the Senator will allow me, that it was my fault, not his, if I misunderstood his position on this particular bill. I do not want to shirk any responsibility, if there is any personal responsibility, for securing a unanimous-consent agreement. It was furthest from my mind to agree to anything that would prevent any Senator from saying just what he wanted to upon this bill. I knew that it could be discussed on July 1. I had it in my mind, and so stated to the Senator from North Carolina, that we could meet early upon July 2, if necessary, and could remain in session till 12 o'clock midnight. That was before the Senator from North Carolina made his request for a vote on that legislative day.

I suppose that is why the Senator from Massachusetts and myself suggested that it be the calendar day.

I want the Senator from Idaho to understand that in his absence, and I recognize that he is a member of the Finance Committee, I would not have agreed to a specific time to vote if I had thought for one minute that he would have interposed an objection to it. I will say that I do not want to take a minute's time of the Senate to discuss the bill if there is not time for all Senators who want to speak on the 1st or 2d of July, and as far as I am concerned it would suit me if the Senator from Idaho would start the discussion on the bill, and if he could not get through on the first day that he should take all the time on the second day.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I sincerely hope that many others will discuss this bill than myself. I am not promising that I will occupy any given time or at any time speak upon the bill. A Senator is not compelled a week ahead to say whether he will speak upon a measure or how long he will speak. You have foreclosed not only the senior Senator from Idaho, but you have foreclosed three-fourths of this body who were absent.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that would be true if all the three-fourths desired to speak.

Mr. HEYBURN. They have the right to speak.

Mr. SMOOT. They have the right to speak, but a great many of them have told me they did not intend to speak on the measure. I simply wanted to say, and I say it now to the Senator from Idaho, that, so far as I am concerned, I shall claim no time in the two days in which the bill can be discussed to speak unless there is a chance to do so without limiting the time desired by the Senator. I do not want to interfere with the right of any Senator to have all the time to speak that he desires, not only upon this measure, but every other measure. I can assure the Senator that there was no intention on anyone's part to foreclose him or any Senator from saying what he wishes to upon this particular measure.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18712) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain

ANTI-INJUNCTION BILL.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar, under Rule VIII.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask the indulgence of the Senator to state that morning business has not yet been closed.

Mr. NELSON. I supposed it was closed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a matter which it is the duty of the Chair to bring to the attention of the Senate. The Chair finds upon the desk a resolution which came over from a former day, which should have been laid before the Senate day before yesterday. The present occupant of the chair did not occupy it the day preceding and had not information of the fact that the resolution was on the table. The Chair thinks it is entitled to its day in court, and it will now be laid before the Senate. It is the resolution offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE], and the Chair will lay it before the Senate for such disposition as the Senate sees proper to make of it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I will say that I presented the resolution seriously and in good faith, and I desire a vote on it. But I am assured by Senators on the other side that in the event of pressing the resolution at this time the question of a quorum will be raised, and therefore I would be practically legislated out and would interfere thereby with the progress of business at this stage. In deference to that thought, I will consent that it may remain on the table, with the assurance to the Senate that I shall bring it up later in the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, that direction will be given to the resolution offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. NELSON. I renew my request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected cases on the calendar under Rule VIII. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2493) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make an examination of certain claims of the State of Missouri was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SIMMONS. If it is not out of order, I should like to ask unanimous consent to call up a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would state that the unanimous consent just entered into under Rule VIII would require that each case be considered in its order, and only unobjected cases will be considered under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Chair holds it would not be in order to ask unanimous consent to consider a bill out of its order on the calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it had been taken up on motion, undoubtedly it could be considered, but the unanimous consent would preclude any other action by the Senate except that expressed in the terms of the unanimous-consent agreement. The Secretary will proceed with the calendar.

The bill (S. 1505) for the relief of certain officers on the retired list of the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that that may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 2151) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to use at his discretion surplus moneys in the Treasury in the purchase or redemption of the outstanding interest-bearing obligations of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that that may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 256) affecting the sale and disposal of public or Indian lands in town sites, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

The bill (S. 3) to cooperate with the States in encouraging instruction in agriculture, the trades, and industries and home economics in secondary schools; in maintaining instruction in these vocational subjects in State normal schools; in maintaining extension departments in State colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure was announced as next in order.

Mr. PAGE. I feel like being considerate with all Members of the Senate and I do not wish to press Senate bill No. 3, now in order, but I should like at some time during the afternoon, if possible, to have it read and have it progress so far. With the understanding that later on I may take it up, after other important matters have been considered, I will make no objection to its going over.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if the bill was not read some days ago?

Mr. PAGE. It never has been read.

Mr. GALLINGER. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. LODGE. Let it go over now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the Senate is proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. PAGE. I merely wanted to make the statement; that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5076) to promote instruction in forestry in States and Territories which contain national forests was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 2234) to provide for a primary nominating election in the District of Columbia, at which the qualified electors of the said District shall have the opportunity to vote for their first and second choice among those aspiring to be candidates of their respective political parties for President and Vice President of the United States, to elect their party delegates to their national conventions, and to elect their national committeemen, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that that may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 2051) to promote the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will go over.

The bill (S. 5728) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in claims of the Osage Nation of Indians against the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The resolution (S. Res. 242) directing the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to inquire into and report to the Senate whether post-office inspectors are being sent through the country to influence postmasters to aid in the election of delegates for or against any candidate for the Presidency, etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (H. R. 16571) to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the north Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington July 7, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 4204) to provide for the final settlement with the Tillamook Tribe of Indians of Oregon for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain agreement between said parties dated August 7, 1851, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that this bill may go over, and that all these Indian bills shall go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over. It will be necessary to indicate each one as we reach it.

The bill (S. 4205) to provide for the final settlement with the Clatsop Tribe of Indians of Oregon for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain agreement between said parties dated August 5, 1851, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4533) to provide for a final settlement with the Kathlamet Band of Chinook Indians of Oregon for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain unratified treaty between said parties dated August 9, 1851, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4534) to provide for a final settlement with the Wheelappa Band of Chinook Indians, of Washington, for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain unratified treaty between said parties, dated August 9, 1851, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4535) to provide for a final settlement with the Lower Band of Chinook Indians, of Washington, for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain unratified treaty between said parties, dated August 9, 1851, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4536) to provide for a final settlement with the Waukimum Band of Chinook Indians, of Washington, for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain unratified treaty between said parties, dated August 8, 1851, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4537) to provide for a final settlement with the Nuc-quee-clah-we-muck Tribe of Indians, of Oregon, for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain unratified treaty between said parties, dated August 7, 1851, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 3316) to repeal an act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (H. R. 11628) authorizing John T. McCrosson and associates to construct an irrigation ditch on the island of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 284) for the relief of Andrew H. Russell and William R. Livermore was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 4840) to carry into effect the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the contractors for building the U. S. battleship Indiana was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not think that would be quite fair, because this bill is to be considered in connection with the omnibus claims bill, and I assured the Senator from Pennsylvania, who is interested, that it would remain until some time when he is present.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then let it go over under Rule IX and be taken off this calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be transferred to the calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have it remain on the calendar under Rule VIII, because the omnibus claims bill is liable to come up at any time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think that is true.

Mr. SMOOT. The omnibus claims bill is under Rule VIII, and this bill should also be under Rule VIII.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4159) for the relief of F. M. Lyman, jr., was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 4230) for the relief of Robert F. Scott was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 364) for the relief of Ranney Y. Lyman was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 111) to authorize the sale and disposition of the surplus and unallotted lands in Washabaugh County, in the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. LODGE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4780) for the erection of a memorial amphitheater at Arlington Cemetery was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 5294) to establish in the Bureau of Statistics, in the Department of Agriculture, a division of markets was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 5186) to incorporate the Brotherhood of North American Indians was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 461) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in claims of the Ponca Tribe of Indians against the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 5917) relating to procedure in United States courts was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill has been read as in Committee of the Whole and certain amendments have been agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let it be read for information.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill go over. I think the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] wants to discuss it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

THOMAS MARCUS MOLLOY AND JOSEPH HENRY CROZIER.

The bill (S. 5956) to restore in part the rank of Lieuts. Thomas Marcus Molloy and Joseph Henry Crozier, United States Revenue-Cutter Service, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to restore in part the rank of Lieuts. Thomas Marcus Molloy and Joseph Henry Crozier, United States Revenue-Cutter Service, by placing their names in the order in which they are set forth herein on the official register of the service next after the name of First Lieut. William Henry Munter. But nothing in this act shall be construed to increase the number of officers allowed by law in the Revenue-Cutter Service, nor shall the officers whose rank is restored in part by this act be entitled to any back pay or emoluments on account thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETTY OFFICERS, ETC., OF NAVY AND MARINE CORPS.

The bill (S. 2605) to provide that petty officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service shall receive the rank or rating and the pay of the next higher enlisted grade was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to ask the Senator from North Carolina if he will not be willing to allow the bill to be considered. It has been read and amended. It is simply to give a very small number of survivors of the Civil War in the Navy and Marine Corps rank and rating to the next higher grade. It has been granted in the Army and it has been granted to the commissioned officers. These are noncommissioned officers and enlisted men of the Navy. There are very few remaining.

Mr. OVERMAN. About how many are there?

Mr. LODGE. I think it is stated in the report. I will look at the report. There are very few. It seems to me not unreasonable for them to receive it.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator, as I understand, says it has been done in the Army.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. If it has been, I raise no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. This bill is aimed merely to give these men what all other officers of the Army and Navy receive because of Civil War service. About 115 enlisted men in the Navy and Marine Corps now on the retired list would be affected by it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina withdraws his objection, and the Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill (S. 2605) to provide that petty officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service shall receive the rank or rating and the pay of the next higher enlisted grade.

Mr. LODGE. The bill has been heretofore read and amended, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that there are no amendments.

Mr. LODGE. I know the bill has been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it is not desired that the bill shall be reread, it will not be. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 117) granting an increase of pension to Annie G. Hawkins was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. In the absence of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], who reported that bill, I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 118) granting an increase of pension to Harriet Pierson Porter was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I also ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

ENTRIES ON ALASKAN COAL LANDS.

The bill (S. 5860) to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands in Alaska was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the bill has been heretofore read.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill has been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the rereading is not desired, as the title has just been read, the Chair will not direct that the bill be again read.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think I shall have to ask that the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I only asked for the rereading of the bill in order to be certain as to a part of it that was being passed over so rapidly that I did not have time to examine it. I now move to strike out the word "public," in lines 3 and 4, on page 1. Of course, if they are reserved lands, they are not public lands under the statute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, in line 3, after the word "unreserved," it is proposed to strike out the word "public."

Mr. HEYBURN. The very class of lands there described are held not to be public lands.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the section be read as it is proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. If amended as proposed, the section will read:

That from and after the passage of this act unreserved lands of the United States in Alaska which have been withdrawn or classified as coal lands, or are valuable for coal, shall be subject to appropriate entry under the homestead laws by actual settlers only, and all applications to make entry under the homestead laws upon such lands shall state that the same are made in accordance with and subject to the provisions and reservations of this act.

Mr. SMOOT. If they were reserved lands, I would have no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. Of course, I should like to see the words "reserved" and "unreserved" in the proposed amendment, because it has been held and sustained that lands withdrawn from settlement are not public lands and not included within the designation of public lands in the statute. Of course, this ought to read "reserved and unreserved," but I shall not enter into that contest to-day. I will only deal with the one word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho will, without objection, be agreed to. Does the Senator from Idaho desire the further reading of the bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I do not insist upon it.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5719) to increase the efficiency of the Medical Department of the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that this bill was read in full on the 11th of May.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire what the bill proposes to do, if any member of the committee from which it was reported is present?

Mr. LODGE. It proposes to establish a medical reserve.

Mr. PERKINS. The report will show, I think, Mr. President, the object of the bill, and I should like to have the report read.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let us hear the report.

Mr. LODGE. It does not propose to increase expenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

Mr. BRISTOW. I remember the bill now, and I have no objection to it. I do not ask that it go over.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have objected to its consideration.

The bill (S. 1) to establish a department of health, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 5169) authorizing the Ponca Tribe of Indians to intervene in the suit of the Omaha Indians in the Court of Claims, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 20182) to amend an act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes, approved August 5, 1909, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 99) authorizing the President to reassemble the court-martial which on August 16, 1911, tried Ralph I. Sasse, Ellicott H. Freeland, Tattnall D. Simpkins, and James D. Christian, cadets of the Corps of Cadets of the United States Military Academy, and sentenced them, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution goes over.

REWARDS FOR IMPROVEMENTS IN MANUFACTURING PROCESSES, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 17937) authorizing the Secretary of War to pay a cash reward for suggestions submitted by employees of certain establishments of the Ordnance Department for improvement or economy in manufacturing processes or plant, was announced as next in order.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

Mr. BRISTOW. I hope the Senator from Idaho will not object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Probably a minute's consideration might obviate my objection, but there arose in my mind from the reading of the clause that a gross appropriation of a thousand dollars a year might all go to one person. There is no limitation as to the amount that may be given as a reward for these suggestions, or "series of suggestions," or whatever they may be. There should be a little more careful provision in regard to that point. Then this exemption of the United States in the last clause is, of course, quite far-reaching. This might go to an extent that would be the basis of a change in the whole system of the ordnance of the United States.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think I can explain the bill to the Senator. The purpose is to encourage employees of the Government to suggest improvements and economies in operation, manufacturing processes, and so forth, and to provide rewards therefor the same as is done by the great corporations. The exemption of which the Senator speaks is simply this: If an employee makes a suggestion which results in economy and saving, he is given a reward; and he can not make a future claim on the Government for additional compensation for the use of his suggestion.

Mr. HEYBURN. Can he patent it?

Mr. BRISTOW. Oh, no.

Mr. HEYBURN. Can he patent it for sale to the general public outside of the Government?

Mr. BRISTOW. That, of course, is not covered; that would be between him and the public; but he can not receive from the Government anything additional, because he voluntarily gives this suggestion to the Government, and if, in the judgment of the Secretary of War and the board which examines it, it proves to be useful, he is given a reward for his industry, his thoughtfulness, and his ingenuity.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think that is all right and I am thoroughly in sympathy with it, but the question is whether or not, after he has received a reward, he may still patent the invention and compel the general public to pay for the use of it?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him in this connection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. When a man has allowed the Government, voluntarily, to use a suggestion or invention of his, he has made it public, and he can not afterwards secure a patent on it.

Mr. HEYBURN. But he might at the same time, or immediately prior thereto, file his caveat in the matter and thus secure himself. I was prompted to object to the consideration of the bill, because I thought it involved a number of points that ought to be considered. I am in sympathy with the spirit of the legislation; I only would like to see that we do not pass it so hastily as not to secure efficient and good legislation.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Committee on Military Affairs went into the subject very thoroughly, conferred with the War Department about it, and they think that it will result in an increased efficiency and encouragement to employees, and that the public, as well as the Government, is amply protected.

Mr. HEYBURN. It will accomplish that, but the question is whether it affects the rights of the general public outside of the Government? Of course, when you cover inventions affecting machinery and methods of employing machinery, probably the largest users of those things are individuals and firms outside of the Government. We have in our great machine shops to-day a number of articles similar in use and construction to those used by the Government which are the basis of vast manufacturing enterprises.

I know the Senator from Kansas would not desire to pass an imperfect piece of legislation merely to get it through to-day.

Mr. BRISTOW. Oh, no; it has been on the calendar for a long time.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the reason my mind was directed to it, because it has been so long on the calendar.

Mr. BRISTOW. It went over once before on the objection of the Senator from Idaho, and I had hoped that in the meantime he had probably considered the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have, and what I say is the result of the consideration I have given it since that time.

Mr. BRISTOW. Of course, no one has any interest in it except the interest of the general public in promoting efficiency on the part of Government employees.

Mr. HEYBURN. I see it comes here as a House bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. That makes it all the more important to give it consideration. There being, of course, no matters to go into conference, it makes it very important that we give the measure careful consideration, otherwise it just steps right from here onto the table of laws.

Mr. LODGE. The Government is protected, as I understand.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; but how about the public?

Mr. LODGE. The public is protected, of course, because by giving the suggestion to the Government the patent is made public.

Mr. HEYBURN. Not if the inventor had filed a caveat the day before it was given to the Government.

Mr. LODGE. I think that is pretty remote. An employee of the Government can not sell a patent to the Government.

Mr. HEYBURN. He does not have to sell it to the Government, but he may sell it to the public.

Mr. LODGE. He has a right to do that; if he is outside he can do that.

Mr. GALLINGER. To cover that suggestion, I feel sure the Senator from Kansas would have no objection to adding after the word "assigns," the words "and that application for patent has not been made on the invention."

Mr. HEYBURN. The amendment removes my objection.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is satisfactory.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "assigns," in line 16, it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "and that application for patent has not been made on the invention."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 6497) to protect migratory game and insectivorous birds in the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3463) to establish a bureau of national parks, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The OVERMAN. Let that bill go over also.

ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

The bill (S. 6551) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead" was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I see that this bill and the next number but one on the calendar are bills to amend the same act—the act to provide for an enlarged homestead. I do not profess to understand either of the bills.

Mr. NELSON. I will explain the bill to the Senator. Some years ago we passed a law providing for 320-acre homesteads in the semiarid States, where they could not irrigate the land and had to resort to dry farming. That law originally was applied to Montana. The purpose of this bill is to extend that law to the State of Colorado; that is all. One peculiarity about these homesteads is that they can not be commuted. The people taking them up have to comply with the homestead law.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection. Is the subsequent bill, No. 628 on the calendar, the same kind of a bill?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; it is of the same nature.

Mr. LODGE. Very well. I have no objection.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, line 8, to strike out the words "in the same land-office district as" and insert "within 6 miles of."

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I wish the Senator in charge of the bill were present. It presents this problem: A man may have part of his tract entered in one land office and part of it in another, and they may be 300 miles apart. I can call up in my mind instances of that kind. I regret that the Senator from Colorado is not here.

Mr. NELSON. The amendment removes that objection. It limits it to within 6 miles of the original homestead.

Mr. HEYBURN. Suppose the first homestead is within a mile or half a mile of the line between the land districts, then the man will enter part of it in one land district and part of it in another.

Mr. NELSON. This takes the place of that, as I understand.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is very unfortunate. I am not going to block the passage of these bills. They were considered in the committee of which I am a member. But I think it no more than fair, on the floor, that Senators should have the benefit of the suggestions that were made in the committee. It is a very awkward provision. In the first place it permits a man to obtain a homestead without living on it. Then it permits him to have one homestead in one land district and another homestead in another land district.

Mr. NELSON. But he has to live five years on either the original homestead or the additional land.

Mr. HEYBURN. Of course, that is applicable to all.

Mr. NELSON. He can not commute.

Mr. HEYBURN. No.

I have said about all I want to say, I think, in regard to this law, which in my judgment was a very bad one, and is being made the subject of a good bit of graft right now. I introduced a resolution, which was passed by the Senate, calling upon the Secretary of the Interior for a statement as to the number and area of additional homesteads. Senators have copies of it in their desks or at their disposal. They will be astonished at the result of this enlarged homestead legislation. I want people in the country, and I do not want one man to have it all.

However, I expressed myself fully on that subject on a former occasion, and I merely call attention to the matter at this time. I will not raise any objection to the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLLECTION OF TAXES.

The bill (S. 2371) to amend section 3224 of the United States Compiled Statutes so as to prevent the restraining of the assessment or collection of any tax—State, county, municipal, district, or Federal—was announced as next in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let the bill go over.

Mr. BROWN. I trust the Senator will not insist on that course.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I know there is at least one Senator who wants to be here when the bill is considered. I think, myself, there ought to be an amendment suggested to it. I have not formulated in my own mind just what it should be. I do not make any objection to the bill itself.

Mr. BROWN. I very much regret it has to go over again. It went over on a former occasion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over, under objection.

ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

The bill (S. 6383) to amend an act approved February 19, 1909, entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in the enlarged-homestead bill the provisions of this bill were included. Therefore it is not necessary to enact this bill into law. The Senator reporting the bill is not here, however, and I shall therefore ask that it go over under Rule IX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks that the bill be transferred to the calendar under Rule IX. Without objection, it is so ordered.

WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The bill (S. 5455) to establish a system of wireless telegraphy in the Philippine Islands was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the amount proposed to be appropriated?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill go over, Mr. President.

Mr. McLEAN. I should like to inquire whether the Senator from North Carolina asks for a postponement because of the absence of some Senator interested in the bill or because he is personally opposed to it?

Mr. OVERMAN. I am opposed to the Government spending any more money in the Philippines. The Philippine government have plenty of money of their own. They have $14,000,000 a year. Let them erect their wireless apparatus themselves. That is my idea. Instead of the Government spending $150,000 on its insular possessions, as long as they are now on their feet, let them erect the apparatus themselves. I object to the bill.

Mr. McLEAN. As I understand, when there is objection made to a bill by a Senator, it is not in order to move its consideration notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not, under the unanimous-consent agreement.

HEIRS OF JOHN W. WEST, DECEASED.

The bill (S. 1231) for the relief of the heirs of John W. West, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to the consideration of the bill at this time. I want to know more about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

RETIRED OFFICERS OF THE NAVY AND MARINE CORPS.

The bill (S. 5955) for the relief of certain retired officers of the Navy and Marine Corps was announced as next in order.

Mr. GORE. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

PHARMACISTS IN THE NAVY.

The bill (S. 2795) to promote pharmacists to the grade of chief pharmacist in the Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. PERKINS. The bill should be passed over temporarily, for the reason that its substance is included in the naval appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

TESTAMENTARY DISPOSITION OF INDIAN ALLOTMENTS.

The bill (H. R. 1332) regulating Indian allotments disposed of by will was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

COAL MINING IN OKLAHOMA.

The bill (S. 3843) granting to the coal-mining companies in the State of Oklahoma the right to acquire additional acreage adjoining their mine leases, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. LODGE. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

WILLIAM E. FARRELL.

The bill (S. 4331) for the relief of William E. Farrell was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize the President to appoint William E. Farrell, late midshipman, an ensign in the United States Navy, and to place him upon the retired list as such with three-fourths of the pay of his grade.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will not object to the bill, but I should like to know if there is any reason for providing for this officer in this manner.

Mr. PERKINS. I think the letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy will explain that. It is printed in the report.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it recommended by the Acting Secretary?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. OVERMAN subsequently said: Mr. President, I think the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], upon looking at the report, will see that the Acting Secretary of the Navy does not approve the bill. I think he has another bill in mind.

Mr. SMOOT. This is what the Acting Secretary of the Navy says:

There is no provision of law which covers the conditions existing in the case under consideration, and while the department realizes the fact that the disease was contracted in line of duty, yet it feels constrained not to give its approval to special measures, particularly in view of the fact that the object sought is to place upon the retired list of the Navy one who is not now connected with the service.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think we had better reconsider that bill, Mr. President.

Mr. LODGE. I supposed it had been approved by the Acting Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. SMOOT. As a matter of fact, just the reverse is the case. He disapproves it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I move that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered, and then that it go over.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Now let it go over, Mr. President.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that it be placed under Rule IX.

Mr. PERKINS. I have no objection, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, without objection.

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

The bill (S. 5863) for the retirement of employees in the civil service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

The bill (S. 5806) to correct the naval record of Franklin Pierce was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. There is an adverse report from the committee, and the bill ought to be indefinitely postponed. I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS OF LADING.

The bill (S. 957) relating to bills of lading was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SANTA BARBARA, CAL.

The bill (S. 6330) increasing the cost of erecting a public building at Santa Barbara, Cal., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to increase to $120,000 the limit of cost heretofore fixed for the erection of a public building at Santa Barbara, Cal.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OCONTO, WIS.

The bill (S. 5354) to acquire a site and for the erection thereon of a public building at Oconto, Wis., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

LIENS OF JUDGMENTS AND DECREES.

The bill (H. R. 18017) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States" was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to insert:

This act shall take effect on and after January 1, 1913.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Let the bill go over with the amendment pending. I object to its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

Mr. THORNTON. I think if the Senator from Arkansas will observe the bill he will see that it is purely a local matter.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The Senator is evidently mistaken as to the particular matter that is before the Senate. The measure to the consideration of which I object is House bill 18017, to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States."

Mr. THORNTON. I call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to the fact that the bill has only a local effect with reference to the recording of judgments of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The title of the bill as given on the calendar indicated its scope, and as we are not considering matters likely to provoke debate I thought the shortest way out of it was to object to its consideration. If the Senator from Louisiana gives assurance that it is a local matter exclusively, although the title indicates otherwise, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. THORNTON. That is my understanding.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Unless the Senator is entirely certain about it, I would not like to repeal an existing law on the subject of liens of judgments and decrees in the Federal courts. It had better go over and I will look into it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 14925) to amend "An act to parole United States prisoners, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill go over. It is a very important and serious bill. It ought to be under Rule IX. I want to be heard when the bill is taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 93) to establish a botanical laboratory at Denver, Colo., was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

WIDENING AND EXTENSION OF SPRING ROAD.

The bill (S. 5333) to authorize the widening and extension of Spring Road NW., and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 2, after the word "avoid," to insert "substantial," so as to read: "That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to prepare a new highway plan for Spring Road, between New Hampshire Avenue and Twentieth Street NW., so as to avoid substantial improvements lying in said road as now proposed," etc.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 15, after the word "road," to insert:

Provided further, That in the new highway plan the north line of Spring Road at New Hampshire Avenue shall conform approximately to the present north line of Rock Creek Church Road at that point, and that Spring Road, as laid down in the existing highway plan between Sixteenth Street and Spring Place, shall be abandoned between these points.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 11, after the word "herein." to insert "for the widening of Spring Place between Fourteenth Street and Sixteenth Street to a width of 90 feet."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. In section 2, page 3, line 3, before the words "to condemn," I move to strike out the words "proceeding in rem" and to insert "proper proceeding."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, page 3, line 3, before the words "to condemn," it is proposed to strike out the words "proceeding in rem" and to insert "proper proceeding."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2451) providing against the abandonment of destitute, infirm, or aged parents was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the bill go over.

GAS MAIN ALONG CONDUIT ROAD.

The bill (S. 6672) to authorize the president and directors of the Georgetown Gas Light Co. to lay a gas main in and along the Conduit Road from a point beginning at the existing gas main in the Foxhall and the Conduit Roads, to the District line, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "empowered," to insert "subject to and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted etc., That the president and directors of the Georgetown Gas Light Co. be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered, subject to and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, to lay a gas main for the purpose of conducting gas in and along the Conduit Road from a point beginning at the existing gas main belonging to said company in Foxhall and Conduit Roads and extending therefrom in a northwesterly direction in and along said Conduit Road to the District line, the same to be subject to existing laws governing the manufacture and sale of gas for light, heat, and power in the District of Columbia; and all work in laying said main to be done under the supervision of the War Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

ALIENATION OF ALLOTTED LANDS IN CHEROKEE NATION.

The bill (S. 6126) for the purpose of removing restrictions on encumbrance and alienation of allotted lands within the Cherokee Nation was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be appraised, through the United States Indian agent at the Union Agency, Okla., the tracts of surplus lands which were allotted to the Indians of the Cherokee Nation of Indians in tracts of 30 acres or less, and which tracts are now unoccupied and do not adjoin the homesteads of said allottees. Each tract shall be appraised separately and at its actual value, and the United States Indian agent at said Union Agency may cause a reappraisement of any tract if in his judgment the circumstances warrant such action. After such appraisal the allottee of any of such tracts is hereby authorized to sell and dispose of any of such tracts of 30 acres or less allotted to him which does not adjoin his homestead: Provided, That such sale shall not be for less than the appraised value of such tract; and such sale shall be approved by the United States Indian agent at the Union Agency, but the Secretary of the Interior may from time to time designate any other person to so act in lieu of or in addition to said United States Indian agent: Provided further, That such purchase price shall be paid to the allottee through said United States Indian agent, and in case the allottee is an Indian of three-quarters blood or more the money received from the sale of any tract allotted to such Indian shall be used for the benefit of such allottee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXCHANGE OF OSAGE ALLOTMENTS.

The bill (S. 6686) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit exchanges of lands of Osage allottees, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to permit the exchange of homesteads or other allotments, or any portions thereof, of Osage allottees under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe and upon such terms as he shall approve; but where a homestead or homesteads pass in the exchange, in whole or in part, an equivalent in value of land suitable for agricultural purposes shall be furnished, to be designated as a homestead, the new homestead to be subject to the same restrictions as the original homestead; and the Secretary is authorized to do any and all things necessary to make these exchanges effective.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGES ACROSS TUG FORK OF THE BIG SANDY RIVER.

The bill (H. R. 20593) to authorize the Norfolk & Western Railway Co. to construct sundry bridges across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The bill (H. R. 24665) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT RIPON, WIS.

The bill (S. 6650) for a site and the erection of a public building at Ripon, Wis., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire a site and erect thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post office and other Government offices in the city of Ripon and State of Wisconsin, the cost of the building, including vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, not to exceed $75,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW FLOYD.

The bill (S. 1001) to correct the military record of Andrew Floyd and grant him an honorable discharge was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of the pension laws Andrew Floyd, who served in Company I, Thirty-fifth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 4th day of May, 1863: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Andrew Floyd."

FLORIDA EAST COAST RAILWAY CO.

The bill (S. 1589) to authorize the exchange of conveyances between the Florida East Coast Railway Co. and the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It empowers the Secretary of War to exchange conveyances with the Florida East Coast Railway Co. for the adjustment of a boundary line between the military reservation of Key West Barracks, on the island of Key West, Fla., and the land in front of the reservation filled in by the railway company under permission of the Secretary of War, as authorized by law, in accordance with the memorandum of agreement between the railway company and Maj. George G. Bailey, quartermaster, United States Army, dated December 5, 1910, which agreement is ratified.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES L. CHASE.

The bill (S. 2147) for the relief of James L. Chase was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, James L. Chase, now a resident of Ayer, Mass., shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company F, Third Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, on the 14th of April, 1864; but no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

APACHE INDIANS, FORT SILL MILITARY RESERVATION, OKLA.

The bill (S. 6776) for the relief of the Apache Indians held as prisoners of war on the Fort Sill Military Reservation, in Oklahoma, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indians Affairs with an amendment, in section 1, page 2, line 8, after the word "sell," to insert "the live stock"; and in line 9, after the word "either," to strike out "the," so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to remove to and establish on the Mescalero Apache Indian Reservation, in New Mexico, all persons now held as Apache prisoners of war on the Fort Sill Military Reservation, in Oklahoma, who may desire to go to said Mescalero Apache Reservation. The desires of said Indians shall be ascertained by a commission of two persons, one a representative of the War Department and one a representative of the Interior Department, to be selected by the heads of said departments, respectively. The personal effects, including horses, cattle, farm implements, and household goods, of those electing to remove to said Mescalero Apache Reservation shall also be removed and delivered to the respective owners on that reservation. The proportionate share of those removed in the common property of the tribes or band shall be segregated and administered for their common benefit. The Secretary of War may, in his discretion, if he deems it advisable, sell the live stock, either individual or common property, and pay over the proceeds of such sale to the Secretary of the Interior, to be by him invested in property suitable in character for the use and benefit of those whose property is sold.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC PARK, WASHINGTON HEIGHTS, D. C.

The bill (S. 2845) to acquire certain land in Washington Heights for a public park, to be known as McClellan Park, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before asking that this bill go over I want to make a brief statement, directing my remarks particularly to the Senator who reported the bill.

This bill is for a park that is to cost $180,000, immediately north of the Highlands Apartment House. It is a beautiful lawn owned by somebody who can afford to keep up a large establishment. I do not object to it on that ground, however; but in the District of Columbia appropriation bill we have established two parks in the southeast section of the city, where many poor people live, and we have levied benefits upon the adjoining lands. There are no benefits levied in this bill.

Again, in the appropriation bill which passed the Senate this morning, and which doubtless will pass the House in a day or two, we have inserted a provision as to how the expense of purchasing parks shall be divided. As I recall, the Government is to pay one-third, the District of Columbia one-third, and the abutting landowners one-third. That will become a law in two or three days, but the provisions of that law will not apply to this bill as it now reads.

Again, Mr. President, I do not find that anybody has recommended the establishment of this park. There is nothing in the report to show that either the Commissioners of the District of Columbia or the official having in charge the reservations in the District of Columbia have been consulted. Possibly they have been, but the report does not so show.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I will say, with the Senator's permission, that the bill may not conform to any order or suggestion of the District Commissioners, but the matter was presented to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and it was referred to a subcommittee of which I was a member. We visited the plot, and were much impressed with the wisdom and desirability of its being made a park. It is a triangular plot, situated in the midst of a very thickly settled portion of the city.

In answer to the Senator's suggestion that it is now a beautifully kept lawn and will likely be kept so, I have to say that the probability is that if it is not purchased by the Government it will be cut into small plots. It would be a great advantage, I believe, and the committee so believed, to that section of the city.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was going to ask that the matter go over.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I hope the Senator will not ask that the bill go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. He certainly will, because there will be a law on the statute books within the next two or three days providing how parks shall be acquired and how the payment shall be made. This levies the payment upon the District of Columbia and the General Government—$90,000 each.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me ask the Senator a question. Did I understand him to say that provision is made by law as to abutting owners?

Mr. GALLINGER. That they shall pay one-third.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What does the Senator mean by "abutting owners"?

Mr. GALLINGER. I mean that the benefits shall be assessed in the judgment of the jury.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Is it simply that one-third of the cost of the park shall be assessed against the owners of property immediately adjacent to the park?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not necessarily. It is in the province of the jury to determine how far the benefits extend.

Then, again, I do not agree as to the great necessity for this park. However, I will look into that. This park is to be established about a half mile from the Zoological Park, on the south, and on the north about a half mile from Dupont Circle. It may be that there is a great necessity for it, but I think it ought to be further inquired into, and for that reason I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

THE COMMERCE COURT.

The motion entered by Mr. POINDEXTER on the 7th instant, that the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of S. 3297, to abolish the Commerce Court, etc., and that said bill be placed upon the calendar, under Rule VIII, for consideration by the Senate, was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

MAJ. BUTT AND F. D. MILLET.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 108) authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington of a joint memorial to Maj. Archibald W. Butt and Francis Davis Millet was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over.

INTERSTATE TRANSPORTATION OF PRIZE-FIGHT PICTURES.

The bill (S. 7027) to prohibit the interstate transportation of pictures of prize fights, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, when this bill was called up several days ago there was some objection to its phraseology, and it went over for the purpose of correction, to supply certain omissions which were deemed necessary. The same identical bill was introduced in the House, and a substitute was prepared for it which covers the objections made the other day, and it was reported by the committee to which it was referred in the House. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and to substitute what I send to the desk.

After the objections were made to which I have referred the Committee on the Judiciary informally considered the substitute which I now offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That it shall be unlawful for any person to deposit or cause to be deposited in the United States mails for mailing or delivery, or to deposit or cause to be deposited with any express company or other common carrier for carriage, from one State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or to bring or to cause to be brought into the United States from abroad, any film or other pictorial representation of any prize fight or encounter of pugilists, under whatever name, which is designed to be used or may be used for purposes of public exhibition, or any record or account of betting on the same.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person to take or receive from the mails, or any express company or other common carrier, with intent to sell, distribute, circulate, or exhibit any matter or thing herein forbidden to be deposited for mailing, delivery, or carriage in interstate commerce.

SEC. 3. That any person violating any of the provisions of this act may be proceeded against by indictment and tried and punished either in the district in which the unlawful matter was deposited for mailing or carriage, or to which it is carried, or in which it is delivered; and any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall for each and every offense, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor for not more than one year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. HEYBURN and Mr. SUTHERLAND addressed the Chair.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was merely going to suggest an amendment—to insert the word "knowingly" before the word "received."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move that the word "knowingly" be inserted.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 16, before the word "receive," insert the word "knowingly."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I suggest, however, to the Senator from Idaho that in view of the fact that this section provides that it shall be done with a specific intent——

Mr. HEYBURN. I intend to make it go further, so that they can not receive it knowingly for their own amusement—to prevent getting a mailing list. Of course the word "knowingly" is necessary, because we do not know what we are receiving in the mail until it is opened.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The point I make is that the provision "that it shall be unlawful for any person to take or receive from the mails" any of these articles is qualified by the further provision that it shall be "with the intent to sell, distribute, circulate, or exhibit any matter herein forbidden to be deposited," and so forth. Of course, if the article was taken from the mails innocently, it could not be taken with that intent.

Mr. HEYBURN. I want to include those who take it from the mail for their own amusement, in addition to the provision that it shall be for the purpose of sale. Not having the amendment before me, I am not able to suggest the proper point at which it should be inserted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think the Senator would accomplish that. That is the very point of the suggestion I am making—that notwithstanding his amendment the provision is that this shall be with the specific intent.

Mr. HEYBURN. I want that to remain in.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think it ought to remain in.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Therefore he is by that amendment making the law more drastic than it ought to be and making it more difficult to prove the offense.

Mr. HEYBURN. It may so appear, but we will see how it fits into the text. I merely want to add an additional class. If I may have the amendment, I will determine where it should go in.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. While the Senator is looking into that, I call attention to another matter.

Section 3 of the proposed substitute provides:

That any person violating any of the provisions of this act may be proceeded against by indictment and tried and punished either in the district—

This is the part I call attention to—either in the district in which the unlawful matter was deposited for mailing or carriage, or to which it is carried or in which it is delivered.

Now, the offense consists in depositing or causing to be deposited in the United States mails or with any express company or other common carrier, or in taking the prohibited matter from the mail or from these carriers, with the specific intent provided. Those are two separate and distinct offenses. It is a complete offense under this proposed law when the forbidden matter is deposited for carriage. Now, under the terms of section 3, that offense which may be committed and be a complete offense in the State of New York may be prosecuted in the State of California; and it seems to me it would be in direct violation of the provision of the Constitution which declares that all persons accused of crime shall be prosecuted in the district and State where the offense was committed. So it seems to me the Senator had better take that out of the section.

Mr. HEYBURN. I withdraw the amendment, in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Utah, and as soon as I can find the place where it should be inserted, I will reoffer it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I suggest that, beginning in line 21, page 2, after the word "act," we strike out down to and including the word "act," in line 25, and after the word "each," in line 25, strike out "and every." Then it will read:

That any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall for each offense, upon conviction thereof, be fined—

And so forth.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that would accomplish the purpose.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is no need of providing where the offense shall be prosecuted, because that is a matter of general law.

Mr. HEYBURN. This could all have been accomplished by amending section 211 of the Criminal Code, because it does cover everything except the enumeration here, and I am not sure that it would not be included within the language of that section. I do not know the history of this bill. Let us see. It was introduced by request by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. We already have very complete laws in regard to this matter, and I presume the only question was whether or not they were broad enough to cover the films. But the words "paper," "writing," "advertisement," "device," or "substance," I think, would be held to be broad enough to cover these films. It says, in the beginning, that the transportation of "every * * * filthy book, pamphlet, picture, paper, letter, writing, print, or other publication of an indecent character" is prohibited.

I think the word "picture" is comprehensive enough to cover it. They are pictures; they are photographs.

I ask the Senator from North Carolina whether or not, in his judgment, the existing law is not broad enough to cover that which is sought to be accomplished? The provisions there against mailing and against receiving through the mails were given very thorough consideration both in the preparation and in the enactment of the code—of course, this is a recent enactment—and the scope of the language was intended to be wide enough to cover it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I fear the general law does not cover this specific case. The substitute was drawn not by me, but by some one in one of the departments, I have been advised, with a view to making the present law fit this particular case.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I can readily understand how, a person's attention being directed to an existing evil ever before him, he might overlook the fact whether or not we had a law already on the statute books sufficient to cover it. I doubt if anyone would have drawn this bill had he read section 211 of the Criminal Code, because that section is very comprehensive. Every possible device of the kind was intended to be covered and, I think, is covered; and I think there is an adequate foundation upon which to prosecute these people.

The act specifically uses the word "picture"; and then the matter would be covered by the words "other publication," and by several other phrases. It provides that they shall not be sent through the mail, that they shall not be received in the mail, that they shall not be distributed if they are received, and it provides a penalty both for the party depositing and the party who knowingly receives them.

Whoever * * * shall knowingly take, or cause the same to be taken, from the mails for the purpose of circulating or disposing thereof, or of aiding in the circulation or disposition thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000, etc.

The penalty is heavy. The law would cover the operators of the stand or whatever it may be termed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is the Senator reading from the present law?

Mr. HEYBURN. I am reading from the law.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator mean that the present law would cover the case of transmitting these films through the mails?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; it is most specific. It would cover the making of them, the sending of them, the receiving of them, or the use of them. I think now any person can be prosecuted in this city under that statute for operating these establishments, whatever they are called, on the Avenue or elsewhere, where films of this class are used, because the law specifically uses the word "picture."

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think the general language used in the existing act could not possibly cover this specific case. The language is:

Every obscene, lewd, or lascivious, and every filthy book, pamphlet, picture, paper, letter, writing, print, or other publication of an indecent character, and every article or thing designed, adapted, or intended for preventing conception or producing abortion, or for any indecent or immoral use.

I do not think that would cover the specific case to which this bill addresses itself—that of preventing the use of the mails, or of the express companies, for the purpose of transmitting pictures of prize fights.

Mr. HEYBURN. The latter part of the section covers the transmission of immoral matter.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; but there is nothing here that would cover a picture of a prize fight. I do not think it would come under any of the general designations used in the law.

Mr. HEYBURN. It says "any picture."

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; but it says "any picture" of a certain character. I do not think these pictures would come under the general designation used in the act.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, this is a matter of very considerable importance. It is one in which a great many of the very best people in the land are deeply interested. They regard prize fights as brutalizing to the last degree, and they think the transmission of these films or pictures and their use in moving-picture shows is second only in degree to the actual witnessing of two human beings standing in a ring and beating each other into bloody insensibility.

It is in response to this laudable desire on the part of the best people in the land that these things shall not be encouraged, and that our young women and our young men, to say nothing of older and more mature people, shall not be brutalized and demoralized by the exhibition of such pictures as these that the bill has been introduced.

Of course, the suggestions of Senators as to whatever is objectionable in the bill will be respected and acquiesced in. But the contention of the Senator from Idaho that possibly the existing law might be used to cover the case does not seem to me sufficiently well founded to justify a refusal at this time to pass the bill.

I do hope that no slight consideration will induce the Senator to object, because the matter is really most deeply at heart with a very large part of the religious and moral and respectable element of the whole country, and they desire the passage of the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator can not be more zealous than I am in regard to this matter. We had it under consideration in the Joint Committee on the Revision of the Laws for perhaps as great a length of time as any other provision of the laws. Through every available agency we gathered the information that might be had touching upon the matter, and we certainly intended to cover every phase of it.

I will call attention to part of the section. It is not that I desire to prevent legislation, if it is desirable, but that we should not duplicate it.

I call the Senator's attention to this phrase:

Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery anything declared by this section to be nonmailable—

These pictures are declared to be nonmailable; so that covers it—or shall knowingly take or cause the same to be taken from the mails.

Of course that is comprehensive enough to cover everything that is referred to here, and the only question, then, is whether the language in the early part of the section covers it.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, any pictures covered by the general terms of the act would be forbidden admission to the mails by the law he has just read. But what term, what word, what language there is broad enough to include these pictures?

Mr. HEYBURN. The word "picture." It says the picture shall not be mailable.

Mr. SIMMONS. But the word "picture" there has qualifying words. They are described as pictures of certain characters, of certain kinds—lewd pictures, obscene pictures. I think none of those words would cover a picture of a prize fight.

Mr. HEYBURN. That would depend upon the estimate placed upon it, of course.

Mr. SIMMONS. In itself a picture of a prize fight would not be obscene, nor would it be vulgar.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is immoral; and pictures of an immoral nature are nonmailable.

Mr. SIMMONS. Nor would it be embraced, in my judgment, in any of the words that are used there to qualify the word "picture."

Mr. HEYBURN. Then, on that suggestion, not having the slightest desire to defeat the purpose sought to be accomplished, which I would much prefer to have in the nature of an amendment to this section of the code by adding a word or two, I will raise no objection to the bill as it is presented, except that the word "knowingly" should be inserted at the proper place.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection to the insertion of the word "knowingly."

Mr. HEYBURN. That is to say, a person does not always know what he is receiving through the mail, so "knowingly" or "with intent" should be inserted at the proper place.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no sort of objection to the insertion of that word.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the fact that unless we put in the law a specific provision that these representations of prize fights and encounters of pugilists shall be denied the mails there will be no general word of description in the existing statutes which will cover them, because people differ as to the character of these exhibitions. A great many people defend them and say they are exhibitions of the manly art. It might depend upon the taste of the judge before whom the case came as to whether he would say the pictures came within the general description of being an indecent exhibition or an exhibition of any other offensive character under the general words used in the statute. So it seems to me it is absolutely necessary, in order to cover pictures and films of this class, that they should be described in precise terms.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I would not want to have any misunderstanding as to my views in regard to the matter. I regard a prize fight as being as brutal and disgraceful a thing as can be engaged in by humankind.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. So do I.

Mr. HEYBURN. I despise a man who will not fight when he has a fight coming, and I despise just as much a man who will fight when he has no fight coming. The man who goes out and fights for the amusement of some one is a contemptible creature, I do not care what his name may be nor his assumed standing.

I have no desire at all to give such pictures or anything pertaining to them the right to go through the mail. I have stated on this floor that I would limit to three lines the reference to a prize fight in any newspaper going through the United States mails. I would not allow a paper that published more than three lines describing or mentioning a prize fight to go through the mails at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I entirely agree with the Senator's characterization of this sort of thing. But at least one State in the Union has passed a law legalizing encounters of this very character. In the face of laws of that kind certainly it is safer to particularize these objectionable things by name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. The Secretary will report the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 21, after the word "act," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "act," in line 25; and on page 2, line 25, it is proposed to strike out the words "and every," so that if amended it will read:

SEC. 3. That any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall for each offense, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs upon the amendment as amended. The Chair understands that the Senator from Idaho withdrew his amendment?

Mr. HEYBURN. I withdrew the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The bill (H. R. 24450) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

Mr. WARREN. That goes over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

SUITS BY ATTORNEY GENERAL.

The bill (S. 5885) supplementing the joint resolution of Congress approved April 30, 1908, entitled "Joint resolution instructing the Attorney General to institute certain suits," etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

CHOCTAWHATCHEE RIVER DAM, ALA.

The bill (H. R. 22006) authorizing the Choctawhatchee River Light & Power Co. to erect a dam across the Choctawhatchee River in Dale County, Ala., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

The bill (H. R. 21969) to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

JOHN J. FLYNN.

The bill (S. 2697) for the relief of John J. Flynn was announced as next in order.

Mr. CULBERSON. Does that tend to establish a pensionable status for a man who was a deserter from the Army?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill, which will show the character of the measure.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the laws relating to pensions and to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, John J. Flynn, late a sergeant in Company E, Twenty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and subsequently a sergeant in Company A, One hundred and eighteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and whose name is borne on the records of both organizations as John Flynn, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of the One hundred and eighteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry on the 18th day of February, 1863: Provided, That no pay, bounty, back pension, future pension, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAVE HILL CEMETERY, LOUISVILLE, KY.

The bill (S. 2928) appropriating money for and directing the purchase of additional land in Cave Hill Cemetery, at Louisville, Ky., was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. I do not understand that number. On my copy of the calendar order of business 774 is a pension bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is a bill reported by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN] from the Committee on Military Affairs June 13.

Mr. HEYBURN. You have two bills in the same condition. Evidently there has been a confusion in printing. The same number, 774, on the calendar is a bill granting an increase of pension to Marion Cunningham.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Evidently there is mistake in the calendar.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is a mistake.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs and the calendar states that the bill was reported by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN] from the Committee on Pensions. It is a mistake in the calendar.

Mr. WARREN. But the title of the bill on the calendar is wrong.

Mr. HEYBURN. The title of the bill is a mistake.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The calendar number indicated on the bill, the number of the Senate bill, and the name of the Senator reporting it all indicate that Senate bill 2928 is the proper bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. So the record does not get awry.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, considered the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 3, to strike out "$12,828.40" and insert "$25,656.80," and, in line 11, page 1, before the word "feet," to insert the word "square," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $25,656.80 is hereby appropriated, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the same to the Secretary of War (which sum is to be paid by the Secretary of War to the Cave Hill Cemetery Co., of Louisville, Ky.) for the purchasing of 32,071 square feet of land adjoining the national cemetery grounds in said Cave Hill Cemetery, for the interment of soldiers of that vicinity who served in the Union Army in the late Civil War and the War between Spain and the United States.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is authorized to make the purchase aforesaid: Provided, That on examination the title to the land is in all respects good and a proper deed can be and is made for same.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think probably, to save confusion, the calendar should be corrected now, because the title of the bill is reversed. The bill that we have just passed should have been on the calendar as Order of Business 774, and it should be ascertained whether or not we have dealt with the bill given that number on that calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The calendar is re-formed each day, and doubtless the correction will be made in the next calendar.

Mr. HEYBURN. The RECORD will show that attention was called to it.

Mr. WARREN. Has the Secretary this pension bill on his list? Is it included in the file? It appears on the calendar as having been reported from the Committee on Pensions by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no question but that the bill just read and passed is the bill which should be on the calendar of that number.

Mr. WARREN. That is true, but we would like to locate the bill described on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that there is no bill on the calendar of that title and number.

Mr. HEYBURN. Has no such bill been passed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 2928 was passed.

Mr. HEYBURN. I know; but I refer to the bill granting an increase of pension to Marion Cunningham. Has that bill been passed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No such bill, so far as the Chair is informed, is on the calendar.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to look at the RECORD of June 13, where it is stated the Senator from Nebraska reported the bill, and it is Report No. 876.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair holds in his hand Report No. 876, June 13, 1912, "Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report." It is a report on Senate bill 2928.

Mr. HEYBURN. All right.

MINING EXPERIMENT STATION IN WYOMING.

The bill (S. 7050) to establish a mining experiment station in the State of Wyoming, to aid in the development of the mineral resources of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow the bill to be read?

Mr. HEYBURN. I have no option about allowing it to be read.

HAROLD HANCOCK TAINTOR.

The bill (S. 7018) to authorize the appointment of Harold Hancock Taintor to the grade of second lieutenant in the Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. As the Senator who reported the bill is not in the Chamber——

Mr. WARREN. Will the gentleman withhold for a moment? I understand the bill is merely to provide for a little matter of age. A man was traveling and on his way when the age limit was reached.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will state that he took an examination in the Philippines, and there was a delay in the transmission of the papers.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not object to the bill under that statement of fact.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Harold Hancock Taintor to the grade of second lieutenant in the United States Army, with lineal rank in accordance with his rating at the competitive examination held under the law by the War Department in January, 1912.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ALTUS, OKLA.

The bill (S. 4900) to provide for the erection of a public building at Altus, Okla., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments, in line 1, page 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and twenty-five" and insert "sixty"; and in line 1, page 2, after the word "dollars," to strike out the remainder of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post office and other offices of the Government at Altus, Okla.; the cost of said building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, not to exceed $60,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SHAWNEE, OKLA.

The bill (S. 4883) to provide for the erection of a public building at Shawnee, Okla., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments, on page 2, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "forty-five," and in line 1, page 2, after the word "dollars," to strike out the remainder of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, included fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post office and other offices of the Government at Shawnee, Okla, the cost of said building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and aproaches, not to exceed $145,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMORY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 6734) to provide for the erection of an armory in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to enter into contracts for the construction of an armory building for the National Guard of the District of Columbia, in accordance with the plans for such armory submitted by the commission appointed by the act of Congress approved May 30, 1908, or such modified plans as may be approved by the Secretary of War and the said commission, to bring it within a cost not to exceed $1,750,000, of which sum $50,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available for the purpose of the preparation of detailed plans and specifications and the starting of work upon the foundations of said building.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator from Utah in charge of the bill how much money under the latter part of section 1 can be used by the Secretary of War in obtaining plans and specifications for the building? There is an appropriation of $50,000. I have not read the bill, but from the reading at the desk I gather that the amount which may be used for that purpose is very indefinite.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As much of $50,000 as may be necessary.

Mr. CULBERSON. Does not the Senator think that is very indefinite?

Mr. OVERMAN. If I heard the reading correctly I think the plans and specifications have been already prepared.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That amount is simply made available for the purpose.

Mr. CULBERSON. Will the Senator allow the Secretary to reread that part of the section?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no objection to inserting words so as to read "a sum not exceeding $50,000" or "$50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. CULBERSON. That is the way it reads now.

Mr. OVERMAN. The plans have already been specified.

Mr. WARREN. The amount would be governed by the regular architects' percentage.

Mr. CULBERSON. May I ask that that portion of the bill be read again?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

To bring it within a cost not to exceed $1,750,000, of which sum $50,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available for the purpose of the preparation of detailed plans and specifications and the starting of work upon the foundations of said building.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator will observe that the sum of $50,000 is appropriated to be immediately available and there is no limit placed upon what the Secretary of War may use for plans and specifications.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As I understand it, it covers not only the plans, but the work on the foundations of the building as well. I am willing that it shall be limited in any way the Senator suggests.

Mr. CULBERSON. How much does the Senator from Utah think the Secretary ought to pay for the plans and specifications of this building?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no information upon that subject.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is suggested by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] that these plans have already been prepared.

Mr. OVERMAN. It says "in accordance with the plans."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The general plans have been prepared.

Mr. SMOOT. But not detailed plans.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not the details and specifications.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, the appropriation is $1,750,000, and $50,000 would be a little less than 3 per cent. I think the usual fee is at least that much, and sometimes 5 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. However, that can cover superintendence.

Mr. CULBERSON. It seems to me, with all the architects employed generally by the Government of the United States, $50,000 is an extraordinary sum to pay for the plans and specifications of this building.

Mr. OVERMAN. The bill says—

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enter into contracts for the construction of an armory building for the National Guard of the District of Columbia, in accordance with the plans for such armory submitted by the commission appointed by the act of Congress approved May 30, 1908.

So they have submitted plans.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Those are only general plans. The specifications have not yet been prepared. I understand the appropriation of $50,000 is to be used not only for the purpose of preparing detailed plans and specifications, but also for the purpose of starting the work upon the foundations of the building.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what it says.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The matter is left in the hands of the Secretary of War. He must approve whatever contract is made.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill does not state that the appropriation of $50,000 is to be for payment of plans only.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not at all. If the Senator from New Hampshire, who is the author of the bill, sees no objection to it I have no objection to inserting a provision that not to exceed $10,000 shall be used for the preparation of plans and specifications.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that would be a very small amount for a building of this magnitude.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, as a matter of inquiry, we have a Supervising Architect of the Treasury, who has in charge the construction of all the public buildings of the United States, and why can not these plans be drawn by him and his assistants in the office? Why do we want to pay out extra money every time we construct a public building when we have a corps of architects employed there to do such work?

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Utah will permit me to answer, I will say to the Senator from Texas that we have a corps under the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, and the fact is that a very large part of the work that is done under the Supervising Architect is done by outside architects in the construction of public buildings; that the office is overworked; that they are about three years behind time now; and I think it is utterly impossible to load that office down with work of this kind. I think it ought to be done by outside architects.

But as to the matter of compensation for the preparation of plans, it is an important question. I do not know how much work is involved in the term "the starting of work upon the foundations of said building." I do not know exactly what that means. While I introduced the bill, I will say that I did not write the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me suggest to the Senator that the matter might be taken care of if we would provide that the amount to be paid for the preparation of detailed plans and specifications shall be fixed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that would probably do.

Mr. OVERMAN. I would not fix it that way. I would rather limit the amount. I understand that in the construction of some of the great buildings, for example, at West Point and Annapolis, the architects have been paid $250,000 or $300,000.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We fix the limit at $50,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is for the foundation and plans also. It looks to me like we could get a good architect to do this work for $25,000, anyway.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Architectural Association, if that is the proper term, have an agreement whereby they have a certain percentage. I do not know how much that involves, whether it is simply the preparation of the plans and specifications or the supervision of the construction of the building, but I know that from 3 to 5 per cent is about what is paid the architects.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is not that charge made when they also supervise the construction?

Mr. GALLINGER. I just remarked that probably it involves the construction.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The superintendence.

Mr. GALLINGER. The superintendence. I think instead of saying "starting of work on the foundations of said building" we should make it read "the preparation of detailed plans and specifications and the superintendence of the construction of the building," and then fix a sum, whatever is thought proper. I will ask the Senator from Utah how that strikes him?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not catch the Senator's remark.

Mr. GALLINGER. Instead of saying "starting of work upon the foundations," say "the superintendence of the construction of said building," and then fix the amount, whatever we think is proper, whether $50,000 or less.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no objection to that if it is agreeable to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will move to strike out the words "starting of work upon the foundations of said building" and insert "superintendence of the construction of said building."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 2, line 5, strike out the words "starting of work upon the foundations" and in lieu insert "superintendence of the construction," so as to read:

Preparation of detail plans and specifications and the superintendence of the construction of said building.

Mr. OVERMAN. That would allow them $50,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; and that is less than 3 per cent on the cost of the building, which I think is less than is ordinarily paid in any case. That is my judgment.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move to amend by striking out "$50,000" and inserting "$25,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not an amendment to the amendment. The Senator from Texas will withhold it until the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire has been acted on.

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, which has been read by the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas moves to further amend the bill. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 1, before the word "thousand," strike out "fifty" and in lieu insert "twenty-five."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. The amount having been reduced so violently, I now move to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment I submitted was agreed to, and I will let the text stand as it is in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment previously offered by him was adopted.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. My amendment was only intended to limit the amount we should pay an architect to $25,000. The amount appropriated also covers the beginning of the work of construction. I do not care to limit the appropriation to $25,000 when it has these two purposes in view. So I move to reconsider the action of the Senate in reducing the amount from $50,000 to $25,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator wishes that simply to be paid as a fee to the architect, he would reach the same purpose by striking out the words "and the starting of work upon the foundations of said building." Then that would leave it as an architectural fee.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator can make that motion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I do make that motion. I move to strike out, in lines 5 and 6, the words "and the starting of work upon the foundations of said building."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to strike out, in lines 5 and 6, the words "and the starting of work upon the foundations of said building."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. Now, may we have the section as amended read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read it as amended. The Chair understands the Senator from Texas to withdraw his motion to reconsider.

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the section be read as amended.

The SECRETARY. Section 1 as amended reads:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enter into contracts for the construction of an armory building for the National Guard of the District of Columbia, in accordance with the plans for such armory submitted by the commission appointed by the act of Congress approved May 30, 1908, or such modified plans as may be approved by the Secretary of War and the said commission, to bring it within a cost not to exceed $1,750,000, of which sum $25,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available for the purpose of the preparation of detailed plans and specifications.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator whether this entire sum is to be paid out of the National Treasury?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The entire sum is to be paid out of the National Treasury. It is essentially a piece of Federal work for the benefit of the Federal Government.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is the National Guard, is it not?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is the National Guard.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it merely for the National Guard of the District of Columbia?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We have our National Guard everywhere else, but the Government does not pay for the armories.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Government, as I understood the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]—if he were here he could explain it better than I can—but, as I understand, the whole cost of maintaining the National Guard here has been borne by the General Government. I know I have had occasion to go about the city to look at these various so-called armories with a view to determining the necessity for the erection of this building, and I find they are scattered in some 10 or 15 different places in all sorts of poor quarters. The Government property is in fire traps; in one building there is over a hundred thousand dollars' worth of Government property that is at the mercy of any fire that might come along. To my mind, to provide for this armory is one of the most necessary things to be done.

Here is the National Government, which is responsible for the national defense, which is cooperating with the various States of the Union in the building up of the National Guard, and yet this is the one place in the United States where no adequate quarters are provided. In the neighboring city of Baltimore there is a great armory erected at great expense by the State of Maryland, which is so fine, so large, and so commoidous that the Democratic national convention is to be held in it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me, the State of Maryland and the city of Baltimore alone paid for that——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; that is quite true.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And none of the money came from the National Treasury. It was local taxation and local subscriptions that paid for it. Take any of the cities and you will find that the armories are in no way built for them by the National Government. We raise our money locally; we obtain appropriations from the State legislatures and we subscribe locally for them. The officers of the National Guard in part raise the money, and the cities in part contribute to the fund. Why should the District of Columbia put the entire tax on the National Government—which is the people of the entire country outside of the District—when in all other parts of the country they locally bear the expense themselves? Why is it not properly an expense of the District of Columbia rather than an expense of the whole country?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the National Guard in the District of Columbia is essentially a national organization, intended for the national defense.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They all are.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They are militia in the States, intended as well for the State defense as for national defense. These buildings referred to are used by the State militia.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will permit me, the Senator from Utah fell into a little error in saying that the General Government pays the whole expense of the militia in the District of Columbia. That is not correct. The appropriation is made in the District of Columbia appropriation bill; and while it is not very large, it is paid in equal parts out of the Treasury of the United States and the revenues of the District of Columbia.

While I introduced this bill, I confess I did not examine it very carefully, and I think there is a great deal of force in the suggestion that the District of Columbia ought to make a contribution toward this armory. In my own little State we have six armories that I can recall, and the State made the appropriations for them. They were built by taxation of the people.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me, we have just finished a large armory in the city of Atlanta, and even the State did not contribute to that. The city contributed about $150,000, and we raised about that much more through the efforts of the National Guard by local subscription. Not a dollar was contributed by the National Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. In this case I assume that the Government will give the land on which the armory is to be erected. It is to be located on public property. The Government makes that contribution, to begin with; but I really think it would be only a matter of equity to amend the bill so as to require this money to be paid in equal parts out of the public Treasury and out of the revenues of the District of Columbia. I will ask the Senator from Utah if he does not feel that that would be right?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from New Hampshire is chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia and is much better informed about District matters than am I. I defer to his judgment. I have no objection to such an amendment as he suggests, if he wishes it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, this seems to me a very important question as to whether the Government should be involved in this expense, and while I do not like to object, I should be glad for the matter to go over, so that I may look into it a little further. If it is pressed now, I should feel constrained to vote against the bill, and even to ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Would the Senator object if we provide that one-half of the expenditure shall be borne by the District of Columbia, the same as is the case in all other expenditures for the District?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think that would undoubtedly be much more equitable.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I trust this bill will be amended so that the District of Columbia will at least be compelled to pay one-half. I should not feel like supporting the bill otherwise. I trust the friends of the bill will agree to such an amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will, then, offer an amendment, on page 2, line 2, after the word "appropriated," to insert the words "in equal parts," and then I will follow that with another amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, on page 2, line 2, after the word "appropriated," it is proposed to insert the words "in equal parts."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. How will it then read?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have another amendment to offer. After the word "appropriated," in line 3, I move to insert, "and the revenues of the District of Columbia," so that it will read:

Appropriated in equal parts out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to hear the whole provision as amended read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment as proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 2, line 3, after the word "appropriated," it is proposed to insert "and the revenues of the District of Columbia," so that if amended it will read:

To bring it within a cost not to exceed $1,750,000, of which sum $25,000 is hereby appropriated in equal parts out of any money in the Treasury—

Mr. GALLINGER. No; that is a mistake. The words inserted should come after the full amount, so as to read:

Not to exceed $1,750,000, in equal parts, is hereby appropriated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 1, on page 2, it is proposed to insert "is hereby appropriated in equal parts."

Mr. GALLINGER. "In equal parts"—exactly the words that were there before:

In equal parts out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated from the revenues of the District of Columbia, of which sum $25,000—

We have got it right now. Now, let it be reported as amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

To bring it within a cost not to exceed $1,750,000 is hereby appropriated in equal parts out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and the revenues of the District of Columbia, of which sum $25,000 is hereby appropriated, to be immediately available, for the purpose of the preparation of detailed plans and specifications.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; but in consequence of another official engagement I did not attend the meeting of that committee yesterday when this bill was considered. I ask the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], who has charge of the bill, whether $1,750,000, in his judgment, is not a rather large sum for the construction of a mere armory?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The evidence before the committee was to the effect that it was not. I know nothing personally about the cost of these buildings; but the general plans were submitted to the committee. Testimony was submitted to the committee bearing upon the subject. It is to be a very large building.

Mr. CULBERSON. The building will not be used except for an armory, will it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It may be used for other public purposes; it may be used as a building for inaugural balls, if we care to so use it.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is there an assembly hall in it for the public?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; there will be a very large hall, a drill hall. For example, I call the attention of the Senator from Texas to the fact that the drill hall of the armory at Baltimore is to be used for the Democratic national convention.

Mr. CULBERSON. This probably, then, is to be an armory and a public auditorium.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It may be used for that purpose; yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Beyond question this building will provide the District of Columbia with what is so much needed, and which has been so greatly agitated from time to time; that is, a great assembly hall. We ought to have it; and beyond doubt, if this building is constructed, it will provide such a hall.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It was so stated before our committee.

Mr. CULBERSON. I wanted to bring that out. That was my understanding in a general way in reading over the public prints. I think it puts a different face on the amount, when the building is to be constructed to be used for these two purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. As an illustration, at each inauguration the Government loses $30,000 by giving up the use of the Pension Office. It was with a great struggle that we secured it for the last inauguration. I do not know what we will do when we come to inaugurate the next President, whoever he may be.

Mr. CULBERSON. We want a great hall for that, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And we do not want to wait until this hall is finished to inaugurate him.

Mr. GALLINGER. We shall cross that bridge when we come to it. What I wanted to emphasize, however, was that this will solve a problem which has been agitated for a great many years; and that is one reason why I am so warmly in favor of this bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. The size proposed for the drill hall is 350 by 243 feet, as will be found on page 15 of the report.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is enormous.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I should like to put into the RECORD, in connection with the armory-building bill, this very brief statement:

The National Guard of the District of Columbia is a Federal force created by the act of Congress approved March 1, 1889 (25 Stat. L., 774), and the act of February 18, 1909 (35 Stat. L., 629). The President of the United States is its commander in chief, and it is under the immediate supervision of the War Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND subsequently said: At the suggestion of some Senators, I ask to have printed in the RECORD, in connection with the discussion on the armory-building bill, the report of the committee on that bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Following the passage of the bill?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The report referred to is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 886, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

ARMORY IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 6734:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 6734) to provide for the erection of an armory in the District of Columbia, having considered the same, report thereon with the recommendation that the bill pass without amendment.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of War to enter into contracts for the construction of an armory for the National Guard of the District of Columbia, at a cost of not to exceed $1,750,000, upon the site bounded by B Street north, B Street south, Twelfth Street west, and Fourteenth Street west, in accordance with the plans of the commission appointed under the act of Congress approved May 30, 1908 (35 Stat., 540). This commission reported to Congress and submitted plans (H. Doc. 860, 61st Cong., 2d sess.), and the proposed legislation carries into effect the recommendations of this commission. The site recommended by that commission has since been set aside for other purposes and is no longer available, but the proposed site is near the armory site recommended in the report of the McMillan Park Commission, and is adjacent to the White House ellipse, so that that tract is available for drill purposes when large formations are desired. The building on the proposed site will not encroach upon the Mall, but will be upon a line with the south building line of the National Museum.

The building recommended by the commission provides accommodations for two full regiments of Infantry, a Cavalry troop, four companies of Coast Artillery, one battery, one company of engineers, one signal corps, hospital corps, brigade staff, etc., and will have a drill hall 243 by 350 feet in area, thus affording ample space for drills in extended order. The architecture of the armory is of classic type and will harmonize with the other Government buildings now built and already planned, and will at the same time be amply safeguarded against the attack of a mob in time of riot, and will afford other advantages, which are pointed out in the report of the Chief of the Militia Division of the War Department in his report for 1911.

"The armory serves a twofold purpose: First, it provides storage facilities, protecting Government property from loss, damage, deterioration; and, second, it provides instruction facilities for the personnel. All instruction, of course, should be progressive, passing from the individual to the largest unit. In theory this idea is carried out by giving certain instruction in the armory, which is then supplemented by summer State encampments and which culminates in the combined field exercises with the Regular Army. The instruction in the armory, beginning with the individual, is in all the minutiæ of a soldier's life which can be given indoor. It is therefore seen that the armory is the basis of the entire instruction, and that if the foundations of this instruction is weak, necessarily the entire structure is unstable. This is exactly the situation which prevails at the present time. The armories generally throughout the country are inadequate and unsuited for their purpose, and in many States there are no armories at all, but buildings or rooms are leased for the purpose. It is gratifying to state, however, that there is an awakening interest in this subject and that in a number of States legislative enactments have been passed looking to the ultimate erection of armories. In this connection, I desire to call attention to the statement of my predecessor relative to the totally unsatisfactory condition of the armory of the District of Columbia. The fact of the National Government, in the one place where it is to provide armories, failing to appreciate the necessity therefor, can not but have a very deleterious effect upon the States."

At the present time the National Guard of the District of Columbia is quartered in eight rented structures, none of which is safeguarded against fire, all of which are inadequate and unsightly, and for which the Government is paying an annual rental of $16,440. Within these buildings is stored Government property estimated to be worth $200,000, and it was stated in the hearings before the committee on the proposed bill that in case of fire in any of these buildings it would be absolutely impossible to arrest it. As indicating the disadvantages under which the National Guard is at present working, we quote from the statement of Col. William E. Harvey, of the Second Infantry, National Guard of the District of Columbia, as follows:

"Some of the men have to double up and put the equipments of the two men in one locker. The standard locker adopted by the Army is 6 feet high, 24 inches wide, and 18 inches deep. The lockers which we have—80 per cent of them—are not half that size. We can not put all of a man's equipment in them. Take, for instance, our equipment of overcoats. We have not any place to put a man's overcoat to keep it, except in packing boxes. We have stored in our main armory stack upon stack of big chests containing the overcoats. If a company is ordered out in winter, a man has to go to the armory superintendent, draw his box of overcoats, give a receipt for it, take it out, and issue it to the men. You can see how absolutely impossible it is to make a quick movement with that kind of accommodations.

"The same is true of blankets. We can not keep individual blankets where they are available. They have to be kept in bulk—boxed up and stored away. The same is true of shelter tents and the field equipment, consisting of haversacks, canteens, and so on. So that we are in a bad way as to equipment; and the first thing that the armory commission took into consideration—the one standard unit which was adopted to work from—was the individual locker for the equipment. We planned it with a view to having the company room large enough to accommodate standard lockers for the entire command."

The danger from fire and its effect upon the National Guard organization was emphasized by Gen. Robert K. Evans, General Staff Corps, United States Army, in the following language:

"It is not extravagant to say that a combination of evil-disposed people could destroy the equipment and armament of the militia very easily in an hour or two by just going around to these wretched hovels that the armament is now stored in, some of which are really inflammable and not much better than chicken coops.

"A mob could burn that equipment and arms up in one night, and if a general condition of unrest or railway disturbance occurred the guard could not get rearmed in several weeks, I think. We would be compelled to get the armament and equipment from the Springfield Arsenal, or one at Rock Island, out there on the Mississippi River, so that your guard, just because of the inflammable nature of the buildings where the equipment is stored, would be put out of business."

The necessity for adequate armory facilities in the District of Columbia is emphasized in the report of the War Department, which is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 23, 1912.

CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith Senate bill No. 6734.

1. The National Guard of the District of Columbia at present consists of the following organizations: First Infantry, of 12 companies; Second Infantry, of 11 companies; First Separate Battalion, of 4 companies; First Battery Field Artillery; Company A, Signal Corps (field company); 1 ambulance company, Hospital Corps, which are provided with armory facilities as follows:

At the Center Market, Pennsylvania Avenue, between Seventh and Ninth Streets: Ten companies of the Second Infantry, eight companies of the First Infantry, one company (ambulance) Hospital Corps.

At the Oyster Building, corner Pennsylvania Avenue and Ninth Street: Four companies (First Battalion, First Infantry).

At Twelfth and U Streets NW.: Four companies (First Separate Battalion).

At Y. M. C. A. Building: One company (Company K, Second Infantry).

At 473 Missouri Avenue NW.: First Battery Field Artillery; Company A, Signal Corps.

At 469 Missouri Avenue NW.: Storehouse for quartermaster and ordnance supplies.

At 621 B Street NW.: Storehouse for subsistence property.

These places are rented.

2. These armories are entirely inadequate and unsuitable in the following particulars:

They are small and are now badly crowded with all of the organizations below the minimum authorized strength. Were the organizations recruited to the minimum authorized strength, the armories could not accommodate the guard at all.

The storage space is entirely inadequate and in many cases insecure, which results in much damage and loss to the Government property.

The Center Market, where most of the organizations are quartered above the market, is an old building, the plan of which is not at all suitable. It smells of bad odors from the market below and the gases from an ice plant in the building and is most unattractive in its surroundings, plan, and condition of repair, due to its age.

The Oyster Building, where the First Battalion of the First Infantry is quartered, is even less suitable than the Center Market Armory.

3. An armory serves a twofold purpose. First, it provides storage facilities, protecting Government property from loss, damage, or deterioration, and, second, it provides instructional facilities for the personnel. The instruction of the individual begins in the armory and is in all the minutia of the soldier's life which can be given indoors. This instruction in the armory is then supplemented by summer State encampments, and culminates in the combined field exercises with the Regular Army. It is therefore seen that the armory is the basis of the entire instruction, and that if the foundation of this instruction is weak necessarily the entire structure is unstable. Acknowledging these facts, most of the States are now providing armory facilities. The National Guard of the District of Columbia is essentially a Federal force, having been created under an act of Congress and having the President as the commander in chief. An adequate armory provision is therefore the duty of the Federal Government.

4. Recognizing these facts, Congress appointed a commission, consisting of the Assistant Secretary of War, the general commanding the Militia of the District of Columbia, the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, Washington, and the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, to cause plans and estimates to be prepared for a suitable armory. This commission made its report, which is published in the Sixty-first Congress, second session, House of Representatives Document No. 860. It is believed that the armory recommended therein is suitable, and its erection is urgently recommended.

5. Not only is a suitable armory needed for the protection of the Federal equipment stored therein, and for the instruction of the District Guard itself, but also such armory would serve as a model for the States, as many militia authorities visit this city, and the inspection of such an armory would enable them to obtain correct ideas and thus facilitate the work generally throughout the States of securing model armories.

ROBERT SHAW OLIVER,
Assistant Secretary of War.

The following extracts from the reports of officers of the United States Army show the armory facilities for the District of Columbia National Guard:

"Armory facilities are inadequate and the guard labors under many disadvantages for this reason." (Annual Report on the Organized Militia of the United States, 1905, p. 112.)

Maj. Lloyd M. Brett, First Cavalry, United States Army:

"The buildings now in use as armories are unsuitable and inadequate. Within them public and private property is insecure and they do not offer proper facilities for military work. They are the best accommodations that can be secured in the District.

"When the Congress of the United States passed the militia act of 1903 it assigned to the National Guard of the country an important place among its military forces, and the National Guard will have to work hard to realize expectations. It would appear to be the part of wisdom for the General Government to set the example to the States by housing the National Guard of the District of Columbia, for the maintenance of which it alone appropriates the funds, in an armory that will stand the scrutiny of the many visiting guardsmen and that will serve as a model for the States to follow." (Annual Report on the Organized Militia of the United States, 1906, p. 148.)

Maj. Lloyd M. Brett, First Cavalry, United States Army:

"A suitable armory continues to be the crying need of the National Guard of the District of Columbia. A bill for such a structure is again before Congress and has the earnest support of the War Department. Congress has in many ways expressed itself unequivocally as favoring the proper support by the Federal Government of an efficient Organized Militia. No troops have shown themselves more deserving of encouragement than those in the District of Columbia, and it is believed that Congress will come to their relief as soon as it is realized that they have no fit place in which to do the military work necessary to qualify them for their country's service." (Annual Report on the Organized Militia of the United States, 1908, p. 188.)

Maj. S. L. Faison, Twenty-fourth Infantry, United States Army, reports, in connection with annual inspection of 1910:

* * * * * * *

"The companies of the First and Second Regiments, except Company K of the Second Infantry, each has an office and a very small storeroom over the cold-storage plant at Center Market. The lockers of the men are in the smaller of these rooms and a closet of about 6 feet square is cut off in the latter and serves as a storeroom for company property not actually issued to the men.

"The lockers of the men are placed one above the other and are about 2 feet wide. Fumes of escaping ammonia rust everything in the way of metal unless it be constantly covered with a thick coating of oil. All of the men of any one company can not dress or undress at the same time.

"The companies of these two regiments assemble weekly by battalion for instruction and are assembled in one large hall in the same building. There is just barely room for the battalion at full strength to stand in line in this hall. When in column the companies stretch almost entirely across the whole width of the hall. Under such trying, not to say demoralizing, conditions it is surprising that the companies present as brave a front as was observed. An armory built on modern plans would put new life and hope into this body of men, and it is urgently recommended that immediate steps be taken to provide one."

Incidentally, the proposed armory building will furnish a hall suitable in every way for the inaugural ball which is held every four years, and which has been heretofore held in the Pension Office, at a cost of about $50,000 for the preparations which are necessary, and with the suspension of public business in that building for several days.

This matter has been before Congress for a number of years, and the history of prior legislation relating to it, together with other valuable information, is contained in the following memorandum which was filed with the committee:

MEMORANDUM RELATIVE TO SENATE BILL 6734.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of War to enter into contracts for the construction of an armory building for the National Guard of the District of Columbia in accordance with plans submitted by the commission created by the act of Congress approved May 30, 1908 (35 Stat. L., 540), or such modified plans as may be approved by the Secretary of War and said commission, to bring it within the limit of cost of $1,750,000. Fifty thousand dollars is made available for the preparation of detailed plans and for starting work on the foundations. It dedicates the northern part of the Mall, between Twelfth and Fourteenth Streets, for this purpose, and provides that the construction of the building shall be under the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, and that the plans shall be approved by the Secretary of War and the commission authorized by the act of May 30, 1908.

PRIOR ACTION.

Bill H. R. 21897, Sixtieth Congress, first session, as it passed the House of Representatives May 12, 1908, contained the following provision:

"SEC. 17. That the northerly portion of the Government reservation bounded by B Street north, B Street south, Seventh Street west, and Sixth Street west, in the District of Columbia, known as Armory Square, comprising that portion of said square north of a line established for the south front of the buildings for the new National Museum and the new Department of Agriculture, be, and is hereby, selected and dedicated as a site for an armory for the National Guard of the District of Columbia, after the removal of the buildings and tracks of the Baltimore & Potomac Railroad Co. from said square.

"That a commission consisting of the Assistant Secretary of War, the general commanding the militia of the District of Columbia, and the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds, be, and is hereby, created, which shall cause plans and estimates to be prepared for a suitable armory for the National Guard of the District of Columbia, and report the estimated cost thereof to the Congress: Provided, That such plans and estimates be prepared under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"And for the expense of said commission a sum not to exceed $2,500 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended on vouchers approved by the chairman of said commission."

The first paragraph of section 17 dedicating the site was stricken out in the Senate and the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds was added to the commission, and in that form it became a law as the act of May 30, 1908 (35 Stat. L., 540).

On April 30, 1910, the commission created by said act made its report, submitting the plans which had been prepared for the armory by Tracy, Swartwout & Litchfield, architects, and was printed as House Document No. 860, Sixty-first Congress, second session. This report shows that the commission had the plans prepared with the idea of locating the building on the same site that the House of Representatives dedicated for that purpose, namely, the site of the old Pennsylvania Railroad Station on the north half of the Mall between Sixth and Seventh Streets. The commission says:

"As the National Guard of the District of Columbia is a Federal organization exclusively under the control of the War Department, it is presumed that the armory will be a public building under the charge and control of that department, and therefore available for the use of United States troops and for the storage of military supplies in case of war, riot, or other emergency. This possible use has been borne in mind in the planning of the building."

The plans of the building have been referred to the Fine Arts Commission and have been approved by them with some suggested modifications, and the bill is drawn so that the views expressed by the Fine Arts Commission can be met.

NEED OF AN ARMORY.

The National Guard of the District of Columbia is a Federal force created by the act of Congress approved March 1, 1889 (25 Stat. L., 774), and the act of February 18, 1909 (35 Stat. L., 629). The President of the United States is its commander in chief, and it is under the immediate supervision of the War Department. For a quarter of a century it has struggled along without any proper provision being made for housing it. It has been quartered in rented buildings of various sorts, none of which have afforded the requisite facilities for training the troops and caring for the equipment which is property of the United States.

The entire unsatisfactory and even descreditable accommodations for this organization have been commented upon year after year by the inspecting officers of the United States. A personal inspection of the buildings discloses the fact that these reports are not exaggerated, but are well founded in fact.

The organization at the present time is scattered about the city in eight different buildings, none of which are fireproof and none of which afford enough room for the keeping of the equipment. Some of the buildings have no provision at all for drilling the troops, and the troops are compelled to drill in the streets. For these unsatisfactory, uninviting, and inadequate buildings an annual rental of $16,440 is paid.

Notwithstanding the lack of armory facilities, the National Guard of the District of Columbia has kept up a force which has worked diligently to conform to the requirements of the War Department at a very great sacrifice on the part of the officers and men, who have devoted their time and energy and in many instances money to promoting the welfare of the organization and bringing it to a point where it could be considered as efficient.

Since 1887 about 33,000 individuals, officers and men, have served in this organization. The training which they have received in some instances has been thorough and others not, but all of them have received some instruction which would be valuable in the event that the United States was forced to call for a large force of volunteers. The value of this military training may be very great to the country in time of stress.

At the outbreak of the Spanish War the entire National Guard volunteered and one regiment was permitted to enter the service. It served creditably in Cuba, and was present in the trenches when Santiago surrendered. In addition to this regiment it furnished officers and men to some of the so-called "immune" regiments and to the United States Volunteer Engineers, and during the Philippine insurrection it furnished many officers and men to the United States volunteers organized for service in the Philippines.

At the present time there are more than 25 officers in the United States Army serving there creditably, who received early military training in the District of Columbia National Guard. One of them has been awarded the congressional medal of honor for distinguished gallantry, and two of them have been selected to captain the Army Infantry team in the great rifle competitions.

Past duty well done, as well as future activity in the training of citizens to defend the flag in time of national danger, justifies the expenditure for a complete armory in the District of Columbia—one which will adequately provide for this brigade of troops and serve as a model to the State organizations.

The United States has not established a precisely formulated military policy, but it can be said that in so far as public sentiment is expressed in the halls of Congress, it is committed to the plan of keeping a relatively small but highly efficient Regular Army and relying upon the militia and volunteers for national defense. Realizing the futility of relying upon unorganized and untrained men who constitute the militia in its broad sense, Congress has, by the acts of January 21, 1903 (32 Stat. L., 775), and May 27, 1908 (35 Stat. L., 399), undertaken to promote the efficiency of the Organized Militia or National Guard of the several States, and to bring it into one uniform and homogeneous mass to supplement the Regular Army as our first line of defense. The importance of the National Guard organizations and of this legislation is apparent from the following extract from the report of the then Secretary of War, Mr. ROOT, for 1903:

"Of equal importance with the General Staff act in its relation to the general military efficiency of the country is the act to promote the efficiency of the militia, approved January 21, 1903, supplemented by an appropriation of $2,000,000 in the Army appropriation act of March 2, 1903. A copy of the statutes is annexed hereto as Appendix F. The militia act had its origin in an agreement between the Regular Army, represented by the War Department and the National Guards of the States, represented by a convention which met in Washington in January, 1902, upon the main and fundamental provisions necessary to give vitality and effectiveness to our militia system. Upon the presentation of these provisions to Congress the Committee on Militia of the House took up the subject with great public spirit and industry and on that basis wrought out a bill which, with but few changes, was passed and approved in the form of the present act. The act proceeds upon the following ideas:

"That whenever the United States becomes involved in war the Regular Army will form but a small part of its armed force; and the country must also rely, for immediate and special exigencies, upon militia; and for service going beyond the proper limits of militia duty, upon volunteers.

"That it is of vital importance to have a trained force of militia ready for instant service when called upon and also to have a large number of citizens sufficiently instructed and exercised in the art of war to organize, train, and command volunteer forces.

"That the best way for the National Government to secure both these requisites is by turning to the National Guards of the States, which have grown up as State organizations intended for State purposes, but are composed of citizens liable to be called upon by the National Government for military duty, and willing to devote a considerable part of their time to fitting themselves for the performance of that duty.

"That, without at all interfering with the services of these organizations to their respective States in time of peace, they can be treated as a national militia to be called into the service of the United States in time of war; and that it is for the interests of the National Government to make these organizations as effective as possible, having in view their prospective national service as militia and their immediate service as the school of the national volunteer soldier."

Experience has shown that adequate armories are a prime necessity to these National Guard forces, and it is so recognized by the War Department, which has made great efforts to prevail upon the State organizations to provide themselves with the proper armory facilities. Upon this subject the Military Secretary has reported:

"The duty imposed upon the governors of the States and Territories by section 1661, Revised Statutes, as amended, and by the militia act of January 21, 1903, of accounting for public property issued under authority thereof, presented immediately the question of providing adequate facilities for the storage and protection of such property.

"Diligent inquiry has developed the fact that, while in the larger cities of the more populous States there are buildings excellently adapted to the purposes for which they are designed and used, there is in general a lamentable lack of proper armory accommodations in the smaller cities and villages.

"This is an evil which can be remedied only by liberal appropriations by the States and Territories or by private contributions. The department is encouraged to hope that the State and local authorities are awakening to the importance of this subject; and it is known that in many instances where armory facilities have been found palpably deficient temporary accommodations have already been provided, with the ultimate object of supplanting these makeshifts by substantial structures owned by the State or by the bodies corporate of the organizations themselves. In mitigation of any blame that may be attached to the military organizations, it is to be remarked that the most convenient and in every respect the most suitable armories are those owned by such organizations, constructed from funds raised by private subscriptions and practically without State aid.

"Experience has demonstrated that there is no element more effective in promoting the organization of National Guard companies and in sustaining the interest of their members, thus contributing to their efficiency as component parts of the National Guard, than the providing of attractive and suitable buildings for their accommodations and the safe storage of their supplies and equipment."

The Chief of the Militia Division of the War Department, in his report for 1909, says:

"Much difficulty is met in the matter of armory instruction, due to the fact that in many of the States suitable armory facilities are not provided. In this connection, attention is invited to the quotations from the reports of officers submitted hereinafter in this report, which show, in detail, in the several States and Territories, the unsatisfactory status of the armory question. The policy of the War Department in reference to this is that inasmuch as the United States issues to the States and Territories valuable armament, equipment, and military stores for the Organized Militia, the latter should provide adequate and secure storage facilities for these stores, and equally adequate facilities for drilling and conducting the training of the troops under cover. Some of the States have been fully cognizant of their obligations in regard to armories and have provided ample facilities both for storage and training. The example of these States is little by little beginning to have effect in other States. It is hoped this movement will proceed more rapidly and progressively accomplish a satisfactory solution of this difficult problem."

In his report for 1911 he says:

"The armory serves a twofold purpose: First, it provides storage facilities, protecting Government property from loss, damage, deterioration; and second, it provides instruction facilities for the personnel. All instruction, of course, should be progressive, passing from the individual to the largest unit. In theory this idea is carried out by giving certain instruction in the armory, which is then supplemented by summer State encampments, and which culminates in the combined field exercises with the Regular Army. The instruction in the armory, beginning with the individual, is in all the minutiæ of a soldier's life which can be given indoor. It is therefore seen that the armory is the basis of the entire instruction, and that if the foundations of this instruction is weak, necessarily the entire structure is unstable. This is exactly the situation which prevails at the present time. The armories generally throughout the country are inadequate and unsuited for their purpose, and in many States there are no armories at all, but buildings or rooms are leased for the purpose. It is gratifying to state, however, that there is an awakening interest in this subject, and that in a number of States legislative enactments have been passed looking to the ultimate erection of armories. In this connection, I desire to call attention to the statement of my predecessor relative to the totally unsatisfactory condition of the armory of the District of Columbia. The fact of the National Government, in the one place where it is to provide armories, failing to appreciate the necessity therefor can not but have a very deleterious effect upon the States."

If the United States is to rely in large part upon the militia; if the militia of the several States is maintained and trained to the standard of efficiency which the military authorities of the United States deem necessary; if, as experience has shown, adequate armories are an absolute necessity in that maintenance and training, it would would seem the part of wisdom on the part of the Federal Government to supply its own Organized Militia in the District of Columbia, which is within the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress, with an armory which will be a model in every way and which can stand as an object lesson to the many State national guardsmen who visit the National Capital, that they may take home with them ideas as to what is desirable in armory construction.

THE EXAMPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

New York has demonstrated the difference between a wise and liberal policy and the "penny-wise, pound-foolish" policy adopted in some places. She has treated her militia seriously, provided for it thoroughly, going on the idea that what is worth doing is worth doing right. Long ago she decided that her soldiers should be quartered in buildings owned by the State or county, and not rented from individuals or corporations. She built armories, handsome, commodious, well-planned structures, and the result of this wisdom is shown in the fine organizations of citizen soldiery. She maintains an organization of 963 commissioned officers and 13,688 enlisted men, a total of 14,651 soldiers, an entire division.

She maintains 13 regimental armories, 4 battalion armories, 3 two-company armories, 2 armories for one company and one troop, 4 armories for mounted troops, 2 armories for the signal companies, 31 armories for separate companies, and 3 armories for the Naval Militia, in all 59 armories, of which but 1 is a rented building. The rest are owned by the public, with the exception of one building, which is owned by the organization itself.

From the report of the commission appointed pursuant to chapter 261 of the laws of 1907 to inquire into the conditions of the National Guard of New York in 1908, the following detailed information relative to New York armories is taken (pp. 214, 125):

The report of the New York commission, above quoted (p. 110), shows that the cost of the Sixty-fifth Regiment Armory at Buffalo to date of report was:

Building and equipment	$1,154,316.92
Cost of site	220,000.00
Total	1,374,316.92

The new armory provided for the Eighth Artillery district of New York is to cost $1,286,500. (Report of Armory Board, New York City, 1911, p. 41.)

The armory of the Seventh Regiment has recently been enlarged and remodeled to meet the requirement of the War Department as to 12 companies to the regiment instead of 10, and the city has expended on this $382,209.99. (Ib., p. 40.)

The following details will give an idea as to the space provided in some of the armories in New York for single regiments:

Regiments.	Location.	Size of lot.	Size of drill hall.
		Feet.	Feet.
Sixty-fifth	Buffalo	578 by 780	336 by 240
Seventy-fourth	do	256 by 624	236 by 309
Forty-seventh	Brooklyn	211 by 623	197 by 300
Twenty-third	do	219 by 501	197 by 297
Seventh	New York	200 by 400	200 by 300
Eighth	New York (old building)	200 by 300	200 by 200
Do	New York (new building)

This last-mentioned armory is being built for the eighth artillery district of New York, and has been reported as being the largest armory constructed to date. Its cost is over $1,000,000.

New York is not the only State which has followed the plan of providing public buildings in preference to rented quarters, but detailed information relative to other States is not as complete.

Massachusetts has a number of fine armories.

Connecticut has recently completed a very fine regimental armory at Hartford, having as much space in it as some of the largest armories above referred to.

Rhode Island has within the past few years erected at Providence a very fine structure, making provision for a regiment of Coast Artillery and a battery of Field Artillery. The building alone cost $488,000. The dimensions are 381 by 167. It contains two drill halls, one 233 by 167 feet and the other 231 by 89 feet.

Pennsylvania has a number of fine armories, and is engaged at the present time in a progressive policy of building armories. A very fine armory has recently been erected at Pittsburgh for the Eighteenth Regiment, the details of which are not at hand.

Maryland: The armory of the Fifth Regiment at Baltimore is a large and commodious structure. The site cost $125,000. The building cost $350,000. The size of the building is 336 by 300. The drill hall 300 by 200.

PLANS SUBMITTED BY THE ARMORY COMMISSION.

The plans submitted make provision for a brigade of practically three regiments, namely, two regiments of Infantry, a battalion of Coast Artillery, a signal company, an engineer company, ambulance company, a troop of Cavalry, and a battery of Field Artillery. The organization is equal to that housed in three of the New York regimental armories. The best military administration can be obtained where the entire organization is together, as well as greater economy in the construction of the building and the better safeguarding of public property.

The plans as prepared call for a building 480 by 380, as no larger building could be erected on the site between Sixth and Seventh Streets. The main drill hall is 243 by 350 feet. In addition to this, there is a small drill hall provided for mounted troops. The following are some of the features of the building:

In the basement there are storage rooms for the Engineer and Signal Corps, ambulance and hospital, first regiment, second regiment, and for the general supplies of the brigade. A room for the armorer, a magazine, a reloading room, a swimming pool, gymnasium shower bath, the riding hall, and mechanical plant, lavatories, etc.; also a shooting gallery, gun-wagon park wherein to keep the wheeled transportation.

On the main floor is the great drill hall above referred to, and at each end locker rooms for 12 companies of Infantry. The fixed unit which was worked upon was the standard locker which has been designed by the Army to accommodate a soldier's equipment. It is planned to have enough of these to equip a company at war strength. The District of Columbia is the only National Guard organization having provision for a reserve, and it is planned to keep the equipment for the reserve in the individual lockers, where it will be immediately available. On this floor also is the model room for the Coast Artillery Corps, lockers for the Engineer and Signal Corps, and an examining room, a room for the surgeons, a guardroom, a room for the superintendent, an issue room, and a room for clothing storage, and a tailor shop.

On the next floor will be the company room for 12 companies of Infantry, 4 Coast Artillery, the necessary office rooms for the regimental and brigade administration, and the gymnasium.

On the next floor are two company drill rooms, a squad drill room, practice room for the band, instruction room, a dispensary and ward, lyceum, a memorial hall, kitchen and dining room, library, billiard room, bowling alleys, boxing and fencing rooms.

All of these rooms will present features which are important. It is contemplated that field ranges will be set up in the kitchen, where the cooks can be taught how to prepare the field rations. A number of the cooks of the District of Columbia National Guard have in times past attended the Army Cooking School at the Washington Barracks, and it is plain that there is no one element of military training more important than to have enlisted men trained to cook for their companies.

The memorial hall is intended as a place where patriotic societies, as well as the Grand Army of the Republic, Loyal Legion, etc., can deposit their relics.

The drill hall will afford an ample place in which to hold the inaugural balls, which for many years past have been held in the Pension Office Building at a cost to the Government which has been estimated as high as $50,000, for it involves the closing of the office to business for a week or 10 days, and the loss in clerk hire is very great.

The estimated cost is not excessive when it is taken into consideration that the building is to house virtually three regiments, and must architecturally conform to the scheme for the public buildings of Washington. By reference to the cost of armories erected for single regiments, where no special attention has been paid to the architectural features of the exterior, it is plain that this sum is not too large for the erection of a proper building.

PARK COMMISSION PLANS.

The plans of the Park Commission, Senate Report No. 156, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, show that an armory for the District of Columbia Militia was one of the public buildings which the commission planned for. On the subject of the location of public buildings the commission reported:

"The location of public buildings has received the very careful consideration of the commission. In general terms, their conclusions are * * *

"Fourth. That the northern side of the Mall may properly be used by museum and other buildings containing collections in which the public generally is interested, but not by department buildings.

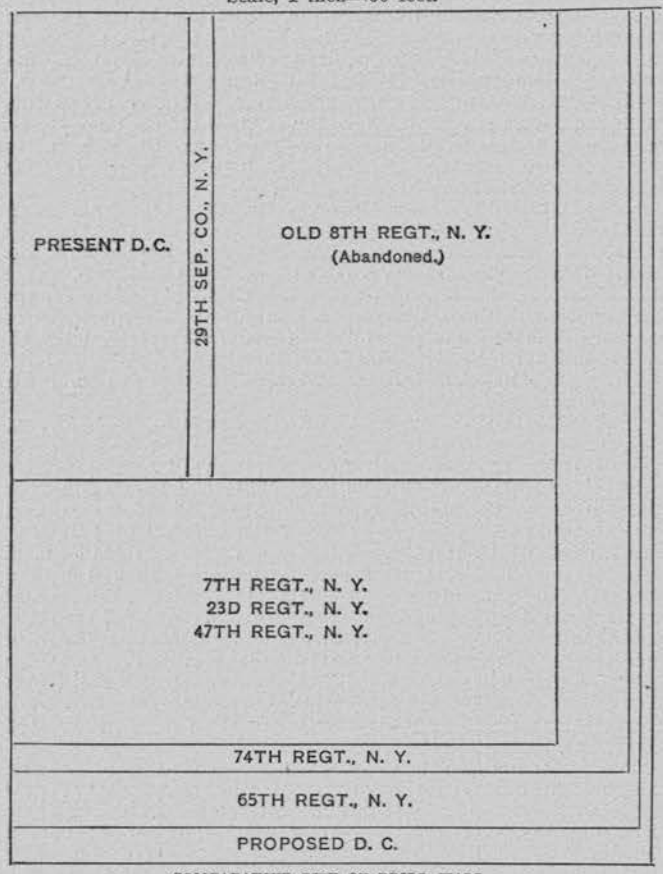
"Fifth. That the space between Pennsylvania Avenue and the Mall should be occupied by the District Building, the Hall of Records, a modern market, and armory for the District Militia, and structures of like character" (pp. 28, 29, of the Report of the Park Commission).

Speaking of the area south of Pennsylvania Avenue, the commission says:

"Within the same general area should be constructed an armory sufficient in size to accommodate the brigade of District Militia; and since the inauguration of the President of the United States is regarded as a municipal and not as a national function, the armory should be of a character to accommodate the inaugural balls now given in the Pension Bureau to the disturbance of public business." (Ib., p. 70.)

On the diagram showing sites for future public buildings, printed in the report facing page 28, is shown a long building occupying the space from Pennsylvania Avenue to B Street, between Fourteenth and Fifteenth Streets. It is understood that this represents the Park Commission idea as to the location of the District armory. That site, however, has been taken for departmental buildings, namely, for the Department of Commerce and Labor and Department of Justice.

PROPOSED SITE.



The proposed site for the armory is on the north side of the Mall, between Twelfth and Fourteenth Streets, north of a line established for the New National Museum Building. This tract is immediately adjacent to the one suggested by the Park Commission for the armory. The Park Commission plans call for a large building on this site. It is at present occupied by greenhouses and some sort of a machine shop. The erection of an armory on this site fully conforms to the views expressed by the Park Commission and is in harmony with those plans.

The building which was designed pursuant to the act of May 30, 1908, contemplated putting the building five squares east of this on the north side of the Mall between Sixth and Seventh Streets, but that site has been dedicated by the Senate for the erection of the George Washington Memorial. The site proposed in the pending bill, while not quite so accessible, is larger, and the grounds themselves will adapt themselves better to the erection of an armory than would the Sixth Street site. The Park Commission plans call for the erection of a very large building on this site, and the plans have been prepared for the armory with a view to conforming fully to the views of the Park Commission as to the type of building to be erected.

GOVERNMENT RENTALS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 22) to appoint a joint special committee of the Congress to investigate rentals paid by the Government and the District of Columbia was considered by unanimous consent.

The concurrent resolution was reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the words "District of Columbia," to insert: "with the view of ascertaining by what bureaus, departments, and individual representatives thereof contracts for these rentals were made, and with the view of ascertaining further how the rents paid by the Government for premises in the District of Columbia compare with rents previously or subsequently paid for the same or for similar premises," so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint special committee of the two Houses of Congress is hereby created, to be composed of three Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the Presiding Officer thereof, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker thereof; and any vacancy on the committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. The said committee is hereby empowered and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to sit during the sessions or recess of Congress, to carefully inquire into the possibility of better utilizing space in the several departments of the General Government and the District of Columbia, and also to make a thorough investigation of the rentals paid by the Government and the District of Columbia, with the view of ascertaining by what bureaus, departments, and individual representatives thereof contracts for these rentals were made, and with the view of ascertaining further how the rents paid by the Government for premises in the District of Columbia compare with rents previously or subsequently paid for the same or for similar premises. Said committee is authorized to employ a stenographer and such other assistants as may be necessary, and shall conclude its investigation and report to the Sixty-third Congress the result thereof, together with its recommendations concerning such legislation, if any, as may be advisable. The expenses incurred by said committee shall be paid equally out of the contingent funds of the Senate and the House of Representatives upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate and of the Committee on Accounts of the House of Representatives, respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask why this resolution went to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate? The proposed committee being a joint committee, will the expenses be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; the expenses will be paid jointly from the contingent funds of the two Houses.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF "TITANIC" INVESTIGATION.

The resolution (S. Res. 327) to reimburse the Sergeant at Arms for expenses incurred in bringing the officers and crew of the White Star liner Titanic from New York to Washington, and care while in Washington in attendance upon the subcommittee, was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate be reimbursed, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, an amount not to exceed $566.71 additional expenses necessarily incurred by order of the subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce in bringing the officers and crew of the White Star liner Titanic from New York to Washington, and care while in Washington in attendance upon said committee.

HEARINGS, COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

The resolution (S. Res. 326) authorizing the Committee on Naval Affairs to employ a stenographer to report hearings on bills or other matters pending before the committee was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time as may be necessary to report such hearings as may be had on bills or other matters pending before said committee during the Sixty-second Congress, and to have the same printed for its use; and that such stenographer be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

HEARINGS, COMMITTEE ON PACIFIC ISLANDS AND PORTO RICO.

The resolution (S. Res. 317) authorizing the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico to employ a stenographer to report hearings on bills and other matters pending before the committee was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time, as may be necessary, to report such hearings as may be had on bills or other matters pending before said committee during the Sixty-second Congress, and to have the same printed for its use; and that such stenographer be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate. This resolution to take effect from the beginning of the present session.

PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION CO.

The bill (H. R. 22204) granting a right of way to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. across the Fort Mason Military Reservation in California was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in section 1, page 1, line 4, after the word "Company," to insert "or such successors or assigns as may be approved by the Secretary of War," so as to make the section read:

That the consent of the United States is hereby given the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co., or such successors or assigns as may be approved by the Secretary of War, to locate, construct, maintain, and operate a railroad and tunnel upon and across the property belonging to the United States at Fort Mason, in the State of California, upon such location and under such regulations as shall be approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill why is that provision inserted which limits the right of succession to those who may be approved by the Secretary of War?

Mr. BRISTOW. This exposition company will probably cease to exist after the exposition is over; but the tunnel will be a permanent structure, running to the docks of the Government there.

The War Department is anxious to have such a tunnel and railroad, and the exposition company desires their construction. The amendment is simply to provide for their continuance under some possession after the exposition ceases to exist. Any transfer that might be made will be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, and then the right is reserved to repeal the act at any time if Congress shall so desire, so that I think the Government is amply protected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act granting a right of way to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co., or such successors or assigns as may be approved by the Secretary of War, across the Fort Mason Military Reservation in California."

STATISTICS OF COTTON.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. Owing to the absence of the chairman of the Committee on the Census, I have been requested by the members of the committee to report favorably the bill (H. R. 19403) authorizing the Director of the Census to collect and publish statistics of cotton. I call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the bill which has just been reported is quite similar to a bill which the Senate has already passed. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry had before them the bill which the Senate passed, and I believe were not aware of the fact that the House had already passed a similar bill, that it was in the Senate and was pending before the Census Committee. Our lack of information on the subject was due to the fact that the Census Committee had not had a meeting this year. The bill passed by the House provides that the Director of the Census shall furnish the Bureau of Statistics, Department of Agriculture, such information as he can gather with reference to the volume of cotton in existence and requires that facts covering the volume of cotton on hand be published at the same time crop reports are published with reference to the new crop.

The bill carries no appropriation. It has been submitted to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], who has taken it up with the manufacturers. It originated with the cotton growers, but the Senator from Rhode Island has taken it up with the manufacturers, and they have suggested an amendment which the committee reports and to which I am prepared to agree. The amendment limits the frequency of the reports from the manufacturers to quarterly periods. This being the situation with reference to the bill, I do not think there will be any objection to it; and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Census with an amendment, in section 2, page 2, line 6, after the word "hand," to insert "and"; and in line 7, after the word "spindles," to insert "shall be ascertained quarterly in each year," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the statistics of the quantity of cotton ginned shall show the quantity ginned from each crop prior to September 1, September 25, October 18, November 1, November 14, December 1, December 13, January 1, January 16, and March 1, and shall be published as soon as possible after these respective dates. The quantity of cotton consumed in manufacturing establishments, the quantity of baled cotton on hand, and the number of active consuming cotton spindles shall be ascertained quarterly in each year, and the statistics of cotton imported and exported shall relate to each calendar month, and shall be published as soon as possible after the close of the month. Each report published by the Bureau of the Census of the quantity of cotton ginned shall carry with it the latest available statistics concerning the quantity of cotton consumed, stocks of baled cotton on hand, the number of cotton-consuming spindles, and the quantity of cotton imported and exported. All of these publications containing statistics of cotton shall be mailed by the Director of the Census to all cotton ginners, cotton manufacturers, and cotton warehousemen, and to all daily newspapers throughout the United States. The Director of the Census shall furnish to the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Agriculture, immediately prior to the publication of each report of that bureau regarding the cotton crop, the latest available statistics hereinbefore mentioned, and the said Bureau of Statistics shall publish the same in connection with each of its reports concerning cotton.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ANTI-INJUNCTION BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will withhold the motion, and yield to the Senator.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I renew my motion to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from the further consideration of House bill 23635.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from New Jersey, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. To discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 23635) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, had I known the purpose of the genial Senator from New Jersey, I would not have yielded, because, manifestly, his motion will adjourn the Senate, and we shall lose an executive session, which we ought really to have; but, of course, I did yield.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, this matter has been hanging now for three or four days. I could have pressed my motion this morning, which would perhaps have resulted in no quorum and discontinued all legislation for the day; but, yielding to the suggestion made by Senators upon the other side, I deferred my motion until this time. I feel, however, that in justice to the demand that is behind this great question I should press it at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have, of course, no fault to find with the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is before the Senate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I want to make a very brief statement about this matter. This is what is known as the anti-injunction bill. It originated in the House, having been introduced by Mr. CLAYTON, and passed the House, I think, on the 15th of last month—a month ago. It came to the Senate—I do not remember the particular day—and was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It was recognized as an exceedingly important measure and was referred to a subcommittee of five, of which I am a member. The other members of the committee are the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], who is chairman of the subcommittee; the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON].

The subcommittee has endeavored to have meetings, and has held a number of meetings for the purpose of hearing those who were either opposed to or in favor of the bill; and thus far we have heard quite a large number of persons. During the last three or four days we have held some hearings, but at no meeting have we been able to secure a quorum of the subcommittee. But, notwithstanding that, we have proceeded with the hearings. I personally sat one whole afternoon alone hearing the arguments presented. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] sat another afternoon alone because I could not be present.

The motion to discharge the committee comes from the minority side of the Chamber. The two minority members of the committee have not been able to be present with us at all. I do not complain about that, because I know they have been engaged elsewhere and have been necessarily absent. We all know that at this particular period it is exceedingly difficult to get the members of any committee together, and I think a motion of this kind ought not to be pressed at the present time.

The subcommittee intends to go ahead with this matter just as rapidly as possible, and intends to make its report to the full committee, and I hope the full committee will act upon it and report to the Senate before the session adjourns.

Mr. President, the measure is an exceedingly important one. It involves substantial and vital changes in existing law. There are a very large number of persons in the United States who are interested in it; a very large number who are insisting upon its adoption and another very large number who are very much opposed to the measure; and a measure of such far-reaching importance ought to be given due consideration. It ought not to be hurried through without careful consideration and without giving everybody who is interested, within reasonable limits, an opportunity to present his views.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I have no desire at all to be unreasonable in the proposition, but I do insist that while there is a large element in our population opposed to this bill there is, on the other side, an exceedingly large element in favor of it. This proposition or a similar one has had the indorsement of two Republican Presidents. Such a measure passed the House by an overwhelming majority, and there is a powerful public sentiment behind it; and inasmuch as we will next week simply convene for the purpose of recessing and then convene again for the purpose of recessing, and there is no reasonable probability of a declaration being made on this question one way or the other, I feel that in justice to the demand behind this measure I am justified in pressing this question at the present time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

COAL MINING IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield.

Mr. GORE. When the calendar was under consideration this afternoon Order of Business 645 went over on the objection of the senior Senator from New Hampshire. He has since very kindly assured me that he would not press the objection if the bill came up again.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is correct. I looked for the Senator's colleague, and did not see him, and neither did I see the Senator in the Chamber, and for that reason I asked that the bill go over. I have no objection whatever to its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Oklahoma that there is pending a resolution offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will defer to the Senator from Oklahoma, but I should like a vote on my proposition.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3843) granting to the coal-mining companies in the State of Oklahoma the right to acquire additional acreage adjoining their mine leases, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HEYBURN. Let the bill be read.

Mr. GORE. I should like to say it is a measure which was introduced by my colleague, and in the passage of which he is vitally interested. I do it on his account.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments. The first amendment was, on page 1, line 4, after the words "grant to," to insert "the operator of"; and in line 8, after the word "Oklahoma," to insert "not to exceed in any case 640 acres of land," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, may grant to the operator of any coal mine or mines in the State of Oklahoma the right to acquire additional acreage from the unleased segregated coal lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, in the State of Oklahoma, not to exceed in any case 640 acres of land.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 4, after the word "faith," to insert "and in only such cases as may be found necessary for the successful administration of such mine," so as to read:

And provided further, That the right to acquire such additional lands shall extend only to coal-mining corporations, individual or individuals actually operating coal mines in said State in good faith, and in only such cases as may be found necessary for the successful administration of such mine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I rise to a point of order. I insist that there is not a quorum present. I ask that the roll be called.

Mr. GALLINGER. That ends both of us.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.
Bacon	Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.
Bristow	Gardner	Myers	Stephenson
Bryan	Gore	Nelson	Sutherland
Catron	Heyburn	Page	Thornton
Culberson	Jones	Pomerene	Wetmore

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Twenty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is not present.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 17, 1912, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 15, 1912.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We come to Thee O God our heavenly Father to renew our vows and consecrate ourselves to Thee, and by the uplift of prayer receive strength for the duties which wait upon us. We realize that whatever else is of value in life character rises superior to all. Help us, therefore, to add day by day to our character until we reach that perfection in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files papers relating to bill H. R. 22346, the same not having been acted upon by the committee to which it was referred.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 25069, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25069) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia last night, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 6, page 112, by striking out "$75,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$179,900."

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, last night at the adjournment I introduced this amendment to strike out, in line 6, page 112, "$75,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$179,900." The situation, Mr. Chairman, is this—and I have no criticism to make of the Committee on Appropriations for cutting this appropriation to $75,000, because in the year 1910–11 the appropriation was for the identical sum that is carried in this particular bill. But on June 30, 1911, this prison had to its credit the sum of $171,449.05. During the current year from 1911 and 1912 up to the present time the Federal prison in Atlanta had expended $226,449 in construction, and at this time they have a balance on hand amounting to $20,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, every gentleman on the floor of this House is interested in this appropriation, because every Member has constituents either in Atlanta or at Leavenworth, and when we are legislating for this prison you are legislating for your own constituents.

Mr. SIMS. Desirable citizens? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. The result is that if this appropriation remains at $75,000 it will be impossible to carry out the provisions of this particular section, because it says that this amount of money "shall become immediately available and to remain available until expended, all of which sum shall be so expended as to give the maximum amount of employment to the inmates of said penitentiary."

Now, the result of this particular amount being carried, and no additional amount, the prisoners at Atlanta could not be worked up to their full capacity for a period longer than four months. I have a statement from the warden and from the Department of Justice. The Attorney General just a few days ago wrote me this letter. Now, this is a matter of importance to the department, and I do not know as much about it as they do, but the Attorney General says under date of June 5, 1912:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 5, 1912.

Hon. WILLIAM S. HOWARD,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. HOWARD: You are very familiar with the condition of things at the Atlanta Penitentiary and the needs of pushing the construction of the new buildings there. We estimated for the next year's work for continuing that construction $179,900; in the sundry civil bill as just reported (p. 112, line 6) that estimate has been reduced to $75,000.

I would be very much obliged for such assistance as you might give in bringing about an increase of that amount. You will find in the printed hearings before the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee in charge of the sundry civil bill, part 2, pages 1448 to 1452, the statement made by the assistant superintendent of prisons as to the needs of construction for the next year.

Faithfully, yours,

GEO. W. WICKERSHAM,
Attorney General.

Now, here are the actual necessities at this prison. The estimate included $61,000 for general construction, which is needed for the purchase of all necessary materials for supervision not otherwise specifically provided for in other items; $4,500 for lumber and other materials for finishing the building and approaches thereto—the hospital building, which is very much needed at Atlanta. This work ought to be pushed to conclusion as rapidly as possible because of the fact that when the estimates were made for 1913 they only had 600 prisoners at Atlanta, and now we have 946 prisoners there, or the daily average of 835, and the hospital is very much needed. The estimate for that building is $28,900.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWARD. That includes all materials necessary for constructing the building, but does not include the amount necessary for furnishing it. At Atlanta they are very much in need of a laundry building. The estimate for that is $20,000. That is a new building, and the amount of the estimate is for material for carrying forward its construction during the coming fiscal year. The residence of the deputy warden is estimated for at $7,000. The construction of that has been commenced. This is for materials and civilian labor for building the deputy warden's residence.

Additions to the power house. The power house was constructed in 1897. They want new boilers, and they need new machinery. It is absolutely essential for the work that is being done at that prison. That is estimated at $45,000. The warden and the Attorney General say that the present power house is inadequate now for the needs of the prison, and they estimate for the cost of installing new boilers and machinery.

Prison dining room, $1,500. The floor there, by the continual use of the prisoners going into their meals and going out, has been worn very much. It is rough and accumulates dirt very rapidly. They need $1,500 for a new floor in the dining room, and that ought to be immediately available. This is to cover the cost of materials for installing a new floor in the dining room. This new floor is absolutely necessary for the health of the prisoners.

This makes an aggregate of $199,900, from which may be deducted $20,000, the available balance on hand at this time. The estimate was submitted, leaving the total necessary appropriation of $179,900. This estimate does not include $61,000 and $64,000 for installing cell fronts and cell plumbing in the new cell blocks.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think that this committee really realizes the importance of making this appropriation available at once. The Atlanta Federal Prison—and I am also informed the same is true of Fort Leavenworth—is, I suppose, the most model prison in the world. The work that is being done by the warden in Atlanta is of the most commendable character. It is really a prison in which the spirit of the law in administering punishment to a man for infraction of the law is being carried out—that is, imprisonment and punishment for the sole purpose of reformation. There are over 30 men in that prison who have life terms to serve, and in 17 years those men have not had even a reprimand for an infraction of the least rule in that prison. The whole system inaugurated by the warden in Atlanta is modern. It is up to date, and he has proven himself to have unusual executive ability, a wonderful control over men, great sympathy for the unfortunate, and we hope that the work of carrying on the construction of this prison in Atlanta will not be retarded by the failure of this committee at this time to make sufficient appropriation for the work to be continued.

I know, as a matter of fact, that the Committee on Appropriations, having a multiplicity of items before them in making up an appropriation bill, can not give to every item thorough consideration, and it is a wonder to me that they do not have more complaints registered by Members as to the amount of appropriations than they do. But I feel they have made this time too small an appropriation for Atlanta. I hope that the gentlemen on the floor and in the committee will vote to give us $179,900. We need it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has again expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is very much mistaken when he says that the committee does not have information about this item.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not make that statement. I complimented the committee on making so few mistakes, and I said I thought this was one of them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me say what I desire to say. I said the gentleman is mistaken when he states that we did not have information about these matters. Here was a prison estimated to cost $500,000. There has been expended upon it already the sum of $1,440,000. A firm of architects, under the same kind of contract that was discussed last evening, has received altogether on account of this work $95,203.18. The building of these two prisons at Atlanta and Leavenworth are two of the most interesting governmental enterprises that have ever been undertaken.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield for a minute there, in respect to the architects?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the gentleman is not interested in the architects.

Mr. HOWARD. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if he did not think that because the architects had gotten these enormous sums of the money instead of its going into the buildings we ought now to have some which we can put into the buildings?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will not the gentleman permit me to proceed? He has had all the time he wished. The history of these two enterprises is very interesting. They were designed to accommodate at first certain military prisoners. They have been changed and enlarged until over $3,000,000 had been expended upon the two prisons, and nobody has yet been able to determine when they are likely to be completed or what the total expenditure upon them is likely to be.

The reason for the change from one prison to another was the necessity of providing the convicts at these prisons with some sort of work to keep them occupied. It was believed by keeping these prisons under construction at such a rate as would enable the convict labor to be utilized to the largest possible extent that not only could the prisons be completed within some reasonable degree of cost, but that thereby one of the very difficult problems in prison management would be solved. The Attorney General, apparently, has an entirely different notion. He seems to imagine that it is necessary to complete these buildings with a great rush, to finish them as quickly as possible, and after that is done we will be confronted with one of the most troublesome problems that occurs in prison management, and that is to find some means of keeping occupied the prisoners. In the year 1912 the appropriation was $75,000; it was $75,000 in 1911; it was $100,000 in the years 1908, 1909, and 1910; it was $80,000 in 1907; $50,000 in 1906; $200,000 in 1905; $60,000 in 1904; $100,000 in 1903. In this bill there is carried $500,000 to enable the Attorney General to care for the convicts of the United States in State prisons and penitentiaries, in so far as there are insufficient accommodations in the Federal penitentiaries. There is no necessity for crowding these prisoners in these two prisons. The intention of the law is not that they should be crowded, and ample means are given to the Department of Justice to properly care for all the convicts of the United States that have to be cared for. It would be unwise, in my opinion, to attempt this work at the speed which the Attorney General now desires. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. HOWARD) there were—ayes 8, noes 22.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "penitentiary," in line 9, page 112, add the following: "Provided, That of the appropriation of $75,000 herein made not exceeding $3,500 shall be paid as compensation for the services of an architect or architects."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BEALL of Texas) there were—ayes 24, noes none.

So the amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

(1) Miscellaneous objects, Department of Justice.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, after line 13, page 112, the following: "Provided, That no part of any appropriation made under this act for the following purposes, namely, conduct of customs cases; defending suits in claims against the United States; detection and prosecution of crimes; enforcement of antitrust laws; suits to set aside conveyances of allotted land, Five Civilized Tribes; enforcement of acts to regulate commerce; for payment of assistants to the Attorney General and to United States district attorneys employed by the Attorney General to aid in special cases; and for payment of such miscellaneous expenditures as may be authorized by the Attorney General in United States courts and their officers shall be used for the payment of any salary, fee, compensation, or allowance in any form whatever to any person who holds any other office, place, position, or appointment under the United States Government, or any department thereof, or who within two years next preceding the date of his appointment, designation, or employment has held any other office, place, position, or appointment under the United States Government or any department thereof."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is subject to the point of order. It is clearly a limitation on the appropriation. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment there are certain abuses which have arisen in connection with the expenditure of these various lump-sum appropriations, and this amendment is intended to correct these abuses and these evils. It is aimed at two practices that prevail to a greater or less degree in the Department of Justice. The one is taking a district attorney or an assistant district attorney who was already drawing a salary from the Government and designating him as a special assistant to the Attorney General, perhaps taking him out of his district and out of his State and giving him large compensation for this additional service. Let me call the attention of the committee to one instance in which that has occurred, and while, perhaps, it is the most flagrant case, yet it typifies the practice that is prevailing.

Marion Erwin for many years was district attorney for the southern district of Georgia. As district attorney of that district he received a salary of $3,500 per year. In 1901 he was appointed special assistant to the Attorney General and given charge of the prosecution of the litigation against Carter, Greene, Gaynor, and others. That employment as special assistant to the Attorney General carried with it a salary of $5,000 per annum, and in addition to that a commission of, I believe, 10 per cent upon the net amounts that might be recovered as a result of that litigation. That employment began in 1901. Mr. Erwin continued to be district attorney for the southern district of Georgia until about April, 1912, and during all that time continued his connection as a special assistant to the Attorney General at the salary that I have named.

Mr. SIMS. And collected both salaries?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. And collected both salaries.

Mr. SIMS. His regular salary as district attorney?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. His regular salary as district attorney of $3,500 a year and this additional salary of $5,000 a year. During most of that time, I think I am justified in saying, the duties of his position as special assistant to the Attorney General required his presence in other places than the district in which he was district attorney.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas have five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, his salary as district attorney for the 11 years amounted to nearly $40,000. His salary as special assistant to the Attorney General for 11 years amounted to $55,000. In addition, he was paid $2,500 for services antedating his regular appointment and was given a large allowance for expenses, and, in addition to that, a commission upon the total collections made by him in the Greene and Gaynor cases. Mr. Erwin received a total of $100,602 cash up to June last year out of the Greene and Gaynor cases, and about $40,000 for his services as district attorney for the southern district of Georgia.

Mr. SIMS. How much of that sum was commission?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I can not tell the gentleman the precise sum, but at that time the commissions paid him were about $25,000.

Mr. SIMS. I thought possibly you had it right there.

Mr. BURLESON. Can the gentleman give us the aggregate salary he received during the 11 years, including his special compensation and the commissions?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. In addition to the amount of $100,602 just named he had received the salary of $3,500 per annum, and estimated that about $20,000 would be due him when certain other property had been disposed of. His employment as special assistant still continues and that of district attorney until about April of this year. For the 11 years' service his total payments will probably exceed $150,000. And while we are on the Greene and Gaynor cases let me call the attention of the Committee to another thing. One Edward I. Johnson was a bank examiner at the time the Greene and Gaynor cases came to the front. He was employed by the Department of Justice as a special accountant at $20 a day and expenses, beginning in 1901. That employment continued at that rate until about 1908, when his allowance was increased to $25 a day and expenses. Of course, I have no desire to reflect upon the services of Mr. Johnson. In all probability they were extremely valuable. The record discloses the fact that he was an unusually industrious and diligent man, because during those many years he worked practically all the Sabbath Days. The Fourth of July found him at work. Thanksgiving Day he labored; he did not observe Christmas Day always or all of the other numerous holidays that Government employees usually observe and respect. Incidentally it might be said that on these holidays when he worked he received his usual allowance of $20 a day and expenses and, later, $25 a day and expenses.

Mr. PUJO. Will the gentleman from Texas yield for a question?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. With pleasure.

Mr. PUJO. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to section 1763 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which reads as follows:

No person who holds an office the salary or annual compensation attached to which amounts to the sum of $2,500 shall receive compensation for discharging the duties of any other office unless expressly authorized by law.

And I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not the employment of these gentlemen in other capacities was in his judgment or not a violation of the section just read from the Revised Statutes of the United States?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL] has expired.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, if it does not trespass too much on the indulgence of the committee, I would like another five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes longer. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I will state to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PUJO] that it was undoubtedly the intention of Congress when it enacted that statute to prevent just such occurrences as we have witnessed in the Erwin case and in a number of other cases. But between the Supreme Court of the United States and the Comptroller of the Treasury what appears to me to be the plain meaning of the statute has been construed away, because they have held that these other appointments did not constitute the appointee's offices, and they held that the law applied only to prevent the holding at the same time by any one individual of two offices and that the appointment as special assistant to the Attorney General was not an office in the meaning of the statute.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. What does the gentleman think of the practice of permitting an officer of the law, whose duties are specified, to resign that position and then afterwards to be employed to do the same service at a greatly increased salary?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I am coming to that proposition. While I am on the Johnson case, I will state that Mr. Johnson received at the time these figures were given, about the middle of last year, for his services in connection with the Greene and Gaynor cases and expenses $126,140.94, and so far as I am advised, the employment of Mr. Johnson in the Greene and Carter cases still continues.

Now, gentlemen, I do not want to have any misunderstanding. I am not seeking to convey the idea that these men have not rendered valuable service. It was an extremely difficult case, and so far as I can judge from the record, these men have prosecuted this case with great diligence and with a considerable degree of success.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. How many years did this litigation run?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. It has continued from about the year 1901 up to the present time.

Mr. CANNON. And it involved litigation in the United States and in Canada, did it not?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. About what was the recovery, finally?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Well, up to June last there had been recovered in cash $273,372.85. In addition to that, certain property and securities were recovered, the total estimated value thereof being $493,963.90.

Mr. CANNON. And the parties were convicted, were they not?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Yes. Carter was convicted by court-martial and Greene and Gaynor by the courts.

Mr. CANNON. I know nothing about the case, except that the newspapers were full of it.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. It was a very celebrated case, and I do not doubt but that these officials used their utmost exertions not only to vindicate the law by convicting the violators of it, but also to make recovery in behalf of the United States. The total expenses of the Carter, Greene, and Gaynor cases up to the time this tabulation was made amounted to $381,387.01. The estimated value of the recoveries was $493,963.90.

But that is getting off, Mr. Chairman, from the latter part of the amendment. The latter part of the amendment is intended to correct another abuse that I think is more flagrant and more unjustifiable than the one to which I called your attention, and that is the practice of men holding positions, such as district attorneys or assistant district attorneys, after it has been developed through their offices or otherwise that the Government has a sufficient basis for a prosecution in some particular case, resigning their positions as district attorneys or as assistant district attorneys, with the salaries that are attached to those positions, and then being immediately reemployed by the Department of Justice to perform the very work that they would have been under obligation to perform had they retained their official positions.

Let me call your attention to some of these cases: Some years ago Mr. McReynolds was serving the Government in some capacity at a salary of $5,000 per annum. On the 1st day of January, 1907, he resigned. On the 1st day of February, 1907, he was reemployed by the Department of Justice at a salary of $16,000 and rendered the same character of service to the Government that he was rendering under his appointment at $5,000 per year.

Mr. Stimson was district attorney of the southern district of New York at a salary of $10,000 per year when the sugar-fraud cases came to the surface. Mr. Stimson resigned his position as district attorney of the southern district of New York and was immediately appointed as a special assistant to the Attorney General. Had he remained district attorney for the southern district of New York it would have been his duty as an official to have performed the very service for the Government that he did perform as a special assistant to the Attorney General. Now, I am willing to assume that the service he rendered was an efficient service, and that it brought substantial returns to the Government of the United States.

Mr. CLINE. What was his salary?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. As district attorney his salary was $10,000 a year. As a special assistant to the Attorney General in prosecuting the sugar-fraud inquiries he received $83,000, of which $69,000 was a fee and $14,000 his expenses.

Mr. SIMS. Covering what time?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Covering probably a year or a year and a half of actual and active service in the prosecution of those cases.

Mr. SIMS. What position does he now occupy?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Stimson is now Secretary of War under the present administration, and he was appointed this special assistant to the Attorney General by the present Attorney General of the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think the most flagrant case is yet to be mentioned. Mr. Winfred T. Denison was assistant to the district attorney for the southern district of New York, Mr. Stimson. As such assistant he received a salary of $4,000 a year, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. On March 27, 1909, Mr. Denison resigned as assistant to the district attorney for the southern district of New York. On March 29, 1909, he was appointed special assistant to the Attorney General, his compensation to be determined by the Attorney General on the completion of service, to assist in conducting investigations into the sugar frauds and prosecutions which might result therefrom in the southern district of New York, eastern district of New York, and New Jersey, with authority to conduct grand-jury proceedings, the very character of service that he would have been obligated to perform as assistant to the district attorney of the southern district of New York, and his salary as assistant district attorney was $4,000 a year.

On January 28, 1910, Mr. Denison was appointed Assistant Attorney General at a salary of $5,000 per annum. Between these dates, in March, 1909, and January, 1910, Mr. Denison performed services for which he received the sum of $28,750, together with his expenses, which were small. In other words, he resigned a place paying him $4,000 a year, was immediately appointed to do the very work that he could have done as assistant to the district attorney [Mr. Stimson], who had also resigned to be reemployed, and for that work of about 10 months received $28,000 compensation, and upon the completion of that service returned to the service of the Government at the annual salary of $5,000. Now, I think that presents a condition that requires correction at the hands of Congress, and I offer the amendment, which I trust will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, as I remarked yesterday, the charge for professional services usually seems high to those who do not render the service; but the gentleman only half states the case. I have not personally practiced law very much since I became a Member of Congress, but my junior partner has a very large portion of his time been engaged in the practice of the law on the basis of $100 a day, with extra pay for extra time occupied for long hours of day or evening work. Now, that does not mean that he only renders his services, and it does not mean in these cases that the gentlemen referred to by the gentleman from Texas simply gave their own services. It means that the services of a law office with its clerks, its stenographers, its experts looking up the law, its experts examining into the evidence, from that law office, are brought into play.

Very often there are additional charges for certain work, but in the general class of work the office renders certain services. That is the case with all large firms in every great city. The individual member of the law firm, paid at rather a high rate, does not intend to look into all the details either of the law or the facts in the first instance. I have known my junior partner to keep three stenographers and a number of clerks busy day after day under his supervision with the work which he was doing in court and for which he was paid. Doubtless that is the way in all these cases.

Let us see what the effect of the gentleman's amendment would be. Take the Greene and Gaynor case, a very celebrated case. The main work which was done in that case was not in the recovery which the gentleman refers to, but in the prosecution which resulted in conviction, and which added a great deal to the moral effect of honesty in public life. In that case the district attorney became involved and interested in the prosecution of the case. No reasonable man would expect a district attorney in Georgia to continue the prosecution of that case with the diligence which he ought to use, for the ordinary district attorney's salary. One of two things would be necessary, either that they should engage other counsel in his place or else should pay him in some way additional compensation.

Now, the gentleman proposes by his amendment to insert a provision by which he could not be paid additional pay while he was district attorney, and if he resigned he could not be retained in the case at all. It is an unreasonable proposition, and the district attorney there or anywhere else, engaged in a case of that kind which requires work both night and day and Sunday and holidays, should be allowed extra compensation. The district attorney would not have remained in the case unless he could be paid for extra work performed, if he is the ordinary district attorney or lawyer. No lawyer of ability can afford to give the gray matter in his brain in a great case, constantly working at all hours in the day, year after year, perhaps, on the basis of $3,500 a year. Nor can the Government expect to obtain the best results by such a course.

A portion of the Greene and Gaynor case was tried in Chicago. The gentlemen on the other side had engaged the best counsel which they could procure. The Government was entitled to have the services of just as eminent counsel and to pay a reasonable sum for those services. The final result in that case justified, in my judgment, what the Government did. But even if the prosecution had not been successful the Government still ought to have had the services of able counsel.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that, in addition to the services of Mr. Johnson and Mr. Erwin, the Government paid about $84,000, according to a hasty calculation I have made, for services of other persons, and some of these services, I have no doubt, were rendered in the case at Chicago.

Mr. MANN. Certainly; the man who has charge of a great litigation has to have the services of other lawyers in connection with himself. With half a dozen lawyers representing the other side of the case no lawyer of standing will go into court on a great case and rely solely on his own work and his own ideas and his own judgment in the trying of a lawsuit.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I want to put a specific case to the gentleman. Does the gentleman believe that it is good public policy—take the condition as it existed with respect to Mr. Erwin—to hold the office of district attorney from 1901 to 1911, and still accept and enjoy this employment, which necessarily carried him out of his district and interfered with the performance of his duties there?

Mr. MANN. I believe that Mr. Erwin, in the work which he did in connection with the case, was entitled to reasonable compensation, and the amount that was paid him was not more than a reasonable compensation. As to whether the district attorney should be paid extra services, instead of resigning the services of the Government, depends upon the facts of each particular case. In this case I think it was far better for the Government to have him retain his office of district attorney and to pay him the extra services, instead of employing outside counsel entirely at a far higher rate of pay.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. My criticism of Mr. Erwin is that he accepted employment in the Green and Gaynor cases, and continued in that service for so many years without resigning his office of district attorney.

Mr. MANN. Whether he neglected any of the work as district attorney, I do not know. The gentleman does not claim that he did. If he had resigned, under the gentleman's amendment he could not have been retained by the Government in charge of this prosecution.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. Like the gentleman, I prefer to do as Mr. Erwin did, but are we not all serving for something beside the mere dollar-and-cents compensation while in office? Should not the district attorney have pride of position and patriotism and love of achievement in mind, and not merely the cold dollars that he gets out of it?

Mr. MANN. A district attorney or any other Government official except Members of Congress is employed upon the basis that he works about so long in the day, and is not expected to do extra work which comes with the management of a great lawsuit. There is no design that he should. Of course we are supposed here to work about 16 hours a day, but we pay ourselves fairly well for it after all. The gentleman refers to the New York case. Of course I do not have the facts except as the gentleman states them, but I have no doubt that in that case the man who resigned in the district attorney's office and was retained, probably upon a per diem basis, did a great deal of work for the Government which in fact was performed by clerks under him whom he privately paid.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman that in addition to the salary he was paid $14,000 for expenses. While I am on my feet I would like to ask the gentleman if he approves the practice of a district attorney developing some great case like the sugar case and then resigning his position as a district attorney and immediately accepting employment at a very greatly increased compensation, or resigning the position of assistant district attorney, with a salary of $4,000 a year, in order to immediately accept a position that paid him $28,000 in just a few months, and then returning to the service of the same Government at a salary of $5,000 a year? I would like to know if the gentleman approves that sort of practice.

Mr. MANN. It depends on the particular case. When the Government has in its employ in the district attorney's office some one who learns the facts and gets the run of a lawsuit which will never be tried in the ordinary course by the district attorney's office, and it is believed the man has the capacity to do that, I do approve of letting him resign from the district attorney's office to take charge of the case, instead of doing what they used to do and what would otherwise be done, namely, employ outside counsel altogether.

It is a familiar fact with every lawyer's office that frequently when a lawyer's office gets control of a big case the lawyers of that office do not try the case, or else one of them disassociates himself entirely from the law work in the office to devote his attention to the particular case. I have known lawyers connected with a law firm who did not go to the office of the law firm—that is, the regular office—for more than a year, because, taking hold of a particular piece of litigation, they organized an outside office for that purpose and gave no attention at all to the ordinary business of the law office. Let us take the case which, I presume, has occurred to the gentleman's mind, though it has not been mentioned, of the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee, who has recently been employed in the Steel Trust investigation. I do not undertake to say whether Mr. Dickinson should have resigned as Secretary of War and should thereafter have been appointed in charge of the Government's case against the Steel Trust, and yet, when it is perfectly patent that somebody would have to be employed, if the executive authorities believed that Mr. Dickinson was the man to be employed, I can see no reason for not employing him and no reason for paying him less than would be paid to other competent counsel.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, as a Tennesseean I feel proud of Mr. Dickinson, but at the same time I want to say to the gentleman that if, when a member of the Cabinet, he resigned with an understanding at the time that he was to receive a more lucrative appointment, it is something that ought to be severely condemned. But I do not believe that such were the facts in that case. However, that case is not upon a parallel with the case of the present Secretary of War, who was in office on a salary as district attorney of $10,000 a year, and who resigned that office and was immediately employed to do just what he would have done as district attorney for a period of one year, during which time he was paid about $70,000, and then after that special service expired accepted a $12,000 seat in the Cabinet.

Mr. MANN. However that may be, I know this, that you can not try these great lawsuits in the great cities of the country upon the basis which used to obtain in trying a lawsuit as it is tried in a small country town. You have got to meet the great lawyers of the country in the lawsuits, and the Government ought to meet them with competent counsel.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, this debate has illustrated the fact that there is no condition of things however scandalous, that will not find a defender. The material brought to our attention by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL] discloses a most anomalous and outrageous state of affairs in the administration of one department of our Government. It has been suggested in the course of this argument that a Government employee, such as a district attorney who had been appointed to the Government service with the idea that he will discharge whatever duties may properly attach to his office, is under no obligation to afford his best service in the conduct of a case of unusual difficulty, unless he is afforded additional compensation, so as to make his total allowance commensurate with the fees of the high-priced counsel to whom he may be opposed. This is as much as to say that a soldier who is confronted for the first time with a service of real danger, is justified in refusing to go forward against the enemy unless his pay is then and there advanced. Mr. Chairman, such a doctrine is a reflection upon every Government official in the United States, and if there is any district attorney, or other prosecuting officer who holds to such a view, and claims that with respect to any prosecution of unusual difficulty arising within his district, or fairly appertaining to his discharge of duty, he is under no obligation to render the best service of which he is capable, without thought of additional compensation or regard for the fees of opposing counsel, then such an official is an unworthy member of the prosecuting branch, and should be dismissed from the Government service. [Applause.]

Such an attitude can not be too strongly condemned as vicious per se, and demoralizing in the extreme. Permit me to give an illustration on this line. In the State of Virginia, from which I come, the attorneys for the Commonwealth prosecute every form of crime. They receive from the State a fee of $10 in a case of felony, and an allowance from the county of from $300 to $1,000 a year.

In many counties the allowance is not as much as $500, and I know of no county in which the allowance is more than $1,000. Yet the very best lawyers in my State are in many cases prosecuting attorneys. Not infrequently they are opposed in felony trials by counsel of the very highest ability who will receive anywhere from $1,000 to $2,500 for their services. It is news indeed to me that in these, or any other prosecutions, the State is not entitled to expect the highest service of which her prosecutors are capable, unless they are afforded a supplementary allowance for the particular case, so as to make his fees measurably equal to those of opposing counsel. As yet we have not reached that attitude, or come to regard the duty of our prosecuting officials from that point of view. Having taken the offices with full knowledge of the compensation attached, these officials prosecute all cases alike, and when opposed by high-priced counsel of exceptional ability, they regard the circumstances as a challenge for the utmost exercise of their powers, rather than an occasion for a demand for additional compensation. I have in mind one Commonwealth's attorney who was promoted from that position to be a judge of the supreme court of my State.

During a long term of office, he rendered services of the highest quality, and prosecuted many of the most important criminal cases in the State of Virginia, for the supposedly pitiful and inadequate compensation I have mentioned. When an attorney is appointed one of the district attorneys of the United States, he is expected to prosecute all the cases arising within his district, whatever their kind, or quality, may be and without regard to the number, mental quality, or caliber of the counsel who may be opposed to him. If it is considered in respect of some particular case that the district attorney ought to give all of his time to it for any considerable proportion of his term, it would be far better and more desirable in every way, including the detail of economy, for the Government to give him an additional assistant at the salary that goes with that appointment, and permit the regularly appointed district attorney to devote himself to the particular subject, or case requiring his undivided attention.

The illutrations that have been furnished by the gentleman from Texas show, as I have said, a most scandalous, outrageous, and I might almost say, disgraceful condition of affairs in connection with official prosecutions by this Government. I am astonished that there could be found anywhere in the United States a district attorney who having been appointed upon the theory that his whole time and his highest service to the fullest capacity of his intellectual make-up should be rendered to the Government which for the time being, is his client, should disregard the plain call of duty, and when confronted with some case of unusual difficulty, should be languid, or indifferent in the discharge of that duty, until his interest is quickened, and his energies stimulated by additional compensation so manipulated and afforded by indirection that in the result it is measurably equal to the fees of counsel for the adversary interest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I for one will never admit that such an attitude is a proper one, or that there has been any justification in reason or propriety for the course that has been pursued by the Department of Justice in the cases which have been called to our attention by the gentleman from Texas. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations went very extensively into this matter. Gentlemen will find in the hearings 10 pages of printed matter in which these cases are given. I have never criticized the extent of fees paid in some of these cases. They are very difficult and involved cases, requiring the services of the most eminent lawyers in the United States, who practice law in places where the remuneration is very high and where, if it be necessary for the Government to obtain services of such men, no criticism can be indulged in for the payment to them of the ordinary compensation that would be paid by private individuals. The practice against which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL] complains is a practice which I believe deserves severe condemnation. I do not agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that after a man has been employed as a public servant and in the performance of his duty obtains information of peculiar advantage to the Government he is then justified in resigning from his position and practically blackjacking the Government into employing him at a much larger compensation.

Let me call attention to a case not mentioned by the gentleman from Texas:

Townsend, Burdette D.: Assistant United States attorney, North Dakota, August 12, 1904, $1,200; resigned May 31, 1908.
Special assistant attorney, Oregon, September 26, 1907, case against Southern Pacific Railway Co., re land grants, etc. No additional compensation, but to be allowed expenses and $6 per day in lieu of subsistence.
Special assistant attorney, Oregon, December 24, 1907, being amendment of appointment of September 26, 1907, to the extent that compensation will be determined.
Special assistant attorney, Oregon, June 1, 1908, $4,500 and expenses.
Special assistant to Attorney General, June 8, 1910, coal-land cases in Colorado, etc.; compensation to be determined.
Special assistant to Attorney General, Oregon and California land-grant suits, June 16, 1910; until July 1, 1910, compensation to be at rate of $4,500 per annum; after July 1, 1910, to receive $450 per month on account and final compensation to be determined. Appointment extended from time to time to cover other public-land cases, etc.
Still in service.
Compensation, $31,775.

Here was an attorney who was glad to be an assistant to the United States district attorney, at $1,200 a year for four years, and then by the favor of some high official he is given special appointments which net him in excess of $8,000 a year during the next four years.

The New York cases I have discussed on other occasions. I do not believe that what was done there can be justified. Here were two gentlemen occupying official positions, and they did what they were justified in doing. They announced that at a certain time they could not accept reappointments, and that it was imperative that they retire from public service in order to practice their profession. That, owing to conditions, they were under obligations to their families and themselves to retire from public service and to practice law privately. So they retired, but they were immediately retained in the cases upon which they had be engaged, and after a year one gentleman received $69,000 and the other $28,000 for their services. The unfortunate part of the situation is this: One of these gentlemen who resigned immediately upon the completion of the special work accepted a position at $5,000 a year in the Government service. One gentleman, who asserted that it was absolutely essential that he should quit public life and devote himself to the accumulation of money for his family, became a candidate for high public office in New York State, in which, if he had been successful, he would have had placed upon him financial burdens greater than ever. Having failed in that contest, he accepted a position in the President's Cabinet at $12,000 a year, with burdens which are largely in excess of any that could possibly have fallen upon him in the other position. Of course the unusual distinction of occupying either office might impel sacrifices that otherwise would not be made and perhaps accounts for this action.

Something should be done, however, in my opinion, to reform what I believe to be a grievous abuse. If this amendment will accomplish that result, I shall be glad to see the amendment adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I notice the amendment commences with "Provided," so and so.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I intended it as a limitation on those appropriations.

Mr. MANN. It is not a proviso, and it is not required to commence with a proviso in order to be a limitation. I suggest to the gentleman to strike out the proviso.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. It is entirely agreeable to me, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

Mr. MANN. If the Chair understands, the motion is to strike out the proviso.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I ask that it be simply inserted as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is to strike out the word "Provided," and insert that which follows as a new paragraph. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask to return to page 34, under the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. A point of order was pending against the provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Beginning on line 12?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Yes; beginning on line 12. I reserved a point of order against it, and I now make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, if there is no objection to returning, and ask for a ruling. I do not think it will be contended that it is not subject to a point of order. It is clearly a change of existing law. First, I want to get unanimous consent to return to page 34.

The CHAIRMAN. We have already returned to page 34 for the purpose of considering the point of order.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order which I reserved on the paragraph, beginning on line 12, page 34. The point of order is that the language therein contained is clearly a change of existing law, beginning with the words—

Hereafter the proviso of the act of July 1, 1898 (30 Stat. L., p. 604), directing that all bonds, notes, and checks shall be printed on hand-roller presses shall not apply to checks, the back and tints of all United States bonds, and the backs and tints of all United States paper money—shall not apply, and so forth. I ask for a ruling.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How far down on the next page?

The CHAIRMAN. To what portion does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. To the whole paragraph.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Ending on line 4, page 35?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Ending with line 4, page 35. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that at least one part of the paragraph is subject to a point of order, and therefore sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous objects, Department of Justice.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk just read line 13. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL] came in after line 13. I do not know whether the Clerk has it that way or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read, beginning on line 14, page 112.

The Clerk read as follows:

Detection and prosecution of crimes: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States; the investigation of the official acts, records, and accounts of marshals, attorneys, clerks, and referees of the United States courts and the Territorial courts, and United States commissioners, for which purpose all the official papers, records, and dockets of said officers, without exception, shall be examined by the agents of the Attorney General at any time; for the protection of the person of the President of the United States; for such other investigations regarding official matters under the control of the Department of Justice as may be directed by the Attorney General, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $400,000.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, petitions and resolutions from organizations representing over 30,000 men and women of California, urging an appropriation at this session of Congress sufficient to insure the enforcement of the white-slave-traffic act of June 25, 1910, furnish evidence of the great interest manifested in my State touching the activities of the Department of Justice in this work. I have frequently conferred with the able chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], and consulted with the Department of Justice in relation to the amount to be carried in this bill under the head of "Detection and prosecution of crimes."

It was my purpose, in case the appropriation carried was not ample, to offer an amendment from the floor providing a sum fully adequate to carry on this important work, which so vitally concerns the welfare of the women and girls of my native State and of the entire Nation.

My correspondence with the department, however, and the statements of the chairman of this committee satisfy me that the committee has granted the amounts asked for which will permit those in charge of prosecutions under this act to continue in their efforts to wipe out this infamous traffic—a traffic which strikes at the very foundations of the home. I can not too strongly commend the committee for its action. Under the head, "Detection and prosecution of crimes," the last sundry civil bill carried an appropriation of $350,000. Of this amount I am informed that $75,000 was used for the prosecution of violations under this act. The present paragraph carries an appropriation of $400,000, $50,000 greater than the amount carried last year, all of which increase is to be used for the investigation and prosecution of white-slave cases. This will make available a total of $125,000 for this particular work during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, an amount which, I am informed by Mr. Finch, is fully adequate to carry on the prosecutions under this act, and which is the full amount that the department has asked for.

I was a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at the time the white-slave traffic act, the author of which is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], then chairman of that committee, was reported, and I am proud to say that I supported that act both in the committee and on the floor of the House, and I propose, as long as I am a Member of this body, to urge at each session appropriations ample to prosecute violations of this act in every section of the country until this terrible traffic is eradicated. [Applause.]

I will ask the Clerk to read a letter that I have received from the department signed by Mr. Finch, special commissioner, showing that this appropriation is ample for the work in the coming fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF SPECIAL COMMISSIONER FOR THE SUPPRESSION OF THE WHITE-SLAVE TRAFFIC,
Washington, D. C., June 3, 1912.

Hon. J. R. KNOWLAND,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 31st ultimo, which has been referred to me by the Attorney General, regarding the additional funds needed by this department for its work in connection with the suppression of the white-slave traffic.

In reply I beg to advise you that the sum of $50,000 is the full amount which the department is asking, in addition to the amount being expended during the present fiscal year from the appropriation detection and prosecution of crimes, for the purpose above mentioned. It is believed that our expenditures for investigation work in connection with the prosecution of violations of the white-slave traffic act during the present fiscal year will amount to approximately $75,000, so that if the additional $50,000 is provided $125,000 will be available for such expenses during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

As to just what sum will be needed during the coming year it would, of course, be difficult to state at the present time, and it may be that a sum considerable in excess of the amount above stated could be used to advantage. We are, of course, desirous of pushing our work for the suppression of the white-slave traffic with the utmost vigor. It has been thought, however, that we could well undertake our plans for the coming fiscal year with the sum above mentioned, and if it is found as the work progresses that an additional amount will be necessary, a deficiency appropriation might then be requested.

In this connection, I desire to say that the interest which you have taken in the matter of providing additional funds is very heartily appreciated.

Yours, very sincerely,

S. W. FINCH,
Special Commissioner.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think I may be pardoned for saying a word on this subject. As the author of the white-slave law, I have had my attention directed many times to its enforcement, and because of that fact have also consulted with the Attorney General and with Mr. Finch, in the Department of Justice, who had charge of the enforcement of the law. Some of the things which have been revealed, and which were beyond control by the States, are utterly unbelievable, and unless presented in a form where the information must be considered truthful, no one would suppose that conditions could exist which have been proven to be quite common. I said to the gentlemen in the Attorney General's office quite awhile ago that if they would go to the Committee on Appropriations and tell that committee some of the things which they have told me I thought there would be no difficulty in their securing all the money which that committee thought could be properly expended. Whether they did give this information to the Committee on Appropriations I am not informed; but I do believe that the committee have reported a sufficient sum of money to enforce that act properly with all the machinery that will be available during the coming fiscal year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, a statement was made to the committee in line with what has been indicated by the gentleman from Illinois, and the committee inquired how much money could properly be used, and gave the sum that the department said could properly be used.

Mr. BARTLETT. We gave them all they asked for this purpose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The hearing was not printed. The gentleman understands why.

Mr. MANN. Of course it could not be printed and circulated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Everybody who heard it felt, I think, that whatever the department said it could efficiently use in this work ought to be appropriated; and as long as it was not conducting a careless or improper campaign, but was working legitimately, the committee felt that it should be given, and it has been given, the sum requested.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, since the matter of the enforcement of what is known as the white-slave act is under discussion, I desire to say this: I did not agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] or the other members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House, of which for many years I was a member, in the presentation of the bill which passed Congress, nor did I vote for it. Together with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] and the gentleman from Georgia, my colleague [Mr. ADAMSON], I opposed it, not because I was not in favor of prosecuting crimes of this sort vigorously and efficiently, but because I thought it was an unauthorized and unconstitutional exercise of power by the Congress to enact such a law. I believed then, and I am of that opinion still, that the punishment of all crimes of this character in the various States was a function that did not devolve upon the General Government, but was specifically lodged in the State governments and reserved there for all time by the Constitution and the tenth amendment to that instrument.

My opinion upon that proposition was not sustained by the House or by the Congress. It is true I found myself in the minority upon the subject, as I have often found myself upon questions of this character, but I did not hesitate even on so important legislation as this, which had behind it the influences that it had, to voice and to vote my opinion upon the subject. We are yet awaiting the final decision of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the constitutionality of this statute, because at the last term the Supreme Court granted certiorari in a number of cases to be brought before that court in which the constitutionality of this act is involved, and we are at last to have it determined.

I will not say, Mr. Chairman, that I hope the Supreme Court will sustain the constitutionality of the act, but I will not regret it if it shall be upheld, thereby enabling the courts of the country to eradicate and destroy this great evil.

I believe the duty of protecting the morals, the health, and the general welfare of the particular localities in a State is lodged with the State, and ought to remain there and be enforced by the State. I note from the hearings that there have been in the last 9 months prosecutions of 219 indictments; that there have been 135 convictions, 9 verdicts of not guilty, 12 cases nolle prossed, and there are still 63 cases pending. The total penitentiary and jail sentences amount to 241 years 6 months and 27 days.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. I should like two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. These sentences are not too severe for the punishment of this crime, if it shall be determined that the Congress of the United States and the courts of the United States have the proper jurisdiction.

The States have attempted to enforce the laws and have enforced the laws. There never was any opposition on my part to this legislation except that it was founded in the conviction that the State and not Congress have the sole power to protect its communities and localities from immorality and vice. I have never come to the conclusion—and I shall be very slow to come to the conclusion—that immorality and vice are commerce within the meaning of the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution.

I gladly approve, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, of the efficient and prompt enforcement of this law as it now stands on the statute book. I will cheerfully vote for the full amount that the Department of Justice has asked for the enforcement of the law against that great crime and evil, and if it should require more I would give my vote for a larger sum. As long as the law is on the statute book until it shall be declared not within the power of Congress to pass it I shall vote to do all that can be done to efficiently and radically stamp out this great crime against the morals of the people. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Traveling and miscellaneous expenses: For traveling and other miscellaneous and emergency expenses, including advances made by the disbursing clerk, authorized and approved by the Attorney General, to be expended at his discretion, the provisions of the first paragraph of section 3648, Revised Statues, to the contrary notwithstanding, $10,000.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if it would not be possible in the arrangement of this bill to incorporate in a single paragraph all the appropriations that might be available for the purpose of travel. In this item there is carried $10,000. Large sums are used out of lump-sum appropriations for identically the same purpose. It would be much better and wiser, and I think more economical, if a separate paragraph might include all the appropriations for traveling expenses.

The same thing is true of expenses for printing done in the Department of Justice. The direct appropriation is made for printing for that department, and yet all these various lump-sum appropriations can be drawn upon, and many of them are drawn upon, for the purpose of paying the expenses connected with the printing in that department. No Member of the House looking at this bill can form any conception as to the actual amount of expenditure that is possible for the purpose of travel, or for printing, or for perhaps some other purpse. I should like to have the opinion of the chairman as to whether or not that condition might not be corrected so that Members might know and so that the department might know just the amount that the department would be permitted to expend for each of these several items.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it is very difficult to determine which is the better way to arrange these appropriations. At present they are arranged for the particular service, and they include all of the various matters that may be necessary to be performed in connection with that service. The Department of Justice, I believe, is the only department which is authorized to have printing done out of these appropriations in addition to the allotment for the department. It is because of the peculiar situation in the Department of Justice. In the conduct of law business of the United States it is practically impossible to make any estimate in advance as to what cases will be taken up—the extent of the briefs and matters of that character—that may be necessary to be appropriated for. Printing is authorized to be done because it is printing for that peculiar class of business covered by this item.

Travel is another item that it is difficult to appropriate for. We appropriate, for instance, $10,000 to enable the Attorney General to conduct a certain class of cases. That includes compensation of the attorney, certain clerical services, the printing that is to be done; and if it is necessary for the attorney to travel the item is so framed as to permit the payment of the traveling expenses out of that appropriation. In that way it is possible to keep track of the cost of certain services. It prevents the grouping of all transportation items and all printing items and all items for clerical services; but the experience of the past has shown it to be the best way to enable Congress to determine the extent to which each appropriation should be made for special services. Sometimes it is difficult to tell which would be the better way, but I think the experience of the House has been that it is necessary to adopt this method of keeping track of certain incidental expenses, and no feasible method has ever been determined upon for the adoption of any other system.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BORLAND having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5790. An act for the relief of C. E. Moore;

S. 7096. An act to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Narragansett Pier, R. I.;

S. 7015. An act to provide American registry for the steamer Damara;

S. 7012. An act to permit the construction of a subway and the maintenance of a railroad under the post-office building at or near Park Place, in the city of New York;

S. 6573. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and erection of a Federal building at Raton, N. Mex.; and

S. 6269. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of Santa Fe., in the State of New Mexico.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17681) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Enforcement of antitrust laws: For the enforcement of antitrust laws, including not exceeding $10,000 for salaries of necessary employees at the seat of government, $200,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Page 115, line 5, strike out "$200,000" and insert "$250,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this is an appropriation for the enforcement of the antitrust laws. Originally this appropriation was a continuing one. It is no longer a continuing one. It is an annual appropriation. In 1904 in the legislative bill the appropriation was for $500,000. In 1908 it was for $250,000; in 1909, $250,000 with a reappropriation of unexpended balances of $100,000. The appropriations for 1911 were $200,000 and for 1912 $200,000. The estimate is for $250,000.

Mr. MANN. There was a supplemental estimate of $50,000.

Mr. CANNON. Yes. For the purpose of what I desire to say I shall read from the hearings at page 1505. Mr. Fowler represented the department, at the direction of the Attorney General. After speaking of the steel case and various other cases, he said:

Mr. FOWLER. In nearly all of those cases there is quite a number of them. Take the Lake Shore & Michigan Railroad case, about which I spoke. We did not employ special counsel in that case—it was in charge of one of our salaried attorneys, who was being paid $4,500—but we did not hesitate to put it in his charge, because he is an able young lawyer. But on the other side was Mr. Maxwell, of Cincinnati, who is one of the ablest lawyers at the American bar, and two or three lawyers from Cleveland, Ohio—Mr. Squires, and Hoyt, Dustin & Kelly, and, I think, three or four lawyers in addition to those. There were three railroad defendants, and each railroad had its lawyers. Those are the kind of lawyers we meet in all of those cases. And if you can see your way clear I would much rather you would increase that appropriation than to reduce it.

The CHAIRMAN. We can not increase it if you do not estimate for it.

Mr. FOWLER. If we had it to do over, we would ask for it, and I am asking for it now.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not the way to do it; you should estimate for it.

Mr. CANNON. Well, how much do you need?

Mr. FOWLER. I think the appropriation ought to be $300,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you should have sent in such an estimate.

Mr. FOWLER. This estimate was made six months ago. At that time we did not realize what the additional expense was going to be, or that there was going to be this heavy increase in litigation.

[The time of Mr. CANNON having expired, by unanimous consent he was granted leave to continue for five minutes longer.]

Continuing from the middle of page 1506, I read the following:

Mr. CANNON. What I want to know is this: Have you several hundred thousand dollars unexpended from former appropriations or have all of the balances been covered into the Treasury?

Mr. FIELD. Those balances were all exhausted one or two years ago.

Mr. CANNON. So that everything is exhausted except for the current year?

Mr. FIELD. Yes, sir.

Mr. Chairman, there are many very important cases, and sometimes criticism has been made that ought not to have been made. Criticism has been made sometimes that some of these cases ought not to have begun, as in the case of the United Shoe Co. and various others. Without expressing any opinion, because I do not know whether these prosecutions are well founded or not, there is the law, and the department asks for $300,000 for the enforcement of the law. The country is interested in the enforcement of the antitrust law. Much of criticism has been made in former years against nearly all of the administrations, because of the fact that these prosecutions have not been efficient. Criticism was made against the Cleveland administration, against the McKinley administration, and against the Roosevelt administration.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman recalls that in 1902 the first appropriation was made specifically for this purpose.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely, I do. But there is much of criticism that with the funds available under the appropriations this act was not enforced. I am not going to say, and it is no part of my purpose at this time to raise the question of whether the criticism was well founded or not. Political platforms of all parties have demanded the enforcement of this law. I believe it is true that the prosecutions under the present administration have been more frequent and greater success has attended them than at all times heretofore since the enactment of the law. Instead of giving $300,000, which was $50,000 over the regular estimate that was submitted, the committee proposes to give and recommends $200,000, which is $50,000 less than the estimate, less than the amount which the department says is absolutely required. This amendment is to increase this $50,000, to bring it up to the amount of the estimate.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, it may be well to recall the history of this specific appropriation for the enforcement of the antitrust law. For years we had in the Republican platform and otherwise a declaration that the Republican Party was in favor of the vigorous enforcement of what is known as the Sherman antitrust law, but very little fulfillment of the promise contained in the platform. No very serious effort was made for years to enforce the law. The first effort was made when Attorney General Harmon proceeded against the Trans-Missouri Association and the Freight Traffic Association and the Addystone Pipe Co. For years the law slumbered upon the statute books. In 1901 the President of the United States sent to this Congress a message in which he specifically requested that funds be appropriated specifically for the enforcement of that law. The Republican Party was then in power in this House and in the Senate and in all the branches of the Government, yet it took no steps to answer that demand of the President and appropriate the funds necessary to enforce vigorously the law.

In December, 1902, when the legislative, judicial, and executive appropriation bill was being considered by this House, when the paragraph pertaining to the Department of Justice was reached I offered upon the floor of the House an amendment appropriating $250,000 for the purpose of prosecuting violations of the antitrust law and violations of the interstate commerce act, at the same time directing that the Attorney General proceed against all violators of those two laws. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was at that time chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, Gen. Bingham, was in charge of the bill upon the floor. He promptly reserved the point of order against the amendment, but, at the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, the point was not made or even reserved. The proposition made from this side of the House to appropriate $250,000 for that specific purpose, at the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON, was increased to $500,000.

So that whatever credit there may be of inaugurating this particular item in an appropriation bill, whatever credit there may be of first providing a specific sum for the prosecution and the enforcement of this law, belongs to this side of the House, and was offered by the gentleman from Georgia—myself.

Mr. CANNON. Was the point of order sustained?

Mr. BARTLETT. It was not made.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, it was not made.

Mr. BARTLETT. And the gentleman from Illinois, if he will recall the incident——

Mr. CANNON. I do not recollect about it.

Mr. BARTLETT. The record shows, and I will produce it——

Mr. CANNON. What is the fact about it?

Mr. BARTLETT. The fact is that the gentleman from Illinois was so anxious that the point of order should not be made that in hot haste he rushed from his seat over to where Gen. Bingham was and caught him by his coat and said, "You must not make it." That is the incident.

Mr. CANNON. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman from Georgia should have all the credit in the world.

Mr. BARTLETT. And I am perfectly willing the gentleman from Illinois should have the credit of not opposing it, too.

Mr. CANNON. All right. Now, then, if the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. BARTLETT. Surely.

Mr. CANNON. Just at this point, because the gentleman will get more time if he desires it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Thank you, sir.

Mr. CANNON. That appropriation was $500,000.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. On the legislative bill. It really belonged on the sundry civil bill, but that makes no difference. Now, then, this appropriation with the Democracy in power in this House is not $500,000. The estimate is $250,000, and you report $200,000. Will my friend be halfway as anxious now as he was then?

Mr. BARTLETT. I will vote every dollar necessary to carry out this law. [Applause.]

I will quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which shows the following facts relative to the incident I have referred to.

PROSECUTION OF THE TRUSTS.

On December 17, 1902, when the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was before the House and the item making appropriations for the Department of Justice had been read, Mr. BARTLETT offered the following amendment:

"For the purpose of enforcing the antitrust laws of the United States and to enable the Attorney General of the United States to prosecute suits and legal proceedings against persons or corporations who shall violate the antitrust laws of the United States now in force, or that may hereafter be enacted, the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may, in the judgment of the Attorney General, be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, and he is hereby directed to proceed against any and all persons or corporations who may have violated or may violate any of the provisions of the antitrust laws of the United States." (Vol. 36, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 410.)

Mr. Bingham, in charge of the bill, said:

"I will make no point of order against that proposition."

Mr. Overstreet said:

"There is no such law known to the statutes as the antitrust law."

Mr. UNDERWOOD said:

"I understand that the disposition here is not to create a new statute, but to provide the Attorney General with the necessary funds by which he can enforce the law now on the statute books."

Mr. Hepburn offered the following as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. BARTLETT:

"That for the enforcement of the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies,' approved July 2, 1890, and sections 73, 74, 75, and 76 of the act entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' approved August 27, 1894, the sum of $250,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not heretofore appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General in the employment of special counsel and agents of the Department of Justice to conduct proceedings, suits, and prosecutions under said acts in the courts of the United States: Provided, That no person shall be prosecuted or be subject to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, in any proceeding, suit, or prosecution under said acts: Provided further, That no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution or punishment for perjury committed in so testifying" (p. 411).

Mr. CANNON said:

"But the gentleman from Georgia moved his amendment; no point of order was made upon it—the point, I think, being properly withheld—and that proposition is now before us for consideration. For one I am quite willing to settle it here, so far as we can, and would suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that he increase the sum from $250,000, as proposed in the substitute he moves, to $500,000, and that he make the appropriation immediately available."

Mr. Hepburn accepted these suggestions, and his substitute was amended accordingly.

Mr. BARTLETT said:

"The committee of which the gentleman from Indiana [Overstreet] is a distinguished and honored member has not for a number of years reported any bill or done anything else to relieve the country from the exactions of the trusts, not even when the President of the United States, in his message of December of last year as well as the one delivered to the House at the beginning of the present session, has recommended that some resolute and practical legislation should be enacted to correct the evil of the trusts. And I say that the gentleman does not stand in a position to complain when other Members of the House see fit to propose that funds be put at the disposal of the Attorney General with which to prosecute the trusts of this country. * * * I offered this because it did not appear that any member of the majority intended to do anything to aid the Attorney General or do anything toward prosecuting the trusts of this country or to carry out the recommendation of the President."

Further on he said:

"The Republican Party has been masquerading sufficiently before the country on the subject of their opposition to the trusts, and for one I want to put this amendment before the House, that it may be voted on."

Mr. UNDERWOOD said:

"In fact, he [Grosvenor] points with pride to one or two cases where the Republican Party has actually used the law on the statute books to suppress certain trusts that it was not in partnership with, but I want to ask him, if the law that he takes so much pride in, the law that he says is effective and can suppress trusts, is on the statute books, Why has not the Republican Party, which has been in power since 1896 and which has had absolute control of the legislative and executive branches of this Government since 1896, suppressed the trusts? I would ask him, Why, since the Republican Party has had complete control of the Executive—the President, the Attorney General, and Congress, with the power to provide money—it has not suppressed the trusts? Enumerate in your own mind and before the people the trusts that are a living menace to the people to-day, and yet, according to the confessions of your own leader, you have had the law in your hands and have had the power and the ability to suppress those trusts since 1896 and have not done it."

"Now, I congratulate the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that when this side of the House offers an amendment to this bill to aid the Attorney General and the Executive of this great Government to enforce the law against the trusts they had the manhood to stand up for the masses of the common people of this country; that they have had the manhood and the courage, notwithstanding the political line, to come across and accept the proposition we made and aid us in the enactment of this legislation, which will do something toward suppressing the evils the people are crying against."

The substitute was then adopted and the amendment as amended by the substitute adopted without division. (Vol. 36, p. 419.)

But, Mr. Chairman, a very distinguished Republican who is now a militant candidate for the Presidency before the Chicago convention, who seems to have forgotten the dignity and the propriety incident to even a candidacy for the first time by those who desire to become the Chief Magistrate of this country, in a message in 1908, which I hold in my hand, recommended to the House that this law should be superseded by some other law which would take away from the courts the right to decide these violations and place it with the Executive, and in speeches made in recent months this same militant candidate for the Presidency has said that it is farcical and useless to undertake to enforce that law, and proposes now as a part of his political creed upon which he proposes to seek the nomination, and, if nominated, to seek election at the hands of the American people, that you supersede this law, proposes to create a commission by which the antitrust law shall be enforced, not by the courts but by a commission or Executive order.

And we find the remarkable spectacle presented in American history that a former President of the United States, who was vigorous and violent in his denunciation of the violation of the laws of the country by the great combination of the criminal rich, to-day the chosen candidate of the greatest industrial combination on the face of the earth; and the millions of dollars that have been spent in the primaries and the millions of dollars more that will be spent in the coming election, should he be nominated, is being furnished by two of these so-called alleged violators of the antitrust law, and Perkins of the Steel Trust and McCormick of the Harvester Trust have contributed of that sum, so we are informed in the press of the country, nearly half a million dollars. So that, Mr. Chairman, I have called attention to the fact that in 1902 the then President of the United States demanded of the Congress that we furnish a sufficient sum to prosecute the violators of the antitrust law. I call attention to the fact that later, in 1908, he recommended that that law be superseded by some other law, because it was idle to undertake to enforce it. I call attention to the fact that he now claims that business, good trusts, should not be prosecuted, but we should have a commission not only to regulate their business but to fix their prices. And when that announcement has been made I call attention to the fact that this commission, as first suggested by Judge Gary, of the Steel Corporation, the idea of an industrial commission to regulate the sale, the manufacture, and the conduct of the business of these great corporations, and who first suggested that the prices even of their products be regulated, I call attention to the fact that since one of the candidates for the Presidency, a former President of the United States, advocated that measure, he has forgotten all he had said about combinations of wealth and "the criminal rich."

I here present the testimony of George W. Perkins, at that time an officer in the United States Steel Corporation, as given before the committee to investigate the said steel corporation on August 11, 1911, in detailing the circumstances of the promptness with which President Roosevelt acquiesced in the absorption of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. by the Steel Corporation in 1907:

Mr. PERKINS. I got the telephone to the White House opened about 9.30 o'clock on Monday morning, and talked with Mr. Loeb, and found that Judge Gary had just come in, and that he and Mr. Frick were with the President. I asked him if he could not find out before time for the trust companies to open and the exchange opened what the President's view was likely to be. Judge Gary came on the phone about a quarter of 10 and said that the President was considering it, and that he would call me again in a few minutes. At five minutes of 10, as I remember it, he came back to the phone and said that the President felt that under all the circumstances he had no right to interfere, and that therefore he and Mr. Frick were willing to report to us that they would come back to New York and vote with the committee to acquire that stock. I immediately let that be known—it was just three or four minutes of 10 o'clock—for the effect that was to have on the trust companies' opening and on Moore & Schley's loans. I simply state that to show you how close, to almost minutes, this thing had resolved itself to.

Mr. BARTLETT. You got into communication with the Executive Office at about 9.30 a. m.?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT. And you were informed that Judge Gary and Mr. Frick were in conference with the President?

Mr. PERKINS. Had just come in to see him.

Mr. BARTLETT. And about 10 minutes to 10, 20 minutes thereafter, you got this message that loosened up this whole matter?

Mr. PERKINS. It was very close to 10 o'clock. How long they had been with the President at that time, I do not know.

Mr. BARTLETT. This question, which had troubled your lawyers and eminent counsel, was decided by the Chief Executive in less than 20 minutes?

Mr. PERKINS. I beg your pardon, but I do not think that is the situation at all. I never thought that the President was passing on the technical legal question.

Mr. LITTLETON. I do not think anybody thought so.

Mr. BARTLETT. No; I do not think he thought he was. I do not think he paid any attention to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I will ask for 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia that he be given 10 minutes more? [After a pause.] No objection is heard.

Mr. BARTLETT. And these criminal rich are now contributing fabulous sums to his campaign funds. I read from the Washington Post of recent date:

$1,250,000 TO BOOM T. R.—WALL STREET HEARS THAT SUM HAS BEEN EXPENDED IN PRIMARIES.

NEW YORK, June 4.

Wall Street to-day heard from what is regarded as authoritative sources that the Roosevelt campaign managers had dispensed more than $1,250,000 in connection with the primaries up to the close of the work in New Jersey. Principal contributors to this fund, it was declared, were George W. Perkins $200,000, Frank A. Munsey $70,000, and certain interests in connection with the Steel Trust, the Harvester Trust, and the anthracite roads.

Who are the men? We hear him now advocating the different methods of conducting this great business and controlling it, and we find lined in his defense men who have in former years received his denunciation, calling them violators of the law and belonging to the criminal rich. Judge Gary, president of the steel corporation, in testimony before that committee, was the first man that officially came before a committee of Congress and suggested the proposition that Congress ought to permit these corporations to be controlled by a commission and their prices be regulated.

I have them, and I will put them in the RECORD, statements from the public prints of the sums contributed to Mr. Roosevelt's campaign. There was contributed by Mr. George W. Perkins, $200,000. The steel corporation contributed $75,000, through

Mr. Munsey, a stockholder of that corporation, and large sums by Mr. McCormick, the Harvester Trust man. You speak about the enforcement of this law. Let me tell you some of the elements that are now published with reference to the prosecution of the Steel Trust—and I call it a "trust" for short.

But, occupying the position that I happen to occupy on this floor, I do not care to denominate it as a "trust" for the present, and therefore if I use that term I do it not with a view of saying that is my position now, because I may be called upon officially to render an opinion upon that. But there came a time when it was important to the steel corporation to secure, if it could, a monopoly—in 1907—by the purchase of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. They said they could not do it unless they had the assurance of some one in authority that it was not a violation of the law. And after making all arrangements they chartered a special train, and they sent the president of the steel corporation, Mr. Frick—and you must remember that Mr. Frick made another voyage in 1904, not for the purpose of protecting the steel corporation, but for the purpose of finding out if contributions could be made to campaign funds in 1904—and the President of the United States met Mr. Gary and Mr. Frick and Mr. Root in the Executive Mansion at 9.30 a. m. Perkins stood listening in New York with a telephone receiver at his ear in order to learn what decision the President of the United States had come to.

And, waiting, he received the information from Loeb, the clerk, at 9.30 that Mr. Gary and Mr. Frick had just come in to see the President according to the agreement made on Sunday, the day before, and that he would hear from them in a few minutes. At 8 minutes to 10 Perkins, with the telephone still to his ear, with the line chartered and waiting, received the information that the President had said that the proposed purchase of the only great rival of the steel corporation by that corporation would not be interfered with by him, and the news was then flashed to the stock exchange that the President of the United States had agreed not to interfere then or thereafter with the prosecution of the steel corporation for purchasing the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. property. And it was purchased.

I will not go on here in detail, but later on it may devolve upon me to say to the House whether that was a violation of the law or not. But I do know that the then President of the United States, in November, 1907, decided in 10 minutes that that was not a violation or was not such a violation of the law as would require him to interfere, when it had taken the lawyers of the Government and the Supreme Court of the United States nearly 18 years to determine the law of the country.

Now, Perkins and Gary and Frick got the acquiescence of the then President of the United States in 15 minutes, after submitting the case to him, to purchase the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co.; and for that or some other reason with immense millions these immense corporations are backing the then President of the United States, who is now endeavoring to violate the rules and precedents of this great country to become for the third time the President of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, the country can not attribute to patriotism or to love of country or to a desire for good government the action of the interests represented by Perkins and by McCormick in spending their money in behalf of Mr. Roosevelt's campaign. Well can they afford to pay his campaign expenses, both in the primary and in the election, and take the only chance that seems to be left to them to secure the abandonment of the prosecution of the United States Steel Corporation, now being vigorously prosecuted by the present fearless and able Chief Executive. [Applause.]

I am not his political defender. I do not expect to vote for him should he be nominated. But I have admiration for a man of courage and of will. I have admiration for—

> Men who possess opinions and a will;
> Men who have honor; men who will not lie.

[Applause.]

But whatever his fate politically may be in this contest, I have this to say of him: That I believe if this country is to be afflicted with any Republican President, the interests of the people who love the Government and its institutions, the interests of the people who are devoted to that form of Government that was cemented with the blood of the fathers and builded, I hope, on the eternal rock of right and justice, will be subserved by him better than his opponent, and my people prefer him to any other Republican candidate. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman want to interrupt me?

Mr. JACKSON. No. I wanted to say a few words in my own time.

Mr. BARTLETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, another thing. This paragraph is for the enforcement of the antitrust law. I have shown you where the former President once stood and I have shown you where he stands now. I have shown you that it was left for the Democratic minority to answer his demand that funds be appropriated to carry on these prosecutions.

But there is another thing that I desire to call to your attention. In the enforcement of this law there was employed as a special Assistant Attorney General from this trust appropriation made in 1905 an eminent lawyer for the prosecution, specifically, of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway, the compensation to be thereafter determined, and $1,000 was paid him as retainer. That able lawyer, that great man who was sought to be employed, and who was employed in the prosecution of this alleged criminal violation of the law, was the present governor of Ohio, Judge Harmon.

He began to prosecute that suit, and when it was developed that instead of being a mere violation of the law, a mere proceeding where directions were given to file proceedings in the equity side of the court, it was an altogether different sort of a case, he used this famous expression to the President, that "Guilt is personal," and that personal guilt in the violation of the statute was brought directly home to a former Secretary of the Navy in the administration of President Roosevelt; whereupon Mr. Harmon and Mr. Judson, who had been employed by the Department of Justice to prosecute these violators of the law, because they claimed that a mere punishment by fine and taking money out of the coffers of these corporations was not a proper enforcement of the law, and asserted that this guilt was personal, were directed to discontinue the prosecution and were discharged as attorneys for the Government.

Oh, it is great to parade around the country, booted and spurred and topped with a cocked hat and armed with "the big stick," proclaiming that one stands for what is good and against what is wrong as our former President is doing. It is great to talk to the crowd and declaim against "the criminal rich." But whenever the criminal rich are his personal friends and contributors to his campaign funds in the past and in the present and are expected to contribute further campaign funds in the future, this great apostle of "the people's rights" and opponent of "the criminal rich" and "the criminal corporations" either forbids the prosecution or acquiesces in its abandonment and directs its discontinuance.

O Mr. Chairman, I repeat again, in this hour not only the Republican Party but the country needs—

> Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
> Men whom the spoils of office can not buy;
> Men who possess opinions and a will;
> Men who have honor; men who will not lie.

[Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not at this time take the trouble to reply to the irrelevant remarks of my friend from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] concerning ex-President Roosevelt. The fact is that we have heard a good many references of this sort recently on the Democratic side of the aisle. All of them are inspired by pure fear. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GARNER. That is the gentleman's theory.

Mr. MANN. The Colonel has got the Democratic side scared to death.

Mr. BARTLETT. He has got you standpatters skinned to death.

Mr. MANN. I do not propose to discuss the question as to who should be the nominee at the Chicago convention, but whoever is the nominee——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will not have a chance. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. I have been here a good many years, and have heard that same statement every time on that side of the House, and every time the result has been the same. We have licked you to death, and we will do it again. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Hope springs eternal in the human breast.

Mr. MANN. I hope I may be pardoned now for referring to the subject matter under consideration. This item in the bill has been referred to by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT]. I remember when he offered on the floor an amendment, I think, for $250,000——

Mr. BARTLETT. That is right.

Mr. MANN. For the enforcement of the antitrust law. Smart, keen, and bright as he is, the gentleman from Georgia was endeavoring to put the Republican side of the House in a hole.

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, no; if the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman was trying to put the Republican side of the House in a hole, and that is no reflection on the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman permit an interruption? I do not want to make another speech.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman will not charge me with that. While I would be very glad at all times——

Mr. MANN. I will withdraw my statement that he was trying to put the Republican Party in a hole. He came very near putting the Republican Party in the House in a hole. As I recall, the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. Hepburn, came back with a proposition to increase the amount to $500,000, and that coming from the Republican side of the House, the Republicans voted it into the bill, and then they were the ones who had proposed half a million dollars, instead of giving the credit to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] of proposing a quarter of a million dollars.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman from Georgia promptly called the bluff of the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. Hepburn, and accepted the amendment, and the next year they spent $20,000 of the $500,000.

Mr. MANN. Which showed that that amount was not necessary at that time.

Mr. BARTLETT. Not when you did not try to enforce the law.

Mr. MANN. But here is the fact: The Sherman antitrust law had been on the statute books for many years. All of the time we were hearing from gentlemen who were complaining that the administrations had not enforced the law. There was complaint from this side of the House that the Cleveland administration had not enforced the law and complaint from that side of the House that the McKinley administration had not enforced the law and that the Roosevelt administration was not enforcing the law, when the fact was that Congress had not made the appropriation necessary for the enforcement of the law. Then we made the appropriation. Now the law is being enforced.

Mr. GARNER. In spots.

Mr. MANN. What is the situation? I propose to give some information to gentlemen on that subject in the very slight hope that the information will be able to penetrate their brains far enough to make a difference in their votes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask that the gentleman have more time. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MANN. I only want five minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman want 10 minutes?

Mr. MANN. No; I want to get through, if I can.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman have his time extended 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I only asked for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the gentleman's time will be extended five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. In this case this year the estimate was $300,000 for the enforcement of the antitrust laws, not exceeding $25,000 of which should be for salaries for necessary employees in the District of Columbia.

The bill as reported carries $200,000, with not exceeding $10,000 to be expended in the District. The estimate was for $325,000 for payment of regular assistants, United States district attorneys. The bill only carries $315,000 for that purpose. So that, if these two appropriations go through as they are provided for, no increase can be made in the force of regular assistants, the United States attorneys, and the department will be restricted to the $200,000 for the enforcement of the antitrust law.

To give some idea of what this means, from the enactment of the Sherman antitrust law until March 4, 1909, the beginning of the present administration, only 62 proceedings, civil and criminal, were brought under that law, of which 16 were pending when Presdent Taft took office. Now, remember that the law was passed in 1890. From that time up to 1909 there were only 62 proceedings commenced, both civil and criminal, and since President Taft assumed office there have been brought 65 proceedings, civil and criminal, besides the 16 proceedings which were pending when he took office. Of these 16, all have been disposed of except 1 now under advisement in the Supreme Court and 1 on advisement for application for final decree in the circuit court.

At the present time there are pending 18 criminal proceedings and 21 civil proceedings. Among these are the civil prosecutions of the American Sugar Refining Co., the United States Steel Corporation, the International Harvester Co., the United Shoe Machinery Co., the National Cash Register Co., all of them difficult, complicated cases, involving a large amount of testimony and the services of the most competent counsel procurable.

Among the criminal proceedings pending are the indictments of the officers of the National Cash Register Co., the so-called Bathtub Trust, the United Shoe Machinery Co., some of the lumber companies, and some transportation companies between the Pacific coast and points in Alaska, all of these involving a great deal of evidence in detail and much labor in the preparation of the cases for trial.

These big corporations and their friends now under prosecution in the civil courts and under prosecution in the criminal courts are all opposed to the enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law, are all opposed to the amendment offered by my colleague to increase the fund which the Government can use in the prosecution of these cases. They are all in favor of the proposition from the Democratic side of the House that there shall not be money enough appropriated by the Government for the Department of Justice to permit that department to vigorously prosecute these trusts. For years you gentlemen on that side of the aisle have howled at the administration because you said they were not prosecuting violations under the Sherman antitrust law, and now when you find that they are vigorously prosecuting them you seek to deprive the Government of the United States of the means to carry on these prosecutions. [Applause on the Republican side.]

We shall charge on our side, we will charge on every stump in the land during the campaign, that you have endeavored to throttle the efforts of the Republican administration to put down the trusts and the combinations, and to prevent the criminal prosecution of the officers who have been guilty of a violation of the law. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. JACKSON was recognized.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. JACKSON. About five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and the amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words in support of this amendment. As was so well said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], it is not necessary to attempt to answer any of the things that were stated by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT]. The people of the country well know that Col. Roosevelt has thrown the entire Democratic Party of politicians into hysteria, and it is therefore easily explainable that the scene which has occurred here did occur. I will say this, however, that whatever may occur at Chicago, the colonel will not so far forget himself as to enact so unseemly, not to say so unparliamentary, a scene at Chicago as we have witnessed on the other side in the debate on this question.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to yield. I have only a few minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. But the gentleman has charged something unparliamentary to this side.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not blame the gentleman.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, there is one commendable thing about the Democratic Party, and that is its unwavering faith in the Republican Party, and the gentleman in his history of the trust law forgot to remind the House that the Sherman law, which he was so highly praising, originated upon the Republican side. That law was a Republican law. A committee of a Democratic Congress had considered the trust question before the Congress which passed the law of 1890 convened, and the result of that investigation was that the Democratic committee reported to Congress that it referred the question of the regulation of combinations and trusts to the Congress which was then convening, a Republican Congress. That Republican Congress, under the leadership of John Sherman and William McKinley, vindicated the faith that the Democratic Party had in the Republican Party. And so President Taft needs no vindication or praise from that side of the House. I think it is true that the law is being faithfully enforced by the present administration.

But there is one point to which I desire to call attention now, and that is that in all of the 60 proceedings which have been mentioned by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], or at least in a good part of them, equity decrees have been procured. The force of an equity proceeding or its decree depends entirely upon the watchfulness of the Government in the enforcement of that decree after its rendition. What is the cause of the complaint in these trust proceedings? It is that the decrees in equity have not all been enforced. They have been useless, because the interest in the transaction has dropped as soon as the decree was obtained. The country is now watching as to what the effect of the decree in the Standard Oil case will be. If it is followed up and enforced, it will come to something; if it is left where the decree in the Ohio case was dropped 20 years ago, it will amount to nothing to the people of the country. Is this House and is this administration willing to go on record publishing to the country that the Department of Justice has asked for $300,000 and that we will only vote them $200,000? Nothing could occur which would cause more delight in the hearts of the lawbreakers of the land.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACKSON. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Where is there any request of the Department of Justice for $300,000?

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has just said here that the officer of the Department of Justice asked for that sum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is that what the gentleman relied upon?

Mr. JACKSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can always rely on any statement that I make on the floor of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But he did not refer to the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kansas referred to the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON, who read from the hearings.

Mr. JACKSON. Both the gentlemen from Illinois, Mr. MANN and his colleague, Mr. CANNON, said that the department asked for this money. Mr. CANNON said that Mr. Fowler asked for $300,000.

Mr. CANNON. The regular estimate was for $250,000. The recommendation of the committee is for $200,000, and the examination of Mr. Fowler, from the Attorney General's office, disclosed the necessity for $300,000.

Mr. JACKSON. That is the way I understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

I have heard a good part of the testimony relied on by the Government in the lumber cases, which has been referred to, and in my judgment, and I have had some experience in such matters, the testimony can not be taken in this case alone for one-eighth of the whole amount allowed in this bill. I venture the opinion that the attorneys' fees which will be paid by the defendants in this lumber case, or in any one of a half dozen cases now pending, will equal the whole amount of this appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the statement of the gentleman is the greatest justification for refusing to give the Department of Justice what they request. If any department of the Government is expected to know the law it is the Department of Justice. Informal statements as to the amount of money they think they might be able to use when they do not submit requests in conformity with the law is the best proof that they do not know what they are talking about. If they needed the money and they know the law, then they would estimate in accordance with it. Why is not this money granted?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. There is a regular estimate transmitted under the law through the Secretary of the Treasury for $250,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I admit that. I am talking about the $300,000 which the gentleman mentioned, and which was stated would be necessary, merely as an excuse to try and force out of the committee a larger appropriation than had been made for any one year in several years. Since this special appropriation was made in 1904 the department has had $1,500,000 especially for this purpose. In addition they have for this year $325,000 for the pay of regular assistants to the United States district attorneys, $200,000 for the pay of assistants to the Attorney General, and $500,000 for district attorneys and their assistants.

If the Department of Justice would employ men who would produce results, instead of seeking lawyers in different employments of the Government anxious to be put upon the pay roll at much higher compensation without producing results, they would get much better results with less expenditure. After the 4th of March, Mr. Chairman, these pay rolls will be cleaned out. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Many of these inefficient men, many of these so-called high-class counsel, who have been attending on these appropriations without producing results, will be eliminated, and competent men will be employed to do the work of the Department of Justice, and do it successfully and efficiently. Let the gentleman from Illinois go to the country, as he states, speaking from every stump, telling how the Democratic Party has endeavored to prevent the Department of Justice enforcing the antitrust law——

Mr. MANN. That is what I will do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope he will be accompanied by the distinguished former President of the United States, who may have an opportunity to repeat how ineffective and futile and idiotic has been the conduct and progress made under the present administration [applause on the Democratic side], and together they may succeed in convincing——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman agrees with the former President and takes his side.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). They may succeed in convincing the country that the Democracy, which originated this appropriation, has been compelled to-day to adopt regulations to prevent the continuance of the abuses which have existed since the appropriation has been made to have the expenditures made properly; that they have attempted to prevent or to stifle the enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law. Let the Department of Justice employ competent and efficient men; if they do, there will be no complaint about the adequacy of the appropriation. I believe we have given all that can be expended, should be expended. Having given as much as was asked last year, the hearings not disclosing any necessity for additional money except to pay exorbitant and indefensible fees, no more should be given. The committee could not increase the item.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired and the question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired and debate has been closed. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON) there were—ayes 20, noes 36.

Mr. CANNON. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I inquire the exact amount of the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill proposes an appropriation of $200,000 and the amendment increases it to $250,000.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. CANNON) reported that there were—ayes 28, noes 49.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Suits to set aside conveyances of allotted lands, Five Civilized Tribes: For the payment of necessary expenses incident to any suits brought at the request of the Secretary of the Interior in the eastern judicial district of Oklahoma, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $20,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriations heretofore made for this purpose: Provided, That not to exceed $10,000 of said sum shall be available for the expenses of the United States on appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Having fully set forth my views on these suits in the past, I do not desire to go into an extended discussion into the merits or demerits of same at this time. But I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill for some information, if I can get his attention.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am listening to the gentleman.

Mr. CARTER. On page 1510 of the hearings I notice Mr. Knaebel, in his statement, says that there is already a balance on hand of $58,000. Later on in the same statement he contends that all this sum can be used for the continuation of the work in these suits. Am I correct in that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They had a balance of $58,000 and expected to spend $30,000 altogether this year, leaving $28,000 at the end of the year.

Mr. CARTER. Then what is the necessity of appropriating the additional $20,000 which the gentleman has in this bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They will need $48,000 next year.

Mr. CARTER. They will need $48,000 next year? They were given $50,000 by the act of May 27, 1908, authorizing the suits, then in 1909 another $50,000, in 1910 another $50,000, and in 1911 another $50,000, making in all $200,000 that will be spent by the 30th day of this month, which is the end of the fiscal year. Now, you have given the Department of Justice $20,000 more, and toward the bottom of the same page I see another item of $15,000 for "suits affecting title to Seminole allotted lands in Oklahoma," making a grand aggregate of $235,000 appropriated by Congress, and yet very few of these suits seem to have reached any definite conclusion. Now, will the gentleman enlighten this House and the country by telling us when there is any likelihood of any considerable portion of these suits being settled?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman himself knows the United States Supreme Court within the year has decided two or three of them.

Mr. CARTER. The Supreme Court has, if my memory serves me right, decided five of the cases, as follows: The Marchie Tiger case, the Deming Investment Co. case, the Goat case, the Mullen and Jansen case, and the Heckman-Owen case.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Those suits have been carried up to the Supreme Court of the United States, and under these decisions of the court certain questions now necessarily being sent back for trial of a great many of these cases he can estimate as easily as I can how long it will take to finish those suits which are brought to protect the Indians from the rapacity of these dishonest whites.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman's remarks about protecting an Indian from the rapacity of dishonest whites are superfluous and unnecessary. I am seeking light and information and not accusations. I want simply to say to him that I myself am one of these helpless wards of the Government for whom one of these very suits was brought to set aside a conveyance.

The gentleman from New York may differ with me on the subject, but I have a stealthy, sneaking notion that I am as capable of taking care of my own affairs as the gentleman from New York, the Secretary of the Interior, the Attorney General, or any other man under heaven's canopy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true, and the gentleman knows, too, that the conditions were such that, in order to protect those Indians who were not competent and who have been defrauded and who have been despoiled of the lands or property, the Department of Justice was compelled to include a great number of transactions which, because of the limitation of 60 days, if I recall correctly, it was unable to investigate. There are over thirty and odd thousand cases, and I prefer to embarrass the gentleman from Oklahoma just a little bit, rather than to have all the Indians who are incompetent defrauded of their property by dishonest men who have been seeking to take advantage of their incompetency.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from New York can not possibly embarrass the gentleman from Oklahoma in this respect. Myself and my people—competent though many of us claim to be—have been so unjustly held in a state of pupilage that embarrassment from additional abuse of our liberties is impossible.

I again insist that I am only seeking information and not a discussion of the moral phase of this question, though I would be very glad to take that issue up with any man with sufficient time and proper conditions. Neither do I care at this time to burden this committee with any further discussion as to the manner in which these suits were brought.

The gentleman in charge of the bill says the department was only given 60 days. I deny it, and I defy the gentleman from New York or any other person to show me any limitation in the face of the law about the bringing of these suits.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not about bringing the suits. Sixty days were provided, I think, on the Indian appropriation act that certain conveyances should be validated, and it was the opinion of the Department of Justice—I have not looked it up, but undoubtedly the gentleman knows it better than I do—that unless suits were entered at the expiration of the 60-day period it would be too late, and the action would not lie, and, if I am not mistaken, the department has been somewhat sustained in that by some of the cases that have been adjudicated up to this time.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman is badly mistaken. I have never heard of any Supreme Court decision holding that these suits must be brought within a limited time. Department of Justice officials themselves certainly do not contend that. When they were brought to time by your committee for the reckless and wholesale manner in which these suits were instituted, they offered as an excuse that the restrictions would be removed within 60 days, and that some of the invalid transactions made in the past might be validated by the removal of restrictions. The answer to that is that the very restriction act itself prohibited the validating of any theretofore invalid transactions. Section 4 of this act—the very one which provided for the bringing of these suits—contains the following language:

> That allotted lands shall not be subjected or held liable to any form of personal claim or demand against the allottees arising or existing prior to the removal of restrictions, other than contracts heretofore expressly permitted by law.

Now, with a good lawyer, like the gentleman from New York, I think that provision ought to forever settle that question, so that it will not be raised in future debates.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Department of Justice, charged with the responsibility of conducting these suits, was of the opinion that it was necessary to bring them in advance, and I am inclined to think that they were wise in that case. One of the grounds upon which the suits were antagonized was that the department had no power to bring action in the name of the United States. Even a technicality like that was resorted to, and I have no doubt astute lawyers would easily have taken advantage of the other suggestion. I do not think we can criticize the Department of Justice in going in as they have to protect these Indians from the consequences that the gentleman and myself know.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Oklahoma be extended for five minutes. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I repeat that I shall be very glad at any appropriate time to go into a full discussion of the merits of these suits or of the demerits of the manner in which they have been brought and prosecuted by the department, but there is much to be said on my side, and it seems, too, that the gentleman must know that the discussion on my side of the case might be prolonged indefinitely. I again insist that I am trying to get some definite information. Since, however, this question of the manner in which these suits have been brought has arisen I do want to make this statement: Any fair, unbiased man, having the least bit of familiarity with the action of the Department of Justice and the Interior Department with relation to these suits in Oklahoma will be forced to admit that it is one of the most notorious pieces of incompetency and infringement upon the rights of the people of which any government has ever been guilty, and it ought to cause the blush of shame to mantle the cheek of every department official who has had a part in delaying these matters, tying up the business interests of our State, and placing an embargo on the price of the Indians' property.

The restriction bill, approved May 27, 1908, authorized the institution of these suits, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and I took part in its passage. The gentleman from New York made a speech against the bill and I made a speech for it, not that I favored this provision, but because of the many valuable enactments contained therein. In the public hearings which were held on this bill department officials appeared before us and asked that $50,000 be given for clearing up titles to restricted lands in Oklahoma. We all knew that some fraudulent deeds had been given and realized the importance of removing every cloud from the title before the lands were finally offered for sale, but we also had a mortal fear of having these suits brought without proper investigation. These suits could have been brought under the general law anyway, and these department officials seemed to think that they had sufficient machinery with which to bring same. But hearings will show that these same officials stated that they wanted $50,000, not for the purpose of bringing suits but for the purpose of making an investigation so that suits could be brought intelligently and not in a wholesale manner. Now, let us see if these gentlemen have kept faith with this Congress. To fully elucidate this argument it will be necessary to repeat here what I have said on two former occasions on the floor of this House, and that is the necessary procedure for making an investigation preparatory to properly bringing these suits.

The same law which appropriated this $50,000 provided that the tribal rolls, as prepared by the Dawes Commission, should be conclusive evidence to the age and quantum of Indian blood. The test of the allottee's right to convey was the quantum of Indian blood and age. These rolls are indexed in alphabetical order, so that the only thing necessary would be to go to the records of the county in which the land was located, get the name of the vendor, run down the alphabetical list of the rolls, and right beside the name of the allottee you would find his age and quantum of blood. This investigation should require not to exceed five minutes to the name. So that all necessary examinations could have been made prior to the 60 days, if, indeed, that had been necessary, which it was not. Not only that, Mr. Chairman, this investigation could have been made and all spurious suits dismissed, even after they were brought; but was any of these precautions taken? Not on your life, because the moment the suits are dismissed that moment their tenure of office expires. You do not expect one of these fellows to work himself out of a job, do you? Instead of that, they brought suits in a wholesale manner. Hoping to bolster up their own incompetent and disgraceful acts by insidious attempts to discredit some of our State officials, unwarranted suits and criminal prosecutions were attempted, only to be dismissed by the Federal court.

More real harm was done, however, on the converse side of this proposition. Suits were brought to set aside conveyances of allottees, of whose competency there was not a particle of doubt, and who were fully authorized to alienate their land at the time the transfers were made.

Now, this is our side of the case very briefly told, and no one seems safe on either side of the question from the rapacity of this bunch of officials. All seem fish that come into their net.

Now, let me ask the gentleman one more question before I am through. As stated heretofore there is an item at the bottom of the same page providing for the payment of expenses incident to suits brought affecting the title of Seminole lands. Can the gentleman tell us the difference between this and the other suits? Are they not of the same character, and is not that an ingenious way to impose upon the Committee on Appropriations to the extent of getting an additional appropriation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. I think they are a different character of suits.

Mr. CARTER. Well, I think the gentleman will find that they are all the same. And since $48,000 is left with which to prosecute these suits, this $15,000 additional would make $63,000 for the ensuing year as against $50,000 appropriated heretofore, which is an increase of $13,000. Mr. Knaebel states in the hearings that of these suits some six or seven thousand have been dismissed. So it would seem that as the cases narrow down the appropriation must be increased.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That statement is hardly fair. The gentleman knows that there are about 30,000 suits. In the first action brought in the district court a demurrer was sustained to the bill, and that case was appealed to the circuit court of appeals and the circuit court of appeals reversed the decree of the district court and held the bill to be good. Then Congress, by legislation with which the gentleman is familiar and with which I am familiar, authorized an appeal to the United States Supreme Court of certain typical cases, in order, if possible, to shorten and prevent as much of the litigation as possible. Four cases, at least, have within a very short time been decided by the Supreme Court. Some of those defendants have been sentenced. The trial of the others will result later, and in the meantime much of this litigation is discontinued. After these actions have been dismissed in which the department is convinced that there is no ground for recovery, pending an appeal to the United States Supreme Court, all of these other cases have been held in abeyance; but now that certain important questions have been settled, it will be possible to prosecute these suits, and many of them will be handled, and a much larger expenditure will be required than if they were all in the same state of suspense as they have been heretofore. Now, relative to the Seminole cases, Mr. Gresham, who is in charge of that, states——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Gresham states:

This office was established about one year ago, and while we realize that the work is only fairly begun, we have accomplished much good. The office has been instrumental in removing clouds from title by quit-claim deeds and judgments of approximately $200,000 worth of allotted land; 8 persons have been convicted of deed forgeries, and 23 similar prosecutions are now pending in the State courts with many others for forgery and the embezzlement of funds derived from the sale of minor and inherited lands in prospect. A number of civil actions in ejectment and for the cancellation of illegal deeds are now pending, and many others of a similar character will be instituted in behalf of allottees during the next year. Practically every adult member of the tribe, both Indian and freedman, has called at the office and sought advice or assistance in relation to allotted or inherited land.

In view of such statements as that, the committee could not possibly refuse to recommend the appropriation of the money necessary for this service.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to criticize the committee any further than this: These matters are so complicated that they will fool even as an astute accountant as my distinguished friend from New York. They are so involved that unless a man is thoroughly acquainted with all the details he is very apt to be imposed upon in these different amounts expended, which may be for similar purposes. I am reasonably certain that this money for the Seminole prosecution is to be used for the same purpose as that of the item under discussion. What is the distinction? The Seminoles are a part of the Five Civilized Tribes and the suits are of practically the same nature. The only difference is that the Seminoles' deeds have not yet been delivered, while patents have been delivered to the others.

Now, in conclusion, I want to say this: If my memory serves me right, the law points in these numerous suits were 14 in number. The five cases spoken of before in this discussion have settled all those points except two and—again resorting to my memory—those two relate to inherited estates, and in one of these cases a decision has already been rendered by the United States Court in the Eastern District of Oklahoma and the supreme court of the State, and this decision has not been appealed from. So these suits have been resolved into a question of classification and clerical work. That is to say, as soon as it can be determined to what class a case belongs it should either be dismissed, settled, or prosecuted to a final determination without much delay.

I am willing that the department shall have the necessary funds to make this classification, and live in hopes that some reasonable dispatch will be used in the disposition of these suits within the next year. But I warn the gentleman that the people of Oklahoma have suffered long and greatly from the clouds that these suits have brought upon the Indian lands, and I think this House ought to take a hand in the matter, not only for the benefit of the business interests and the white people of Oklahoma, but for the sake of the Indians themselves. The value of those lands have been almost completely destroyed by the clouding of titles which this wholesale bringing of suits has caused, and unless some reasonable dispatch is made before the meeting of the next Congress, I am going to ask the intelligent membership of this House to take this matter in hand and make some intelligent settlement of it, regardless of what any department says.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I should like to ask the gentleman whom he means by "us." He makes the statement that when two of these points are decided by the Supreme Court he thinks that court will decide against "us." What does he mean by "us."

Mr. CARTER. I think I qualified that statement immediately afterwards by saying I meant the defendants in the suits. I do not happen to be one of the defendants, although a great many of my constituents are. I was one of the incompetents for whom suit was brought, so instead of saying "we-uns" I should have said "you-uns."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to say this, that everybody knows that very considerable inconvenience has been occasioned to a great many innocent persons, and I think the desire of the Department of Justice is to clean up that situation as much as possible.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the amendment under consideration reads as follows, viz:

Suits to set aside conveyances of allotted lands, Five Civilized Tribes: For the payment of necessary expenses incident to any suits brought at the request of the Secretary of the Interior in the eastern judicial district of Oklahoma, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $20,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriations heretofore made for this purpose: Provided, That not to exceed $10,000 of said sum shall be available for the expenses of the United States on appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States.

It clearly appears from the first sentence that this law can be and, in fact, it has been made an engine of oppression to the Indians as well as the white citizens of Oklahoma. It authorizes suits to be brought to set aside conveyances of allotted lands of the Five Civilized Tribes.

If it had stated that the appropriation was made to set aside "fraudulent sales" of Indian lands I would have no objection to the appropriation. The language in this bill authorizes suits to be brought without alleging or proving frauds in purchasing lands from an Indian. Such sales are and were authorized by law, and not unlawful per se, yet this law authorizes suits against any person having any deed of conveyance to Indian lands, and such suits have been brought to the ruin and detriment of hundreds of innocent men in Oklahoma, and many of them have been pending for years; and the result of these suits has been to prevent the Indians from selling their surplus lands for anything like their true worth. No white man would buy land from an Indian, who knows that the Government could and would sue for the next day.

These Indians are land poor. They must sell some of their land to improve their homestead, which they can not sell. The employment of these attorneys and the authorizing of these suits prevents the development of that country. Thirty thousand of these suits have been brought already, and but few have been disposed of, as is shown by the following evidence given before the Appropriation Committee by Mr. Knaebel, the attorney in charge of these Indian suits in Oklahoma:

The CHAIRMAN. What has been done under this appropriation?
Mr. KENDALL. Shall I go back and briefly rehearse it from the beginning?
The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. KNAEBEL. That appropriation originated in 1908. It grew out of the fact——
The CHAIRMAN (interposing). In 1909, was it not?
Mr. PAGE. The appropriation was made for the fiscal year 1909.
Mr. COURTS. But it is probable that the act was approved in 1908.
Mr. KNAEBEL. It was found in that year that a vast number of unlawful transactions with Indians in Oklahoma had occurred, and this appropriation became necessary to meet the expenses of the endeavor to set them aside. Three hundred and one suits were begun in the eastern district of Oklahoma, involving about 30,000 different alleged unlawful conveyances, and there were some 16,000 different parties defendant. A great deal has been said since to the effect that the litigation has resulted in casting clouds upon titles in that State and tying up the development of the country. In reply to that I will simply say that there has been no desire upon the part of the department to delay the litigation in any respect. The department was always ready and, with this money, able to go ahead with it and try the cases and dispose of them upon their merits, but the effort was blocked by demurrers raising the question of the right of the Government to represent the Indians and the question of the right to join different parties having distinct interests in the same bill. The lower court sustained these objections, which put a stop instantly to any further progress until that ruling was reviewed.

Typical cases were taken to the circuit court of appeals, and the Government there succeeded in overturning the decision of the court below. By a provision annexed to the appropriation bill of that year jurisdiction was given to the Supreme Court to review these cases, and some of them were brought to the Supreme Court. Meanwhile we could do nothing but tighten up in Oklahoma, maintain supervision over the litigation, and attend to such settlements as were possible. The Supreme Court has very recently ruled sustaining absolutely the right of the Government to bring these suits, and putting aside the objection of multifariousness. In the case in which these questions were first passed upon, it also ruled that the conveyances involved were unlawful. That case rules a number of similar cases pending in the courts below, both as to the right of the Government to prosecute and as to the invalidity of the conveyances. In another case, more recently adjudicated, the court held that the conveyances there involved were not unlawful. Many distinct questions of alienability arise in these transactions, because of the differences of tribes, degree of Indian blood, and character of the land; that is, whether homestead or what is called surplus land, or directly allotted or inherited from deceased allottees. The bills are drawn so that each one may embrace only transactions of the same legal character, and, of course, it is possible that the Government may be wrong in respect to some of the classes; but we believe that we are right in a large majority of the contentions made in these cases.

The CHAIRMAN. One of the complaints or objections urged to this appropriation was the charge that the department had instituted indiscriminately a great number of cases without any investigation. Will you state the circumstances under which these suits were initiated, and explain the limitation that was fixed upon the time in which they should be brought? I want you to explain the reasons the Government had to exercise some haste in filing these cases.

Mr. KNAEBEL. The act of May 27, 1908, was passed shortly before this litigation was instituted. It made new provisions as to the right to alienate allotments, and these provisions were to go into effect within 60 days after the approval of the act. The question arose as to whether, upon the expiration of that period, certain transactions, invalid at the time of the passage of the act, might not become so valid as to render any attempt to set them aside futile, if the suits were not previously begun. For that reason, and to avoid any question as to the timeliness of the suits, the work had to be done with enormous haste, and all the facilities then available were used to assemble the data to be gotten from the records, and it was obtained, as far as time would allow, and the greatest care was taken that could be taken to avoid mistakes. Notwithstanding that care, some of the reports relied upon were erroneous, and some transactions were included in the suits that ought not to have been included in the litigation, but these have been largely eliminated since. That has been a large part of the work of this force of representatives we have had at Muskogee during the period of quiescence, and in making these eliminations it has been open to anybody to show where mistake has been made, and in all cases the mistakes have been promptly rectified as established. Then a great many of the transactions have been settled by parties when they have been shown that they were in the wrong, giving quitclaim conveyances. Still others have been settled through the cooperation of the Secretary of the Interior by adjusting the transactions in accordance with the law and in accordance with what was fair and equitable so far as the Indians were concerned.

Mr. Chairman, the Seminole Indians of Oklahoma are one of the Five Civilized Tribes, and the provision of this bill relative to this tribe is as follows, viz:

Suits affecting title to Seminole allotted lands in Oklahoma: For the payment of necessary expense incident to any suits brought, including the salaries of attorneys specially employed to set aside illegal conveyances of Seminole allotments, to protect the possession of Seminole allottees in their allotted lands, or in the prosecution of any criminal proceedings based on frauds perpetrated upon Seminole allottees with respect to their allotted lands, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $15,000.

Mr. Chairman, the language in this Seminole paragraph is entirely different from the first one that I objected to; this authorizes suit to be brought to set aside illegal conveyance only, the other one authorizes suits to set aside any conveyance, as I have fully shown. The first language applies to all of the Five Tribes, the last only to the Seminoles. Why this difference? I have no objection—neither will any citizen of Oklahoma have any objection—to suits to set aside illegal conveyances made by Indians, where the Indian would be compelled to refund the consideration paid him for his land by his purchaser. I do, however, insist that the first provision in this bill, permitting these suits to be brought to set aside all conveyances of land heretofore made by all the Five Tribes except the Seminoles, is an unqualified outrage, if not a crime against the citizens of Oklahoma, especially those who have lawfully purchased lands from Indians.

If the conveyances were illegal, as in the Seminole cases, then I, as in the Seminole cases, would not object to these suits to set them aside. But this outrageous provision permits a citizen to be sued and harassed simply because he has bought land from an Indian and has a conveyance from him, without alleging or proving that it is an illegal or fraudulent sale.

The Seminole Indians are bitterly complaining of their treatment by the Government for withholding from them their patents or deeds to their lands. The law directs the Secretary to do this. He has refused, as I will show, without cause, in my judgment, to do so, and the only reason for his refusal suggesting itself to me is that time may be given to bring more of these unjustifiable suits against the purchasers of these lands.

On April 11, 1912, Mr. DAVENPORT introduced the following bill on this subject, namely:

A bill (H. R. 23184) directing the Secretary of the Interior to deliver patents to Seminole allottees, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to forthwith deliver all patents or deeds to Seminole allottees covering their respective allotments: Provided, however, That the delivery of such patents or deeds shall not in any manner operate to validate any void or voidable titles or add to the weight of evidence required to avoid the same, or serve to remove restrictions that have not heretofore been removed by express act of Congress.

This bill was favorably reported May 14, 1912, by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House and is on the Union Calendar of the House, No. 239.

The said report is as follows, viz:

(Union Calendar No. 239.)

[House Report No. 698, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

PATENTS TO SEMINOLE ALLOTTEES.

Mr. FERRIS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 23184:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 23184) directing the Secretary of the Interior to deliver patents to Seminole allottees, and for other purposes, having duly considered the same, report the bill without amendment and recommend that it do pass.

The Seminole Tribe of Indians is one of what is known as the Five Civilized Tribes, all of the Five Civilized Tribes having taken their allotments, and the patents or deeds to the same having been delivered to the Choctaws, Chickasaws, Cherokees, and Creeks, but there has only been three patents or deeds delivered to the members of the Seminole Tribe of Indians.

In the Seminole Nation, the withholding of patents or deeds from the allottees has been, as shown by the testimony presented before the committee, detrimental to the allottee as well as detrimental to the honest farmer who desired to go into the Seminole Nation and purchase a home for himself and family, since the allotting of the Seminole lands.

Congress passed an act April 21, 1904, whereby it removed the restrictions from the surplus lands of adult freedmen in the Seminole Nation. May 27, 1908, Congress passed another act with reference to removing restrictions upon alienation upon lands of allottees in the Five Civilized Tribes, of which the Seminole Tribe is one. The provisions of that act removed all restrictions upon all allottees who were not Indians by blood, and upon the lands of all allottees who were Indian by blood but who were less than half blood, and upon the surplus allotment of allottees who were one-half blood or more and less than three-fourths Indian by blood. The act also gave the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, the right to remove restrictions upon application by the allottee from the lands of either the homestead or surplus allotments of those who are one-half blood or more than one-half blood and up to full blood.

In view of the fact that Congress has passed the acts of April 21, 1904, and May 27, 1908, removing restrictions from certain lands of allottees in the Seminole Nation and from a portion of allotments from other allottees, the committee believes that the patents or deeds to the lands should be delivered.

It will be noticed from the provision of the bill that the delivery of such patents or deeds shall not in any manner operate to validate any void or voidable titles or add to the weight of evidence required to avoid the same or serve to remove restrictions that have not heretofore been removed by express act of Congress.

In the hearings before the committee it was further shown that because of the failure to deliver the patents or deeds to the allottees of the Seminole Nation that various parties who had purchased lands in the Seminole Nation and the allottees themselves were refusing to pay taxes on the land from which restrictions had been removed, thereby leaving the county without any funds for its running expenses and greatly reducing the school funds in said county.

The committee recommends that the bill pass.

Mr. Chairman, as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House I have received many interesting letters favoring the passage of this bill, and among them was the following letter from John W. Willmott, an able and trustworthy attorney of Wewoka, in the Seminole country. This letter and the accompanying one written by the same writer to Senator OWEN are as follows, viz:

WEWOKA, OKLA., March 9, 1912.

To the honorable CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: A great injustice is being done the Seminole Indian Tribe and the white people of Seminole County, Okla., by the withholding of all patents to Seminole lands because a few frauds and forgeries have been committed. The Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney General have taken the view that all conveyances made of lands in Seminole Nation are void, notwithstanding the acts of Congress expressly removing the restrictions. An injunction against the collection of taxes has been obtained in the Federal court, and the county is in a very deplorable condition; and the delivery of patents, while it would not make valid a single invalid title or remove a single restriction that is not already removed, at the same time it would make titles merchantable where restrictions have been removed, and would make it so that in the future perfect titles could be obtained.

You will be surprised to learn that since the act of May 27, 1908, not a single restriction has been removed by the Secretary of the Interior as to Seminole lands, and not a single Seminole has been permitted to make a sale of his lands through the Interior Department; all, they say, because patents have not been delivered, and the Secretary of the Interior keeps the titles in doubt by withholding the patents.

While there is a crying need for the delivery of patents, and the condition here now is almost intolerable because of the dispute over titles, the Government proclaiming that there is not a good title in Seminole Nation, and we most earnestly desire that the patents be delivered, and that at once, we wish to be distinctly understood that we would like to have it provided in the act directing the Secretary of the Interior to forthwith deliver all Seminole patents; that such delivery of patent should not operate to make any land alienable which was not theretofore alienable, and should not operate to validate any title that was not theretofore legal and valid.

To put you on your guard, we will say that an effort is being made to get through Congress a bill seeking to have the patents delivered in such manner that they will operate as if delivered on the 4th of March, 1906, or that they will operate as if delivered in accordance with the provisions of the act of April 26, 1906. Now, to one unfamiliar with the Seminole situation this may seem not to be important, but if this is done it will operate to make valid a great multitude of questionable deeds made subsequent to the 4th of March, 1906, for hundreds or thousands of which sums of from $5 to $25 were paid, with no provision for any further payment. So that if the patents are delivered, they should simply be delivered with no language that can be considered to relate back, or, as we have suggested, with express language providing that the delivery shall not operate to remove any restriction not theretofore removed by Congress or to validate any deed taken prior to the removal of restrictions.

That you may more fully understand the situation, we have attached hereto a copy of a letter sent by us this day to Senator ROBERT L. OWEN.

It may work a hardship upon you, pressed, as you no doubt are, for time, to read this letter and the one attached, but if you will heed the suggestions of this letter you have an opportunity to prevent a great wrong, to render by vigilance a great public service, and to confer upon the Indians a benefit as great as was ever conferred upon them.

I may say that the district court of Seminole County has already held these conveyances made subsequent to March 4, 1906, and up to the 27th of July, 1908, by Indian citizens as distinguished from freedmen void and unenforceable, and is canceling them just as fast as they are brought before the court, and it would be a very great wrong to have any of this class of deeds validated by an act of Congress passed in conjunction with the delivery of patents.

We have the honor to remain,

Yours, very truly, JOHN W. WILLMOTT.

MARCH 9, 1912.

HON. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Having resided at Wewoka for about 11 years, and having a home and family and good law practice here, I am naturally much interested in the present and future of Seminole County; and I want to take the liberty of writing you, Senator, about some matters which have troubled us greatly in this particular locality and concerning which, I believe, you can aid us.

The subject I have in mind is the confused state of our land titles and the practical impossibility of getting relief except through some positive and unequivocal act of Congress.

You will recall that at various times, and lately with particular clearness in the Marchie Tiger case, the Supreme Court has held that in the matter of restrictions upon the power of the Indians to alienate their lands the will of Congress is supreme.

Having special regard to the Seminole Indians, as one of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in Indian Territory, Congress by the act of April 21, 1904, removed all restrictions upon the power of alienation of all citizens of said tribe not of Indian blood, except minors, and except as to their homesteads. By plain language this made all surplus lands of adult freedmen and intermarried whites having no Indian blood alienable; and many good, honorable citizens, relying upon the language of this act, so plain in its terms that it is not susceptible of misconstruction, went out and bought farms and have moved upon and improved the same at the expenditure of a large amount of labor and money.

Again, in the act of Congress of April 26, 1906, it is provided that the adult heirs of any deceased allottee of either of the Five Civilized Tribes to whom a patent has been issued or whose selection has been made may sell and convey the lands so inherited with a provision that the deeds of full-blood heirs must be approved by the honorable Secretary of the Interior, and the same act made the rolls conclusive as to the quantum of Indian blood. Plainly, this act applied to the Seminoles. And again, citizens of this county and others went out and purchased lands in good faith, relying upon this act of Congress. By its express terms this very clause above referred to relieves from the necessity of a patent, if there were ever such a necessity, and says the adult heirs of any deceased allottee * * * whose selection has been made may alienate. In another paragraph in the same act Congress expressly provided that no conveyance of any land of any of the allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes made subsequent to the removal of restrictions should be held invalid, solely because no patent had issued for the land. We do not believe that any fair-minded lawyer or judge could either contend or hold that the two acts above mentioned did not apply to the Seminoles for the sole reason that they had no patents for their lands. This last act of 1906 made alienable all lands inherited by adult mixed-blood Indians, as shown by the rolls; all lands inherited by adult freedmen and intermarried whites; and all lands inherited by full bloods, provided the deeds should be approved by the honorable Secretary of the Interior.

By the act of Congress of May 27, 1908, as you well remember, by language that applies with equal force to the Seminoles, as well as any other of the Five Civilized Tribes, it is provided that all of the lands of citizens not of Indian blood; that all of the lands of those less than half-blood Indians; that all of the lands of half-blood Indians except their homesteads shall be alienable without any restriction whatever; and that the homesteads of all half bloods and over, and the entire allotments of all over half bloods shall be alienable with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

These are the acts of the Congress of the United States upon which the good people of Seminole County, Okla., and others, including the Seminole citizens themselves, have relied for authority to deal with the lands of the Seminole Tribe. We submit they are plain enough for anyone who honestly seeks to arrive at their correct meaning.

Now, it is true, Senator, that there were a few evil men in Seminole County; and the opportunity for speculation was such, when the restrictions were removed, that some frauds were perpetrated and some crimes committed. This, however, is not different from what happened in other communities. The great body of the people of this county are a good, honest citizenship who condemn and deplore the fact that frauds and crimes have been committed; and it is upon this worthy class of people, in conjunction with the Indian citizens themselves, that the hardship of the present confused condition rests.

After the bulk of the lands from which restrictions had been removed by the provisions of the above acts had been sold and gone into the hands of white purchasers and the field for speculation had narrowed down, the grafter element, if I may call them such, began to cast about for a means by which some hold could be gotten on the lands that were still restricted, but which would likely soon pass out from under restrictions. This situation and this desire led to the development of a theory among the more astute of the grafter element; and it was this theory in the main that has brought upon us most of our present troubles though some flagrant frauds and forgeries perpetrated in securing lands from which Congress had actually removed the restrictions may have been a participating cause.

If I may impose upon your time to such extent, I would like to explain to you this theory to which I have referred, for I believe that it is very material for you to understand it. I am as sure as I am of anything, Senator, that while you earnestly desire to aid the good people of Seminole County in this matter, you would never knowingly do any act which would forward to any extent any illegal or unlawful scheme to validate questionable titles. This theory, if accepted and made law, would work untold hardship upon a great many poor and helpless people.

You will recall that the Seminole treaty providing for the allotment of the Seminole land, also provided that "all contracts for the sale disposition or encumbrance of any part of any allotment made prior to date of patent, should be void." That was the only provision relative to restrictions upon alienation. There was nothing in that treaty that directly fixed the date when patents should issue. It was provided, however, that upon the extinguishment of the tribal government, the principal chief of the tribe should execute patents for the allotments. No time was fixed by this original treaty, however, for the extinguishment or dissolution of the tribal government, and we think it fair to assume that that was left for Congress in its discretion to fix. By the Indian appropriation act of 1903, it was provided that the Seminole tribal government should not continue longer than the 4th of March, 1906, and further provided that the Secretary of the Interior might at the proper time provide suitable patents, and have them delivered as theretofore provided by law. On March 2, 1906, the Aldrich resolution was passed, providing for the continuance of the existence of the tribal governments of the Five Tribes, and a similar provision was embodied in the act of April 26, 1906.

Now, the contention was made by a few lawyers here, who were principally engaged in the real estate business, that the Aldrich resolution was ineffectual to accomplish the purpose for which it was designed; that the act of Congress of 1903, fixing the 4th of March, 1906, as the time when the tribal government should expire, and by inference fixing the time when the patent would issue, gave the allottee a vested right to his patent on the 4th of March, 1906, or within a reasonable time thereafter; and that the patents were consequently due to issue on the 4th of March, 1906, and were in law consequently, the same as issued, and being the same as issued, the restrictions had at that time passed off entirely, inasmuch as the act of signing or delivery of patent was fixed by the original treaty as being the act which should effect the removal of restrictions. They therefore said the act continuing the tribal government, or assuming to do so, did not accomplish its purpose, or was not intended to continue the existence of the tribe for all purposes. They therefore, and when I say they, I mean a few individuals, believing in this theory—started out, making no distinction as to any of the land, for if the patents were the same as delivered and the restrictions thereby removed, all restrictions would be off, and the freedman, the mixed blood, and the full blood would stand upon the same ground and be equally free. They therefore entered into a gigantic plan of acquiring deeds to all of the lands of the tribe, practically the whole county. In a very few months, practically all of the lands of full bloods, mixed bloods, freedman homesteads were covered by warranty deeds. In these transactions, in most cases, though large considerations were inserted in the deeds, and receipt of the same acknowledged, only very small sums were paid; for instance, in full-blood cases, hundreds of deeds were obtained for $5 paid, and the amount paid ran up in this class of cases possibly to $25 or a little more in some instances. We find in our practice that some such a conversation as this is reported to have taken place when these instruments were obtained. The proposing purchaser says: "Now, we can't buy your land now, but we just take a deed to it, and pay you a little money, and if it turns out that our deed is good, we will come around later and buy the land from you and pay you for it, and of course if it turns out that our deed is not good you will simply have the amount of money we now pay you and be ahead that much." We do not exaggerate the extent of this business when we say that practically the whole county was covered with these transactions. Not all of the transactions were alike; some men proceeded in good faith, and said to the Indian: "I will give you a written contract; if the courts should hold this deed valid, I will pay you the amount of money named in the contract, and the land shall be mine"; and in many cases the transactions were thoroughly understood by the Indian, though the considerations were very small.

Now, it was with the county in this condition that the matter was called to the attention of the Secretary of the Interior and to the Attorney General. About the same time complaints somewhat similar were going up from the other nations, but we believe in none of them was there any such theory as has here developed. It was determined to file the Federal land suits at Muskogee; and as to the Seminole Nation, unlike the other nation, on account of this widespread taking of deeds to everything, it was decided to recognize no land as free from restrictions and no titles good, but to sue everybody who had taken a deed, without regard to the nature of his title, and this was done. Before the Government could bring itself to this point it had itself to search diligently for a theory by which it might hope to overthrow all transactions in the Seminole Nation and prove that none of the titles here are good; and the feature of no patents delivered standing out prominently, it was seized upon by the Government as the basis of its theory that since no patents had been delivered it could not be supposed that Congress would permit the Seminoles to sell their land, and therefore Congress did not intend the removal of restrictions acts to apply to the Seminoles, for the Seminoles had no such title to their allotments as those acts could attach and operate upon. That I understand to have been Mr. Russell's contention. I do not think you will find a lawyer anywhere, in the Attorney General's Department or out of it, who will not admit that that theory is preposterous.

Consequently everybody in the Seminole Nation or out of it who had a deed to a tract of land in the Seminole Nation was sued by the Government. Those suits were filed in 1908 and subsequently; none of them have been tried; many have quitclaimed, but none have been canceled; appeals have been taken on questions of pleading, and an opinion is now and has long been expected from the United States Supreme Court in the Allen and other cases. Some hope but few expect that the Supreme Court will go further than to pass upon the three points decided by Judge Campbell and the United States circuit court of appeals at St. Louis, viz, as to whether the bills were multifarious, whether the allottees were necessary parties, and whether the United States had such an interest that it could sue. It is generally expected that the Supreme Court will confine itself to the points passed upon by the courts below. In the meantime the people have suffered for going on four years, with no end in view. The Secretary of the Interior, upon advice of the Attorney General, fearing that the suits may be spoiled, is withholding the patents; and although allotment was completed in the main in 1901 and 1902, with some small allotments to new borns later, only two patents have been delivered in the Seminole Nation. And the hardship upon the people is very great. There is an injunction against the collection of taxes upon every foot of land in Seminole County, although the United States circuit court at Muskogee held all of the land alienable from which Congress had in terms removed restrictions. And our State supreme court has held that the lands are unrestricted and alienable in those cases where Congress has removed the restrictions, notwithstanding the nondelivery of patents. But the injunction remains in force, by appeal or otherwise in the Federal court, and there has not been a tax sale of land in Seminole County in the five years since statehood outside of the incorporated towns, and with the injunction in force the treasurer can not enforce collection, and the people will not voluntarily pay, and you can imagine our condition. Our county is bankrupt, and the burden of taxation is borne by a few, and the land which is really alienable and taxable is not—at least at present—bearing any portion of the burden of government.

We don't think it would be polite to write you what we think about the policy of the Government in bringing those suits like they did. It was wrong, Senator, to sue everybody who had bought Seminole land when Congress had made a large part of the land alienable. I was born a free man, Senator, and have the good, red Saxon blood in my veins that made this country a free country, and I shall never forget the wrong perpetrated in this instance by our own National Government upon a great number of innocent and unoffending people just because, forsooth, some few men had violated the law. It violated every principle of our ideas of law and justice and is what I call governmental oppression.

Now, the people of Seminole County want some relief and they want it badly; and when I say the people of Seminole County I don't mean a little group of land buyers, but I mean the bone and sinew of this county, the people who till the soil, who rear the homes, who pay the taxes to meet the expenses of government, and who really constitute the body of the county.

Senator, having an eye to the possible remedy, I would invite your attention to the fact that with regard to the Seminoles Congress has abandoned the idea of the delivery of patents marking and effecting the passing off of restrictions, and, along with the other tribes, has included the Seminoles, and by the various acts of Congress, particularly the act of May 27, 1907, says in plain language what land is restricted and what is not. Now, isn't it perfectly plain that the delivery of patents, if made at this moment, would not make a single title good in Seminole County which is not already good? It would not give any additional advantage to any man who has a bogus or bad title, but it would confer upon us the immeasurable benefit of making those titles which are already good marketable or merchantable, and it would provide a means by which a man in the future could obtain a title which would be good beyond question. Why, at the present time Seminole County and the Seminole Nation has the "black eye" so far as land titles are concerned, and a man with means can not be induced to get off the train in this country for the reason that he has been advised that the Government has sued everybody in Seminole County and won't give them patents, and titles are no good there, and consequently he passes us by. Now, this is a deplorable condition and very unjust to the Indians and to the majority of the white settlers. And this reputation that we have acquired, would you believe it, has been given us by our own National Government to a large extent. Why, it has not been a week since a Government employee told me in my law office here that it was his instructions from the Government offices at Muskogee to inform both white settlers and Seminole allottees that all titles in the Seminole Nation were bad. Now, isn't that infamous; isn't that as inexcusable and as indefensible as anything could be? We may be biased and prejudiced in the matter, Senator, and our judgment may not be good, but 11 years of this mismanagement has made us sick and sore of the situation. It has affected many other likewise, and very many good citizens disheartened and fearing that unfavorable conditions would continue have moved away to more favorable parts of the State where good titles may be obtained or to other States.

Now, as I said, it is quite apparent, we think, that no harm could come from the delivery of patents at this time, and the good to the community would be immeasurable. The delivery of patents would not affect the suits at Muskogee, in our judgment. We can not see how it would make any title good that is now void because in violation of restrictions.

Do you know, Senator, that since the act of 1908 not one full-blood Seminole Indian has been able to get his restrictions removed. Not one piece of full-blood Indian land has been sold since May 27, 1908, although that act provides that the Secretary of the Interior might remove restrictions, just like as to the members of the other tribes. The honorable Secretary, we have been informed by the Government offices, would not entertain an application from a full-blood Seminole to remove his restrictions inasmuch as no patents had been delivered in the Seminole Nation.

In recent months we have been told that applications might be made for patents through the office of the Assistant Attorney General, Mr. James E. Gresham, at Wewoka, and if the party applying is willing to submit to the appraisement of some Government officer and pay an additional consideration he may, after many months of waiting, obtain the delivery of patent to the allottee. Only two or three patents have been obtained in this way, upon applications made very many months ago. You can readily see that this plan is impracticable and must fail. People who have bought and paid for land in good faith and believe they have title to it under acts of Congress will not readily submit to an appraisement and to the demands that they pay an additional consideration fixed by some Government appraiser. It does not meet with favor, and the method is too slow and cumbersome and nothing would ever be accomplished, and it would be years before any considerable portion of the land would be subject to taxation.

The only reason we can see, Senator, why the patents should not be delivered is that thereby there would be additional value and salability given to certain fraudulent transactions. Certainly there is no objection to delivering patents to all restricted lands, and they should be delivered at once. Then if it were possible or practicable to ascertain in what cases frauds or forgeries have been perpetrated those patents might be held up, but let all other patents be issued. Now, it would be a difficult matter to determine just in what cases frauds and forgeries have been perpetrated, for those things are usually determined at the end of hard-fought lawsuits; and to go into those matters otherwise than through the means of a lawsuit would amount to an inquisition, and, it occurs to us, would be a very difficult proposition to provide for. It may be that it would be best and the most practicable thing that could be done to deliver all of the patents without any exceptions. This would not help to remove any restrictions, as we have explained. It would not affect the Indian-land suits one way or the other; and those suits can not reach frauds and forgeries, for they plead only violation of restrictions and general fraud, which can not be proved, as any lawyer knows the facts constituting the fraud, in order to admit proof, must be specifically pleaded.

So we would urge, Senator, that the condition here is unbearable; it is intolerable at present; and if you can assist in securing the delivery of patents to these people, with a provision, if you please, in the act that the delivery of the same shall not operate to remove any restriction that has not theretofore been removed by Congress; but by all means let us have the patents, and it made so that a man by following the law may obtain a good title, and so that taxes may be collected.

One thing, Senator, I wish to call specially to your attention: If the patents are ordered delivered by Congress, I deem it quite important that this shall not be done in such a way as might be construed to validate any of the questionable deeds heretofore made in violation of restrictions. It would be best, I think, if the deeds could be delivered to the allottees without any legislation at all—simply have them handed out. But if an act is necessary to having this done by the Secretary, I think that act directing their delivery should specifically say that the delivery of patents by the Secretary in conformity with the provisions of this act shall not have the effect to remove any restrictions that were not theretofore removed by express language of Congress, and should not operate to validate any conveyance of any allotment not theretofore valid.

It would seem to us also desirable, Senator, if it could be accomplished, if all those suits pending at Muskogee could be dismissed where the conveyances sought to be canceled were made by permission of any act of Congress; and an act directing their dismissal in such cases, or merely making it plain that all acts heretofore passed by Congress relative to the Five Civilized Tribes providing for the removal of restrictions shall be held and construed as applying to the Seminole Nation or Tribe, notwithstanding the fact that no patents had been delivered to the allottees of said tribe.

I have probably written you at too great length, and you will doubtless be weary when you have read this letter, but these matters are very much on our minds and hearts. Our home country is suffering because of these conditions, and we have desired to put the matter fully before you and ask that you do your best to assist us in obtaining relief. With kindest personal regards, I am, believe me,

Very truly, yours,

JOHN W. WILLMOTT.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Kneable, the Government attorney I have mentioned, made this remarkable statement in the hearings before this committee. In speaking of bringing so many suits to set aside these Indian conveyances, he puts in this plea of confession and avoidance, viz:

Notwithstanding that case, some of the reports relied upon were erroneous, and some transactions were included in the suits that ought not to have been included in the litigation, etc.

Let me inquire why this great haste? Why file in court 30,000 cases against that many citizens without first ascertaining whether the conveyances were illegal or not? He evidently presumed the conveyances illegal because they were made by an Indian. My belief is that these suits were filed by him so he and other attorneys and employees could hold their jobs, and without regard to the poor citizens he was thus harassing and cruelly wronging.

The vilest criminal under indictment, when arraigned before a court, is "presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by competent evidence beyond a reasonable doubt." Yet these irresponsible Government attorneys have reversed this rule and presumed these 30,000 defendants in these suits to be guilty of robbing the Indians. One of these suits was brought to cancel a conveyance made by Congressman CARTER, an Indian allottee and the Member of this House who has just addressed this committee. If this Government attorney would file a suit to set aside the conveyance of such an Indian as Mr. CARTER, would he not file other suits with as little justification?

Mr. Chairman, I think Mr. Wilmott was perfectly justifiable in making in his letter to Senator OWEN the following statement, viz:

We don't think it would be polite to write you what we think about the policy of the Government in bringing these suits like they did. It was wrong, Senator, to sue everybody who had bought Seminole lands when Congress had made a large part of these lands alienable.

Mr. Chairman, I have made these remarks chiefly for the purpose of bringing to the attention of this House and the country the necessity of passing House bill 23184, above alluded to, which bill will compel the Secretary of the Interior to deliver these patents of Seminole lands to the Indian allottees entitled to them, thus by law compelling the Secretary to do his duty as an officer of this Government.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask unanimous consent that I may revise the remarks I made to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] asks leave to revise his remarks. If there be no objection, that leave will be granted.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Enforcement of acts to regulate commerce: For expenses of representing the Government in all matters arising under the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, including traveling expenses, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, including salaries of employees at Washington, $10,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. A few moments ago we had a little discussion here concerning the amount to be appropriated for the enforcement of the antitrust law. In the course of the few remarks which I made I stated that the department had estimated for $300,000 for the ensuing year. My colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] had previously made the same statement. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] in charge of the bill, stated that the estimate was $250,000, and he lectured the Department of Justice in his most sarcastic manner, saying that of all departments of the Government certainly the Department of Justice ought to know how to follow the law in making an estimate and that the mere statement of one of the officials before the Committee on Appropriations was not an estimate, and that the Department of Justice had no right to assume that the statement of an official before the committee was an estimate; that the Department of Justice in charge of the legal branch of the Government ought to know enough, when it wanted additional money, to make an estimate in the proper way.

I might repeat all that the gentleman said concerning the Department of Justice and insert "the gentleman from New York" instead of the words "Department of Justice," because the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, coming into this House with this great bill under his charge, ought to know what estimates have been made and referred to his committee, and when he argues in the House against an appropriation proposed, or an amendment proposed, on the ground that the estimate has not been presented to his committee, that they have had no supplemental estimate, when it was referred to his committee on May 3 last, he shows that he has fallen down once, at least.

I hold in my hand a copy of the estimate; a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, dated May 3, 1912, transmitting to Congress an increase in the estimate of appropriations for the enforcement of the antitrust law from $250,000 to $300,000, which contains a copy of the letter from the Attorney General making the estimate "for the enforcement of antitrust laws, including salaries of necessary employees at the seat of government, $50,000," as a supplementary estimate for the enforcement of the antitrust laws.

I commend to my friend from New York that before he reads too many lectures to the Department of Justice for failure to know the law he should study more carefully the duties devolving upon him as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois is correct; there was a supplemental estimate.

Mr. MANN. I stated awhile ago that the gentleman from Kansas could assume that when I made the statement on the floor it was correct.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not hear the statement of the gentleman. The statement of the Assistant Attorney General was made as to the necessity for additional money. I had to remind him that in order to have an estimate considered it was necessary to submit it in compliance with the law. I was justified, if I did make a mistake unintentionally in my statement, in calling the attention of the Attorney General himself to the law, and he was compelled to admit during the present session of Congress that he never had his attention called to a certain statute. It was necessary that he be familiar with it in order to make up the estimates for Congress.

I think I was right in what I said about the department the officers of which seem to imagine that the laws are binding on every department except the Department of Justice. There is no harm in calling attention to the fact. I never claim to be above error. I know that I frequently make mistakes, but I always try to admit that I am mistaken when I find that I have made a mistake, and I commend that characteristic of myself to other gentlemen in the House.

Mr. BUTLER. Freely forgiven, and let us go on with the bill.

Mr. MANN. In this case no other gentleman has occasion to pray for forgiveness except the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

The furniture and other property belonging to the Court of Commerce is hereby turned over to the Department of Justice to be used by the department or disposed of at public sale as the Attorney General shall direct.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph. I will reserve it for a moment.

Mr. BUTLER. This seems to be a sale before the funeral takes place.

Mr. MANN. If the Commerce Court is abolished this provision ought to go in, but that question is likely to be in conference between the two Houses, and if the provision is inserted in any place it ought to be in the legislative bill in connection with the Commerce Court.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Both Houses have agreed to the provision abolishing the Commerce Court.

Mr. MANN. I think it would be in conference; there are a number of Senate amendments that have been agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There is no Senate amendment to the proposition abolishing the court.

Mr. MANN. There are several Senate amendments to which could be attached a rider like this in relation to the Commerce Court.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can explain the purpose of this provision.

Mr. MANN. Everybody knows the purpose and nobody questions it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the decision of the comptroller, if no disposition is made of this furniture, it would be necessary to sell the effects at public auction.

Mr. MANN. Well, it could be carried in the deficiency bill. It does not belong in this bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We thought this was a good time to take care of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. RUCKER of Colorado having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 18712. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 20628. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 22867. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 23515. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 22194. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 23765. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 18849. An act for the relief of the Winnebago Indians of Nebraska and Wisconsin;

H. R. 20480. An act excepting certain lands in Lawrence and Pennington Counties, S. Dak., from the operation of the provisions of section 4 of an act approved June 11, 1906, entitled "An act to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves";

H. R. 20593. An act to authorize the Norfolk & Western Railway Co. to construct sundry bridges across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River;

H. R. 23460. An act authorizing the fiscal court of Pike County, Ky., to construct a bridge across Russell Fork of the Big Sandy River at Marrowbone, Ky.; and

H. R. 23461. An act authorizing the fiscal court of Pike County, Ky., to construct a bridge across Russell Fork of Big Sandy River at or near Millard, Ky.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

On and after July 1, 1912, the clerk of the District Court for the Northern District of Illinois shall be compensated for his services as such clerk as other clerks of United States district courts are compensated.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. The clerk of the District Court for the Northern District of Illinois now receives a fixed salary, and I am not willing to have this assault made upon him. I therefore make the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman what his point of order is?

Mr. MANN. This is repealing a law that is now on the statute books. The law provides specifically for the compensation of the clerk of the district court at a fixed salary. This proposes that he shall be paid by fees.

Mr. BARTLETT. Paid as other clerks are.

Mr. MANN. They are paid by fees. I think this is the only place in the United States where the clerk gets a fixed salary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the law to-day, I am informed, the compensation of all clerks is limited to $3,500, to be paid out of the fees of the office. The clerk in this court is specifically appropriated for. It is dropped out of the legislative bill and provision is here made that he shall be paid as all other clerks are, out of the fees of the office, up to $3,500.

Mr. MANN. This is a clear change of existing law. Nobody denies that it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is subject to the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of bailiffs and criers, not exceeding three bailiffs and one crier in each court, except in the southern district of New York and the northern district of Illinois: Provided, That all persons employed under section 715 of the Revised Statutes shall be deemed to be in actual attendance when they attend upon the order of the courts: Provided further, That no such persons shall be employed during vacation; for the payment of the expenses of circuit and district judges of the United States and the judges of the district courts of the United States in Alaska and Hawaii, as provided by section 259 of the act approved March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary"; of meals and lodgings for jurors in United States cases, and of bailiffs in attendance upon the same, when ordered by the court, and of meals and lodging for jurors in Alaska, as provided by section 193, Title II, of the act of June 6, 1900; and of compensation for jury commissioners, $5 per day, not exceeding three days for any one term of court, $275,000.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment at the end of line 13, page 119, which I will ask the Clerk to report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 113, add, after the word "Illinois," at the end of the line, the words "and the northern district of Georgia."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, recently Congress passed an act allowing the courts not to exceed five bailiffs. They have picked out the southern district of New York and the northern district of Illinois as only two courts that can have more than three bailiffs under the law. The northern district of Georgia is sixth in the volume of business done in the United States courts of our country. The necessity for the full amount of bailiffs for the northern district of Georgia is this: The judge of that court, residing in the city of Atlanta, holds court in Rome, Athens, Columbus, Elberton, and Atlanta. These cities are at an average distance of 100 miles from the city of Atlanta. When the judge of the northern district of Georgia goes to one of these particular places to hold court it is almost essential for the expedition of business at those places that he have a bailiff who is familiar with the people in those particular towns to attend the court. I do not see any reason why the southern district of New York and the northern district of Illinois should be picked out to allow more bailiffs than is allowed for the northern district of Georgia. The amount of business actually done by the southern district of New York and the northern district of Georgia is not a very much greater amount when compared with the northern district of the great State that I in part represent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the gentleman is very much mistaken about that.

Mr. HOWARD. It may be a few hundred thousand dollars more, but that does not amount to anything. There is no more work to be done in the southern district of New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are four United States district judges in the southern district of New York.

Mr. HOWARD. Yes; the gentleman has four judges to sit there, but his four judges do not do any more work than my one judge in the northern district of Georgia. We are energetic down there, and try to earn our salaries by rendering efficient service to the Government. In the southern district of New York and in the northern district of Illinois those judges never leave the city of New York or the city of Chicago. In Georgia the judge travels over the whole northern part of the State, and holds court at five different places, and he is entitled to these five bailiffs, so that he can go there and have his business arranged with these bailiffs, who are acquainted with the people in the different towns, so that when he wants witnesses, jurors, or talesmen he may send and get them. I think it would be a wise provision for this committee to adopt this amendment and allow this district to have these extra bailiffs, because I think it would save more than their salary for 12 months.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, more than 20 years ago an investigation disclosed such an abuse in the appointment of bailiffs by the Federal judges that the limitation as contained in the bill, excepting the southern district of New York and the northern district of Illinois, was framed by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOWARD. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to state to the committee that there has never been any abuses of any privileges by the distinguished jurist, Hon. William T. Newman, who presides over this court in the northern district of Georgia.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not of recent origin. Since that time there has never been any difficulty about the bailiffs for these courts. The gentleman from Georgia states that the district of which he speaks is sixth in the order of business.

Mr. HOWARD. That is true.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why not provide for the other three districts which have a larger business in addition to the districts mentioned, so that they can be adequately provided for? There is no complaint from the judges, no complaint from the Representatives except the gentleman from Georgia. The gentleman is very much mistaken about the amount and character of business transacted in the district from which he happens to come and in the southern district of New York. The volume of law business that concentrates in the city of New York because of the great commercial, maritime, and business interests that are centered there is enormous. The city itself has four and a half millions of population, and it contains in large part two United States districts. My recollection is that in the southern district of New York there are four district judges. In the eastern district, which is just across the river and includes Long Island, there are two United States district judges, and in addition it is necessary to have assigned from time to time additional judges to dispose of the marvelous amount of business that naturally comes to the courts. The gentleman is very much mistaken about the amount of business, and I am sure if he had had an opportunity to look into the matter he would not have made the mistake.

Mr. HOWARD. If the gentleman will permit, I will state I have had an opportunity, because when the Committee on the Judiciary were fixing clerks' salaries I made a personal investigation of the amount and volume of business of the courts of the United States, and I do know as a positive fact that the northern district of Georgia was sixth in the amount and volume of business done in the United States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not challenged that statement of the gentleman. The gentleman said the difference between the amount of business done in that district and in the southern district of New York was insignificant, and I am sure he is mistaken in that statement.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman stated that the judge in this particular district had not asked specifically for it. I want to state to the gentleman the very reason I introduced this amendment at this particular point was at the instigation of the Hon. William T. Newman, judge of the northern district of Georgia, and he said it was absolutely essential that he should have five bailiffs, holding courts at five different places. That is the reason I introduced it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. For the information of the Chair can the gentleman from Georgia furnish the authorization for the increase that has been proposed?

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I have not the law before me at this moment, but I understand that the recent act of Congress provided for five bailiffs in each of the district courts of the United States—that you could not exceed five bailiffs. Now, they made an exception to this particular rule or law by putting in the southern district of New York and the northern district of Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The burden of proof is upon the gentleman from Georgia, and the gentleman failing to produce it, the Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if he will permit this particular item to be held in abeyance for a few moments until I can get the statute. I would like to inform the Chair. I did not know it would be reached so soon or I would have been prepared.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the matter is in order, I have no desire to take an unfair advantage of the gentleman, of course.

Mr. MANN. What is the request?

The CHAIRMAN. That the item be passed for the present.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order. Let us vote on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. HOWARD) there were—ayes 12, noes 31.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of such miscellaneous expenses as may be authorized by the Attorney General, for the United States courts and their officers, $490,000: Provided, That in so far as it may be deemed necessary by the Attorney General, this appropriation shall be available for such expenses in the District of Alaska.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from New York if he can state briefly for what purpose this $490,000 is used? It appears from looking over these items of this bill for the Department of Justice that nearly every specific thing is provided for and yet there is an authorization of $490,000 provided for miscellaneous expenses. Just what those miscellaneous expenses can be, I can not imagine.

Mr. FITZGERALD. One item is that every United States judge has a clerk now who is paid out of this fund.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, we will find on page 1557 of the hearings a detailed report. For instance, there were:

Accountants	$9,241.57
Handwriting	2,495.50
Medical	3,547.00
Real estate	2,027.00
Bank examiners and assistants	$3,190.00
Others	28,437.91
Abstractors of titles	995.48
Interpreters	11,446.45
Masters in chancery	5,008.24
Stenographers and clerks, permanent	142,045.48
Stenographers and clerks, temporary	60,070.45
Witnesses, other than expert	1,568.75
Messengers	58,734.05
Janitors	5,047.33
Other personal services	28,771.74

Mr. GARNER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if these different items are authorized by law?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, sir; I think they are.

Mr. GARNER. What is the salary of the clerk?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not find the item for clerk.

Mr. GARNER. There is the item of "stenographers and clerks, permanent."

Mr. SHERLEY. Nine hundred dollars, I think.

Mr. GARNER. That is the rate fixed by law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it is not fixed by law.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is what they are paid.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think they are fixed by the Attorney General.

Mr. GARNER. Clerks to the judges?

Mr. FITZGERALD. To the judges; yes.

Mr. GARNER. When was this statute passed allowing the judges clerks?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no specific statute.

Mr. GARNER. I ask the gentleman if they were not all authorized by law, and the gentleman from Kentucky thought they were.

Mr. SHERLEY. I know they are, or they would not be approved by the auditor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are under miscellaneous expenses of the court. The Attorney General makes allowances, and unless they are authorized by law the accounting officers do not approve them.

Mr. GARNER. If I understand the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], his suggestion is that they are authorized by law, because the Attorney General O. K.'s the voucher, and that makes it law?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman made no such statement or anything like that. I said if they were not authorized by law, the voucher would not be paid.

Mr. GARNER. I would like to know when the statute was passed authorizing clerks to district judges.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know of any statute which specifically states that every United States judge shall have a clerk.

Mr. GARNER. Let me make myself understood. How is the clerk to a judge authorized by law, when there is no statute authorizing it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because it is considered as a necessary expense in the conduct of the court, and the Attorney General, in the exercise of a certain discretion lodged in him, makes that allotment.

Mr. GARNER. Then I get that back to the original point, that the auditor in this accounting passes on it when the Attorney General decides it is necessary expense to the court, regardless of what the statutes may be?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I do not think that at all. The gentleman is certainly mistaken in this respect. It is not necessary in order to spend money for some particular item that there should be a statute saying that that very item shall be obtained, or purchased, or employed out of a particular appropriation. There is a general authority.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think there is a general statute giving the Attorney General the right to do this.

Mr. GARNER. Then, if the Attorney General shall decide that any judge shall have two clerks, they can be granted to him?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the appropriation be made.

Mr. GARNER. I mean under this lump sum he can allow as many clerks as he sees proper? Has the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] examined these items and interrogated the Attorney General as to the necessity for this amount of money being appropriated for this purpose?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was an examination. Detailed information was not obtained until after the hearing had been had. The committee has recommended a provision in this bill which is designed in the future to have that information in the committee before the hearing is had.

There is a deficiency in this item for the current year. I think myself there is somewhat of a question as to the right of the Attorney General to incur deficiencies in this item, but there is an estimate for a deficiency in the current year.

Mr. GARNER. Considering the number of lump-sum appropriations made for expenditure under the jurisdiction of the Attorney General, I think an itemized statement is certainly required. They may not be large in this bill, but they are certain to attract the attention of the Members of the House—the number of lump appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee appreciates the situation. The committee has endeavored to ascertain the best method of obtaining information, not only for the use of the committee, but for the use of the Members of the House generally. The committee recommends in the bill a provision requiring that as to all estimates exceeding $250,000 a statement shall be made each year in the Book of Estimates, in which shall be given in parallel columns the appropriations for the fiscal year just preceding and the sum required for the same purpose in the next ensuing fiscal year. It is believed that if the information is furnished in that way the Members of the House and the committee itself will be much better able, in the preparation of these bills, to determine what should be granted and what restrictions, if any, should be placed upon the expending authority.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For subsistence, including supplies for prisoners, warden, deputy warden, and physician, tobacco for prisoners, kitchen and dining-room furniture and utensils, and for farm and garden seeds and implements, and for purchase of ice if necessary, $40,000.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL].

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 13, page 121, strike out "$40,000" and insert the following: "$42,500, of which sum not exceeding $1,000 shall be used for the subsistence of the warden and not exceeding $750 for the subsistence of the deputy warden and physician, respectively."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this item carries an appropriation of $40,000 for the subsistence of the United States prisoners at the Leavenworth Penitentiary, and, in addition to that, subsistence for the warden, deputy warden, and physician, tobacco for prisoners, kitchen and dining-room furniture and utensils, and for farm and garden seeds and implements, and for the purchase of ice, if necessary.

The amendment that I have offered increases the appropriation by the sum of $2,500, with a proviso added that of this sum of $42,500 "not exceeding $1,000 shall be used for the subsistence of the warden and not exceeding $750" shall be used "for the subsistence of the deputy warden and physician, respectively."

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are more than 1,100 men in the Federal penitentiary at Leavenworth. If the entire amount of $40,000 should be allowed for the single purpose of subsistence, after going into the matter with some degree of care I can say that I do not believe it would be excessive. In addition to the amount that is carried in this bill for the subsistence of these prisoners an additional amount is available for subsistence, because of the fact that a considerable number of prisoners from the District of Columbia are confined there, for which the District pays, and, in addition to that, they have the proceeds of the farm.

It has been estimated that out of this appropriation for the subsistence of the prisoners at Leavenworth the per capita cost per day amounts to only 11 cents, and I think that every gentleman here who is familiar with the prevailing high prices of food products will agree that it is impossible for the warden of that institution, or for the warden of any other institution, properly to subsist a convict upon the sum of 11 cents per day. It necessarily means that the rations of these convicts at certain times must be extremely limited. It is true they are convicts; it is true that they are outcasts from society and are kept there within prison walls; but even outcasts, even convicts, ought to be provided with food of a substantial and nourishing nature, and it is my judgment that with the scant appropriations allowed here it is not possible to give to those convicts the nourishing, substantial food that humanity dictates they should have.

Now, out of this $40,000 they not only feed the convicts, but they provide subsistence for the warden and his family, and the warden has a residence there on the ground; for the deputy warden and his family, who reside also on the ground; and for the physician, who resides in the city of Leavenworth.

This amendment would provide that the allowance for the warden should not exceed $1,000, and I believe that would be sufficient for the warden and his family, and $750 for each of these other officials, leaving $40,000 that can be used for the subsistence of these prisoners and for the other purposes indicated in this paragraph. I believe that in the interest of humanity, in the interest of proper care of these unfortunates who are out there, this increase should be allowed, because whatever else they deserve at least they deserve enough to eat, of the proper quality, and I hope this little increase will be agreed to by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I will ask for two minutes additional.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman himself has asked for only two minutes.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I will ask for five minutes, and if I do not need it I will not use it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like to ask if the investigations made by the gentleman's committee showed that the prisoners were not receiving sufficient food.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. We have not had a very good opportunity to make a thorough investigation of it. Upon my own responsibility I went to Leavenworth and spent a day at the prison. As a general thing I think that the prisoners are cared for as well as could be expected.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to say to the gentleman that my information is that the 11 cents daily cost of maintaining a prisoner is hardly a correct figure to take, because that sum of 11 cents is augmented by the products of the farm, which are very considerable. For instance, a year ago the farm produced 50,000 pounds of pork. In one year they canned 4,000 gallons of fine preserved peaches, and I think as prison fare goes the fare given the prisoners at the Leavenworth Penitentiary is probably the best in the world.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I hope it is true.

Mr. ANTHONY. At the same time I hope the gentleman will succeed in getting more for them.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. The United States ought to be a model for all the States, even in caring for its unfortunates. I suppose that these people are provided for as well as could be expected, with the appropriation that is allowed. I am not criticizing the administration of the institution at Leavenworth, but I have examned some of the bills of fare for breakfast, for dinner, and for supper, and it frequently happens that the bill of fare is so limited and so scant that it is hard for me to conceive how an able-bodied man could be satisfied with it. They have coffee, but it sometimes happens that rye or some other grain is parched and is mixed in with the coffee and used for these prisoners. It frequently happens that milk is on the bill of fare, but it is conceded that at least a portion of the milk, a large portion in the past, has been bought from dairies, and the suspicion has prevailed among the officials of the prison that this milk received a dilution of water before it was delivered to the institution; and then after it got into the dining room, sometimes in the plain view of all the assembled prisoners, a most liberal dilution of water was again added to it, and that is the kind of milk that frequently is served to the prisoners.

I believe that they ought to be given good, wholesome, substantial, plain food, and that when coffee or anything else is served to them it ought to be what it purports to be; that when milk is served to them it ought to be the kind of milk that is palatable and nourishing and sustaining. I do not believe that even when you take into consideration all the elements mentioned by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] you can support these men as they ought to be supported and as they ought to be nourished upon the appropriation that you are giving them.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I used to be familiar with this matter in former years, when I was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I think everybody agrees that this is the model prison of the United States, if not of the world. I know the warden and his reputation for efficiency and as an expert touching matters relating to prisons. Now, as the whole estimate is given, does not the gentleman think, with the uniform testimony touching this prison, that we better let it alone?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Perhaps so. I will state that the warden of the penitentiary is in the city now. Yesterday, in relating his experience and services in Illinois, he said that it took about 11 cents a day for the proper food for a prisoner then, and the gentleman from Illinois knows that there is some difference in the cost of food to-day as compared with the cost of subsistence in 1890.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; but the farm gives much valuable subsistence.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Well, I simply submit it to the committee. I believe that some increase should be made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that this amendment ought to be agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I have a point of order on it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman intend to insist upon it?

Mr. MANN. I will unless I get some further information. I understand the amendment increases the amount in the bill $2,500 and sets aside $1,000 for the warden and $750 each for the deputy warden and the physician. How can that be done?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I suppose there will be no trouble; they draw their subsistence from the commissary, and with the provision limiting the amount they would be permitted to draw to not exceeding a certain quantity, it would be easily enforced.

Mr. MANN. How would the accounting officer know about it? These accounts would have to go through the auditor. Somebody has to draw this money from the Treasury, and under the gentleman's amendment I am inclined to think that the purchases for the warden, the deputy warden, and the physician would have to be made separately from the purchases of other supplies in order to pass the accounting officers of the Government. That would cost more than it would amount to.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I do not think that difficulty would occur.

Mr. MANN. Here is your item in the law which is specific, and somebody would have to enforce it.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. If a quibble is to be made, and points of order made against it when the only purpose is to try and aid 1,100 unfortunates out there, to see that they have something for breakfast, something for dinner, and something for supper, something that is sufficient for human beings to live upon, why, I am content.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman refers to quibbles. The gentleman if he offers an amendment ought to offer it in such form that it would not cost more to execute it than to appropriate for it. That is not my fault. The gentleman proposes to increase the appropriation $2,500 for the warden, deputy warden, and physician. As far as I can see, it requires that that amount of money shall be expended for three officials.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Not at all, the amendment says not exceeding that amount.

Mr. MANN. That is what the amendment says.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. It says "Of which sum not exceeding the amount of $1,000 may be used by the warden," and so forth.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas a question.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I will yield.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to ask the gentleman if the amount set aside for the warden and the other two officials will exceed that which they now have?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. There is no means of determining what they have drawn from the commissary heretofore; because no record has been made in dollars and cents of what it amounted to. I would suppose that if the amendment was adopted, as they made requisitions on the commissary, some estimate of the value would be kept. I do not think there would be any trouble in the administration of the disbursement of the amount.

Mr. ANTHONY. Could not the gentleman attain the object he seeks by having a provision in the bill which would require the amounts consumed by these different officers to be charged up against them in the accounts, and then in succeeding years we would know how much it was?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment is subject to a point of order. It specifically requires the payment of a certain amount for the warden and the other two officials which is not in the existing law, and I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Without going into the merits of the case, the Chair will say that by the amendment it is proposed to increase the appropriation from $40,000 to $42,500, the increase to be disposed of among three men.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Before the Chairman rules, may I call attention to the fact that this very appropriation as it is framed here provides for the subsistence of the warden, deputy warden, and prison physician. I am not providing for the subsistence of anybody else, but I am limiting the amount that these three officials can use from that commissary. By doing that I am not charging, or seeking to charge, that there has been any improper use by them of the commissary privileges.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think the amendment can be treated as a limitation, inasmuch as it carries with it an increase of expenditure to meet the alleged limitation. Therefore the point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous expenditures in the discretion of the Attorney General, for fuel, forage, hay, light, water, stationery, purchase of fuel for generating steam, heating apparatus, burning bricks and lime; forage for issue to public animals, and hay and straw for bedding; blank books, blank forms, typewriting supplies, pencils and memorandum books for guards, books for use in chapel, paper, envelopes, and postage stamps for issue to prisoners; for labor and materials for repairing steam-heating plant, electric plant and water circulation, and drainage; for labor and materials for construction and repair of buildings; for general supplies, machinery, and tools for use on farm and in shops, brickyard, quarry, limekiln, laundry, bathrooms, printing office, photograph gallery, stables, policing buildings and grounds; for the purchase of cows, horses, mules, wagons, harness, veterinary supplies, lubricating oils, office furniture, stoves, blankets, bedding, iron bunks, paints and oils, library books, newspapers and periodicals, and electrical supplies; for payment of water supply, telegrams, telephone service, notarial and veterinary services; for advertising in newspapers; for fees to consulting physicians called to determine mental conditions of supposed insane prisoners, and for other services in cases of emergency; for pay of extra guards or employees when deemed necessary by the Attorney General, and for expense of care and medical treatment of guards who may be injured by prisoners while said guards are endeavoring to prevent escapes or suppressing mutiny, $40,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I notice that this proposes to limit the gratuities now provided by law for discharged prisoners to those who have been imprisoned for six months. I understand the theory of the law which gives a man who is discharged from prison a small sum of money is not to pay him for his services in the prison, but to give him an opportunity after he gets out of prison, without any money of his own, to get employment where he may earn something, and not to put him on the street without a dollar and expect him to steal in order to get a night's lodging.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman makes the point of order to the limitation?

Mr. MANN. That is what I have in mind.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is the gentleman opposed to transporting these discharged prisoners back to the places they came from?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; but under the law, as I understand it, every discharged prisoner gets a gratuity. They have inserted in the bill an item which limits this gratuity to those prisoners who have served for not less than six months.

Mr. SHERLEY. Here is the testimony on the subject at page 1459 of the hearings:

The CHAIRMAN. You ask to insert in this paragraph, "Provided, That such gratuities shall be furnished to prisoners sentenced for terms of imprisonment of not less than six months." What is the present law?

Mr. MCGLASSON. The present law at Leavenworth only allows the department to furnish the gratuities to prisoners sentenced for over a year, while at Atlanta the law allows us to furnish them to prisoners sentenced for six months or over. There is a difference with no reason, so far as we can see, and as we send prisoners to Leavenworth from long distances, the department thought it was not right to discharge them with no means of getting home.

What the committee desired to do was to ameliorate the provisions of the law and not make them harder.

Mr. MANN. I quite agree with the committee and withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For clothing, transportation, and traveling expenses, including such clothing as can be made at the penitentiary; for the usual gratuities as provided by law to prisoners at release, provided that such gratuities shall be furnished to prisoners sentenced for terms of imprisonment of not less than six months, and including transportation to place of conviction or place of bona fide residence in the United States; for expenses of shipping remains of deceased prisoners to their homes in the United States; for expenses of penitentiary officials while traveling on duty; for expenses incurred in identifying and pursuing escaped prisoners, and for rewards for their recapture, $25,000.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, on page 122, line 2, by striking out the word "for," after the word "general," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "including."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 122, line 2, strike out the word "for" and insert the word "including."

Mr. SHERLEY. Why is the purpose of that?

Mr. HOWARD. The purpose of that amendment is this: Under a recent ruling of the comptroller if the authorities in charge of either prison at Atlanta or Leavenworth should expend $1 for anything that is not specifically set out in this paragraph, then the person in authority must do it at his own risk and cost.

Mr. SHERLEY. That ought to be so.

Mr. HOWARD. But it is for the use of the prison. It is some item that is not specified here. For instance, sometimes these men in the prison need the services of an oculist. The warden at Atlanta had several of these men there last year. They were practically blind without the use of glasses. Out of the goodness of his heart he sent into the city of Atlanta and got an oculist, Dr. Crawford, to go out there and examine the eyes of these prisoners. The bill was sent into the department and the comptroller held that under the law he had no right to pay it for that purpose, and that the warden had to pay it out of his own pocket.

Mr. BUTLER. Was it a provision exactly similar to this?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman think that substituting the word "including" for the word "for" would answer the purpose?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes; and I will tell the gentleman why.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman substitutes the word "including" for the word "for," he may just as well strike out all of the paragraph except that providing for miscellaneous expenditures in the discretion of the Attorney General, $40,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. Why not? You give the Attorney General that discretion in other appropriations, involving vastly greater sums than this.

Mr. HOWARD. Exactly.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but we would not do it if we could help it.

Mr. HOWARD. In other words, Mr. Chairman, the object of the amendment is, in cases of emergency, like the one I have just mentioned to provide a means of payment. I will relate another, where there was a little charge of $2. The cows at the prison broke out of the prison pasture and got into a near-by truck farmer's garden. The truck farmer impounded the United States prison cows. The warden looked over the ground and saw they had done damage to the extent of $2. He paid the $2, and the cows were released. He sent the bill in to the auditor and the auditor held that the warden had to pay it out of his own pocket. First and last, the warden at the Atlanta Penitentiary last year paid out about $200 for absolute necessaries at the Atlanta prison, for which the auditor would not allow him.

Now, substituting the word "including" for the word "for" means that in the item of miscellaneous expenditures it includes all these things and some other things that may be an emergency.

Mr. BUTLER. But there must be some provision of law which entitles the authorities at this prison to employ a physician.

Mr. HOWARD. They have a prison physician, but he is not a specialist, he is not an oculist. He knows nothing about eyes. The warden found men there who could not read on account of their impaired eyesight, their eyes were diseased, and he sent in and got this oculist, thinking, of course, that the Government of the United States having charge of these imprisoned men should give them the benefit of this specialist's services and pay the bill out of this fund.

Mr. FOSTER. If they employ a physician there who is not able to fit glasses to eyes, what they ought to do is to get rid of this physician and get another one.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman may be right about that, but you are not going to get an all-around physician any better qualified or more expert in his profession than this one for what they pay the physician at Atlanta—a pitiful $1,600.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia will not be agreed to. It would be distinctly a step backward. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] makes the suggestion that some of the items in here are permitted to be expended at the discretion of the Attorney General. That is true; some of them are of that nature that require a discretion on his part, but the whole history and experience of the Committee on Appropriations has been that our mistakes, if any have been made, have been on account of allowing too much discretion, not by limiting it. The effect of this provision would simply be, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], to cut out the limitations and enumerations here, and simply turn the fund over to be expended in the discretion of the Attorney General. There occasionally arises a matter of this kind, but usually it is simply due to the lack of ordinary common sense on the part of the officer who is charged with the disposition of the fund, and whenever there is any legitimate cause for an expenditure for a purpose not authorized a recommendation is made to Congress, and the House enlarges the enumerated objects.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does not the gentleman think there ought to be some language in this bill to allow such items as my colleague has described to be charged against the Public Treasury?

Mr. SHERLEY. There has never been any trouble until this particular instance was brought to our attention. The discussion shows they never had any trouble before this. If they had suggested to the committee the desirability of putting in a particular enumeration we could have considered it, but the idea of striking out the word "for" and putting in "including" means an elimination of all the limitations and was not considered by the committee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will call attention to the fact that in the list of miscellaneous expenses there is an item for dentistry for $503 spent under this item, and evidently the Attorney General thought as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] thought, that the physician ought to have attended to it.

Mr. HOWARD. I will just state to the gentleman from Kentucky this: The warden of the Atlanta Prison is here and was in the gallery a moment ago, and he informed me for the fiscal years 1910 and 1911 that he had paid out of his own pocket for the prisoners, thinking he was doing it under the law, quite a sum of money.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest to the warden, if he is still in the gallery, that he read the law the next time he comes to expend such funds.

Mr. HOWARD. I think the next time he will leave the cows in the pound.

Mr. MANN. I would like to inquire whether it is one of the prescribed duties of the warden to be in the gallery when an item of this sort is under consideration?

Mr. HOWARD. I will state to the gentleman he is subpœnaed by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice and had a few moments' leisure and had gone in the gallery.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia will prevail. The situation that he states as existing at the Atlanta Penitentiary is duplicated at the Leavenworth Penitentiary. These prisons are not ordinary places where you can outline the things for which every cent shall be expended. They are great manufacturing institutions in themselves. They are operating farms, and their occupations are so diversified that they need this unlimited power, you may say. Now, take the Leavenworth Penitentiary. I said a few minutes ago that an investment of $100 for hogs for use on the farm resulted in giving to the prison in one year 50,000 pounds of pork for the use of the inmates, yet under this bill the warden would be prohibited from purchasing those hogs.

Mr. HOWARD. He can not buy a bull calf, even.

Mr. ANTHONY. He can not buy a calf, as Mr. HOWARD says—an entirely ridiculous situation. Under this bill as it is worded the prison authorities can buy a dead chicken, but can not buy a live chicken.

Mr. CLINE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. CLINE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] whether the language just as it is written here has been construed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] that a limitation has been placed upon it and precludes the exercise of the discretion which the warden has?

Mr. ANTHONY. It absolutely does, as decided by the comptroller, who refuses to authorize the other little amounts from time to time that the officers of the prison have to pay out of their own pockets.

Mr. CLINE. It seems to me in this case the appropriation ought to be sufficient——

Mr. SHERLEY. How comes it this is the first time we have heard of this, and how comes it there is no testimony except that in regard to one of these institutions, and the gentleman from Kansas now talks about numerous instances? The proposition involved here is the proposition of whether we shall keep our hands on expenditures or whether we shall turn them loose to departmental employees who do not like any sort of restriction.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me say to the gentleman that he ought to make this paragraph in the bill like other paragraphs of a similar nature. For instance, in other cases you leave $400,000 within the discretion of the Attorney General——

Mr. SHERLEY. My answer to you is that if a mistake has been made it has been made in giving too much discretion.

Mr. ANTHONY. In the McNeil Island Penitentiary you leave this discretion to the Attorney General. Why not at Atlanta and at Leavenworth? Make them uniform.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have tried to explain how I would make them uniform. I would make them uniform along the line of restricting.

Mr. ANTHONY. One or the other.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman had suggested a while ago about restricting the others he would now get a more cordial reception than he is going to receive.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would ask the gentleman to make the appropriation the same at Leavenworth and Atlanta as at McNeil.

Mr. HOWARD. They raise hogs down there for the use of the prison. Suppose cholera would break out? They would have to come here to get an appropriation to get meat for the Federal prison. This is the narrow manner in which the auditor has made these findings.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman had something to say a while ago about the examination of eyes not being allowed and the warden had to pay for it out of his own pocket. I find here with reference to the miscellaneous expenses at Atlanta, in addition to the amount allowed, for dentist fees, $900.

Mr. ANTHONY. The year I referred to was 1910–11.

Mr. PAGE. That has been cured by the present provisions of the bill.

Suppose you offer an amendment to this bill authorizing the warden to get impounded cows out of the pound.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think that might not happen again for years, but some hogs might not get out next time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOWARD. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 19.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries, including pay of officials and employees, as follows: Warden, $4 000; deputy warden, $2,000; chaplain, $1,500; chaplain, $600; physician, $1,600; chief clerk, $1,800; bookkeeper and record clerk, $1,200; stenographer, $900; 4 clerks, at $900 each; head cook, $1,000; steward and storekeeper, $1,200; superintendent of farm and transportation, $900; 3 captains of watch, at $1,000 each; guards, at $70 per month each, $52,080; 2 teamsters, at $600 each; engineer and electrician, $1,500; assistant engineer and electrician, $1,200; in all, $79,280.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, where is the Clerk reading?

The CHAIRMAN. On page 123, the paragraph beginning on line 7.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an amendment to page 123, line 14, to strike out "$52,080" and insert "$57,360" in its place.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 123, line 14, by striking out "$52,080" and inserting "$57,360."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I would state, for the information of the committee, that this increase of $5,280 in the appropriation for guards will enable the authorities at the Leavenworth Penitentiary to employ seven additional guards.

These guards are rendered necessary by the fact that the institution is at present suffering from a great shortage of guards, so much so that the Attorney General recommended strongly to the Committee on Appropriations that the force of guards be increased by seven.

The reason for that is this: The prisoners in the daytime in pursuing their various occupations require the attendance of the majority of the guard force, leaving the prison improperly guarded at night, so much so that the walls of the prison can not be manned in the nighttime.

A few months ago, on account of the shortage of guards, discharged prisoners succeeded in putting over these unguarded walls a large amount of explosives, dynamite, and many revolvers, and other dangerous material, which, if it had fallen into the hands of the prisoners, would have resulted in a wholesale mutiny and probably the loss of many lives. The prison authorities immediately asked for sufficient guards to man the walls at night. The Attorney General strongly urges that the increase be granted.

Now, for the information of the committee, I will say that the United States military penitentiary, situated a mile away from the prison under the Department of Justice, has over 100 guards for the purpose of controlling the same number of prisoners as are confined in the Federal penitentiary, and the latter penitentiary has only 50-odd guards for the same purpose for which 100 men are used in guarding the prisoners in the military prison. I hope the committee will permit the amendment to go in.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the recommendation made by the committee is the same amount that was carried in the bill last year and the year before, and in the judgment of the committee it was sufficient to authorize the employment of the proper number of guards, as well as other officials of the penitentiary.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would like to ask the gentleman if the committee did give consideration to the recommendation of the Attorney General and to his statement in regard to the emergency of the situation?

Mr. SHERLEY. The committee considered it, and considered it to the extent that they recommended the amount carried in the bill last year.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suppose with the idea of reducing the amounts appropriated by the bill, so that a showing could be made of economy. Is that it?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; with the idea of not providing useless jobs for people at the instigation of any locality.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does the gentleman mean to say that any locality is asking for this?

Mr. SHERLEY. All I know is that the only gentleman who is asking for it on the floor is the gentleman who represents that locality.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is my duty to do that.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not gainsaying that; but the gentleman implied that our motive was the motive of making a showing, irrespective of what ought to be done. I say to the gentleman that the committee did what in its judgment seemed to be wise.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know what motive could be imputed to the committee for overlooking such a necessary service.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, what we want is information. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] stands with his back to us, and we can not hear what he says. Has the department recommended an increase of these guards?

Mr. ANTHONY. The department has recommended it as a most pressing emergency.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do.

Mr. CANNON. Has Col. McClaughry appeared before the committee?

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand he was before the committee. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the walls of the Leavenworth Penitentiary are nearly unguarded at night. There are not enough guards to properly guard them.

Mr. CANNON. Has Col. McClaughry's recommendation before the committee been printed in the hearings asking for these additional guards?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; strongly urging it.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. PAGE. As a matter of fact, at night are not these prisoners locked in the cells?

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman is correct, but there is nothing to prevent people outside of the prison scaling the walls at night.

Mr. PAGE. Certainly not, but there is not the propensity on the part of people on the outside to scale the walls to get in that there is on the part of the people inside to scale the walls and get out.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me say to the gentleman that prisons are generally surrounded by former convicts on the outside, scheming for the escape of the men on the inside.

Mr. FOSTER. And that in Kansas?

Mr. ANTHONY. And that in Kansas, surely.

Mr. FOSTER. I am surprised.

Mr. ANTHONY. A short time ago a large supply of dynamite was shoved over the walls, and many revolvers were put over.

Mr. PAGE. If this penitentiary is surrounded every night by convicts or ex-convicts, then, instead of increasing the number of these guards, the militia ought to be ordered out.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is the situation around every penal institution. They have to guard against the attempts of those on the inside to escape and against the attempts of those on the outside to assist those who are on the inside.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, my vote in reference to this matter will be controlled by his answer to this question: Does he know that Col. McClaughry, the warden of that prison, earnestly recommended the increase of this guard by seven?

Mr. ANTHONY. Absolutely.

Mr. CANNON. Then I shall vote for it.

Mr. BUTLER. Where is that statement in the hearings?

Mr. SHERLEY. There are 62 guards at this place. They work in three shifts of eight hours each. There are guards at night. The place is not absolutely abandoned to the ex-convicts and the lawless citizens of Kansas outside of the penitentiary.

Mr. ANTHONY. The guards are not worked in three equal shifts. A large majority of them work in the daytime.

Mr. SHERLEY. All I can say is that the testimony is contradictory of what the gentleman states.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am giving the gentleman the facts.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am taking the testimony as it was presented to the committee.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman will read me any testimony to controvert what I have to say I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. SHERLEY. The testimony is that there are three shifts of guards working eight hours to the shift.

Mr. ANTHONY. But not in equal numbers.

Mr. SHERLEY. My information is that there are 12 guards on the shift which runs from 5.15 in the afternoon until midnight and 12 guards on the shift that runs from midnight until 7.15 in the morning.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. The balance of the guards are on the day shift, when the prisoners are out of their cells.

Mr. ANTHONY. That makes 12 on duty at night and 40 in the daytime.

Mr. SHERLEY. And the reason for the greater number in the daytime is the common-sense reason that in the daytime the prisoners are out of their cells and in the night they are locked in. Evidently the people in charge of the institution did not think that the citizens outside were as threatening or as lawless as the gentleman who represents the district thinks they are.

Mr. ANTHONY. Perhaps the gentleman knows more about it than the prison authorities themselves do.

Mr. SHERLEY. I only go by what the gentleman has stated and what the testimony shows.

Mr. BUTLER. Will some gentleman point me to the place in the hearing where this information is to be found? I have asked for it time and again.

Mr. SHERLEY. On page 1467 the gentleman will find it. I tried to read it.

Mr. BUTLER. What does the warden recommend relative to the increase of these guards?

Mr. SHERLEY. There was a recommendation not only to increase the number of guards by 7 but a recommendation for increases all along the line of this appropriation; and if we had simply accepted their statement we would have increased the appropriation to $92,000.

Mr. BUTLER. What, may I ask the gentleman, is the reason stated for the increase of the guards? The gentleman has asked to amend the bill, and we are required to vote on his amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. The statement was made that they thought they needed more guards.

Mr. BUTLER. Does he simply give his judgment, or does he state any reason?

Mr. SHERLEY. He cites the one instance of their having put some of those explosives over the wall at night. I will read the whole testimony, if the gentleman wants it.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not ask for that; I am simply getting information.

Mr. SHERLEY. I tried to give the information to the gentleman by reading it in detail.

Mr. BUTLER. I have listened ever since the gentleman was on his feet, and I did not hear it read.

Mr. SHERLEY. I can only give the information; I am not responsible for its reception by any gentleman. I did the best I could.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand the gentleman's remarks. I am able to understand, but I say I did not hear the gentleman read what he says he did read, and that is the evidence of the warden of the penitentiary.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, the warden of the penitentiary was not before us.

Mr. BUTLER. Well, of the official that had the authority to speak for the penitentiary.

Mr. SHERLEY. I read that to the gentleman, and I suggest that he can read it quicker himself than I can read it again.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an amendment to line 14, page 123, to change the sum from $52,080 to $75,440.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 123, line 14, strike out the figures "$52,080" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$75,440."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, the reason for this increase of appropriation for the guards in the penitentiary at Leavenworth is in line with the recommendation made by the Attorney General, Mr. Wickersham, in his annual report. There has been some trouble in the institution in keeping a good class of reliable guards. The guard force there now is undoubtedly composed of the best men it is possible to get, and they are good men, but they are continually changing—going out to accept employment which affords them more remuneration, and also going into other branches of the Government service.

The Attorney General suggests that there should be a graduated scale for the payment of guards. They now receive $70 per month. He recommends that they start in at $60, and after six months' time their pay be increased gradually until after five years they receive a maximum of $100 a month. The position of guard at these penitentiaries is one of great responsibility. They require men way above the average, and they get but $70 a month. The idea of the Attorney General is to retain in the service the highest type of men necessary for the purpose. I ask the consideration of the committee for that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous expenditures, in the discretion of the Attorney General, including the same objects specified under this head for the United States penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., $25,000.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as fololws:

Amend, line 7, page 134, by striking out the figures "25,000" and inserting the figures "30,000."

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, the Attorney General asked in this appropriation for the sum of about $38,000. It is estimated by the Department of Justice that the necessary expenses under this appropriation would be $35,000, but the department submitted a request for an appropriation of $30,000 in order not to ask for a larger amount than was asked for by the department, that $30,000 be inserted in lieu of $25,000.

During the fiscal year 1911 the expenses payable from this appropriation up to the present time have amounted to $34,989.05, which was only $10.95 less than the amount asked for in the years 1911 and 1912.

Now, to further show the necessity for the increase in this appropriation I will state here some of the miscellaneous items paid for out of this appropriation: Coal used at the prison last year, $16,306.74; water, $3,672.73; parole officers' salary and expenses, $1,985.53; employment of dentists and dental work, $2,892.69; surgical operations, $120; for examination of insane prisoners, $270. These items alone amount to over $24,000. When this estimate was made for the Federal prison in Atlanta, $30,000, as the very least amount that the Attorney General could get along on, there were only 624 prisoners at the institution. To-day there are 936 prisoners confined in that penitentiary, or a little over 300 more men than when the estimate was made. The warden and the Attorney General in making their recommendation to the committee recommended the least possible amount upon which they could subsist under this particular head as being $30,000, and I hope this committee will see proper to give us this additional little $5,000 so that we will not be cramped down there for funds during the coming year.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this item reads:

For miscellaneous expenditures in the discretion of the Attorney General, including the same objects specified under this head for the United States penitentiary at Leavenworth, $25,000.

The item relating to Leavenworth under this head was the one which we just amended, striking out the word "for" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "including," and under the amendment which we agreed to the Attorney General can expend money for miscellaneous items ad libitum, but when it comes to the Atlanta Penitentiary he can only expend that sum for items which are specified in the Fort Leavenworth item, and the gentleman who introduced the amendment, representing the Atlanta prison, succeeded in getting it through for the benefit of the Fort Leavenworth prison, but escaped getting it through for the benefit of the Atlanta prison, and he will be in no better position than he was before unless he can amend this item.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Illinois for the information.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I always play fair.

Mr. HOWARD. I want to state to the gentleman that he possibly observed long ago that I am somewhat green in these matters.

Mr. MANN. I have observed that the gentleman is very bright and very active.

Mr. HOWARD. The verbiage of this amendment I thought would apply to this item, and when this item says "for miscellaneous expenditures in the discretion of the Attorney General, including the same objects specified under this head for the United States penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans.," I concluded it would apply in the same terms to the Federal prison at Atlanta. I have the most profound respect for the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois, but I believe I shall take my chances on Atlanta getting in under that amendment as it stands.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this is not the first time that the Attorney General has made just as vigorous a request for $30,000 for this item, and in former years the Congress has refused to give him in excess of $25,000. He managed to get along without any inconvenience whatever. The gentleman from Georgia is unduly alarmed because the committee does not take the request of the Attorney General quite so seriously as he does. We have increased this item over the appropriation for the current year, and have given all that the experience of the committee and the department indicates will be required for that particular purpose. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries, including pay of officials and employees, as follows: Warden, $4,000; deputy warden, $2,000; chaplain, $1,500; chaplain, $1,200; chief clerk, $1,800; physician, $1,600; bookkeeper and record clerk, $1,200; stenographer, $900; 6 clerks, at $900 each; telephone operator, $480; engineer and electrician, $1,500; assistant engineer and electrician, $1,200; 3 captains of watch, at $1,000 each; steward and storekeeper, $1,200; superintendent of farm and transportation, $900; 2 teamsters, at $600 each; head cook, $1,000; guards, at $70 per month each, $43,000; in all, $73,080.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I have three or four different amendments I would like to introduce to this particular item. Should they all be introduced at one time, or can they be taken up separately?

The CHAIRMAN. One at a time.

Mr. HOWARD. Very well, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 15, page 124, by striking out "$900" where it first appears in said line and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,200."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will reserve the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. It is an increase of salary and changes the law. It is useless to argue about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 16, page 124, by adding before the word "assistant" the word "two," and after the word "assistant" where said word last appears in said line strike out the word "engineer" and insert "engineers," and before the word "electrician," in line 17, add the word "one."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that and I would like to have the Clerk report the paragraph as it would read, as amended. We could not catch the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Two assistant engineers and one electrician.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the gentleman reserve the point of order for a moment. I desire to let the committee know why the amendments are introduced.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, the necessity for these engineers at this prison is urgent. They have only a chief engineer and one assistant.

The machinery of this plant is run night and day. In the event one of the engineers is sick or takes leave the duty falls upon that one engineer to run all the machinery of this whole plant for 24 hours at a time, which, of course, is a physical impossibility. Now, in the event anything should befall any of these engineers, then the responsibility of running the machinery of that prison falls upon the convicts of the prison who happen to be acquainted with the machinery. This additional engineer has been urgently asked for by the department. It has been recommended by the warden, and it is a real necessity. The two engineers there now are working 12 hours per day every day of their lives including Sundays, and they have asked for this assistant engineer.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The bill carries engineer and electrician, $1,500; assistant engineer and electrician, $1,200. Just what is the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. HOWARD. Instead of having one assistant engineer I ask for two assistant engineers, at $1,200 each.

Mr. MANN. Just what is the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. HOWARD. To insert after the words "fifteen hundred," in line 12, the word "two" before the word "assistant," and add an "s" to "engineer," and insert before the word "electrician," in line 17, the word "one."

Mr. MANN. Then, the gentleman proposes to appoint two assistant engineers and one electrician?

Mr. HOWARD. No; there is already provided one electrician——

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; there is an assistant engineer and electrician, and that is one person. I thought the gentleman had it a little bit mixed. If he had proposed to appoint two assistant enigneers and electricians, I think that is not subject to the point of order, but the gentleman proposes to appoint two assistant engineers and one electrician and——

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask to modify my amendment so as to make it "two assistant engineers and electricians."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, when the amendment is reported I reserve a point of order on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 124, line 16, by inserting before the word "assistant" the word "two," and before the word "electrician" the word "one," so it will read "two assistant engineers and one electrician."

Mr. MANN. I suggest you make it "two assistant engineers and electricians, $1,200 each, $2,400."

Mr. SHERLEY. I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not contend it is subject to the point of order to increase the number?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must confess he has been unable to get at the gentleman's amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert before the word "assistant" the word "two," so it will read "two assistant engineers and electricians."

The CHAIRMAN. Now the Chair will ask the gentleman whether in his opinion that increases the number of officers?

Mr. HOWARD. By one officer.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair rules upon the point of order let me remind the Chair that there is no law fixing the number of officers at the Atlanta Penitentiary any more than there is a law fixing the number of officers in any other department of the Government. There is no law fixing even the number of officers, and it has been always ruled that the number of officials named in a current law is not binding upon us in the consideration of an appropriation bill. It has been ruled that the salary fixed in the current law does bind. That is purely an arbitrary rule, but if the Chair sustains the point of order on increasing the number of officers we could not pass the Post Office appropriation bill; you could not pass any appropriation bill which increases the number of officers in the Government or clerks in a department.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is aware of that, because they are increased from time to time without authority of law, but no one raises a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Frequently a point of order is raised. A point of order was raised on the Post Office bill this session on that particular question and overruled by the Chair. On the legislative bill on the very question it was overruled by the Chair, and on the agricultural bill on the very identical question it was overruled.

Take the agricultural bill, and the point was made that the agricultural bill granted an increase in the number of employees over that in the existing law, but there being no authority specifically fixing the number of employees and the authority for their being employed in the law creating the department, in every case the Chair has overruled the point of order. If there is good authority for this, the whole item is subject to a point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. I remember the original agricultural bill, because the original act provides such clerks as Congress may authorize.

Does not this provide the same item in the same language?

Mr. MANN. The agricultural bill did not cover a great many cases that were in there.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the original act provides that.

Mr. MANN. No; it does not.

Mr. FOSTER. That was the point when the point of order was made on the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. That was as to certain experts.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that was the ruling of the Chair at that time on the point of order raised on the agricultural bill. The law was broad enough to authorize the appropriation for any officer.

Mr. BUTLER. When the law does prescribe for officials, how can we get them if we do not have authority here to fix them?

Mr. MANN. If there is no law for the engineer or electrician at the Atlanta Penitentiary, and the Chair holds you can not include such an item, you can not hold such an item in this bill in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is pretty nearly of that opinion.

Mr. MANN. I think, if the Chair so holds, he will overrule nearly all of the other chairmen.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is going to follow the precedent and will not sustain the point of order, but let the matter go to a vote.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to offer these amendments, one at a time, if the Chair will permit. I had not finished, and I would like to offer an amendment to line 17, page 124.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 17, page 124, by striking out all of said line after "$1,200."

Mr. HOWARD. That strikes out the words "three captains of the watch at $1,000 each," and I would like to introduce, Mr. Chairman, before I explain that particular amendment, the following amendment to line 20, on the same page.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 124, line 20, by striking out all of said line as follows: "At $70 per month each, $43,000." And inserting in lieu thereof and before the word "guards": "Three captains of watch and guards, $58,293."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to that.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that that particular amendment is subject to a point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. It undertakes to change the amount to be paid these guards.

Mr. HOWARD. The three captains of the watch and guards necessary, not stipulating the number of guards that are necessary, but it states the salary. Now, the purpose of this amendment, Mr. Chairman, is to carry out the recommendation of the department relative to the graduated scale of salaries at this prison. These guards are now receiving the small sum of $70 a month, the captains of the watch are receiving the sum of $1,000 per annum. The Attorney General has recommended this change. This is a splendid body of men. Men of high character, intelligent, and industrious. They are men who have families dependent upon them. They used to obtain their midday meal at the prison free; now they have to pay for this meal. At one time they were allowed to purchase their supplies from the prison commissary at the price the Government paid for such supplies. This was stopped by the department, and the free use of the laundry once extended to these men is now denied them.

Mr. Chairman, it is needless for me to call attention to the high cost of living and its steady increase. This small salary, taking into consideration that in addition to the enormous increase in the price of foodstuffs, they have to buy two suits of guard's uniforms per annum. They are furnished no house to live in, no subsistence of any character, and are required to be on duty 365 days in the year.

Now, the Attorney General recommends that after a guard has been employed at the prison for a term of six months he commences to receive $5 per month additional to $70, until his salary reaches the maximum amount of $100 per month, or $1,200 a year; and the captains of the watch at the same time will receive an increase in their salaries up to the maximum of $1,400 per annum.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope that this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have made the point of order to it. If the gentleman wishes to speak on the point of order, he is at liberty to do so.

Mr. HOWARD. I think it is good, but it is a question of judgment.

Mr. SHERLEY. I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. HOWARD. Then there is no use in further discussion about it. I concede the point of order. We can proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. May I have the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]? On page 124 you have an item for miscellaneous expenditures, and so forth, at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., $25,000, and another item for $2,500.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is mistaken. Those items are not for Fort Leavenworth, Kans. They are for Atlanta Penitentiary, but the provisions of the items under which they can be expended are the same as those in regard to the items at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

Mr. GARNER. They are merely descriptive?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For foremen, tailor, blacksmith, shoemaker, laundryman, and carpenter, when necessary, $4,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that this year at Atlanta they have some of these same officials. The appropriations for blacksmith and carpenter, and so forth, are omitted this year at Leavenworth, but they are left at Atlanta. What special reason is there for that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The statement was made before the committee that at Leavenworth the warden was able to dispense with the services of the blacksmith and carpenter, and so on.

Mr. MANN. Why do they need a blacksmith and carpenter at Atlanta if they can dispense with them at Leavenworth?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The warden at Atlanta, as the gentleman has probably seen, is very tenacious, and he insisted that he required these particular mechanics.

Mr. HOWARD. It is not the warden; it is the Representative who is tenacious. The warden has nothing to do with it.

Mr. MANN. In the current law we appropriate for a shoemaker and a harnessmaker and a tinner and a blacksmith at Fort Leavenworth; and the warden there, showing that they might be dispensed with, I assume, recommended that they be left out of the bill, as they have been. But at Atlanta they do not seem to be willing to dispense with anything.

Mr. HOWARD. That is true, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. As long as they have the present able Representative they will probably be unwilling to dispense with anything.

Mr. HOWARD. I will explain that, if the gentleman wants me to, about the blacksmith. The blacksmith is needed at Atlanta at this particular time because of the peculiar condition——

Mr. BUTLER. Until after the election?

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman conjured up a good reason while I have been talking? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. He is needed, I say, because of the condition of the construction personnel at this time.

Mr. MANN. But the conditions of the construction at Atlanta and at Leavenworth are identical.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not know about it at Leavenworth, but at Atlanta I know the blacksmith, and he is a good fellow, and he earns his money.

Mr. MANN. Then, if the gentleman knows him, that is a sufficient explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIGHTHOUSES, BEACONS, AND FOG SIGNALS.

Light vessel, general service: For constructing and equipping one light vessel for general service, $130,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph. I notice, first, that the committee have changed the heading "Light vessels and other vessels under the Lighthouse Service" to "Lighthouses, beacons, and fog signals."

Then the first item is a light vessel, which is not covered by the heading. What is the reason for changing the heading so that it does not cover the item that follows?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The words "light vessels" were left out inadvertently.

Mr. MANN. Then they may be inserted. Does the gentleman contend that this light vessel is authorized by law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is authorized. All of the items here are authorized by law.

Mr. MANN. There really ought to be some reference here, where you provide a light vessel for general service. I do not think there is any authorization for that.

Mr. PAGE. This is authorized under the act of June 17, 1910.

Mr. MANN. Did that provide a light vessel for general service?

Mr. PAGE. Yes; it is so stated, one light vessel for general service.

Mr. MANN. The reason I asked was because there have been several light vessels authorized for particular service where they are not necessary, and the department has been asking that light vessels for general service might be allowed, instead of those for particular service, to which I have no objection; but I do not desire, if we allow one of them, to have it said, "This was allowed by an appropriation bill and is not the one authorized by the act."

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Committee on Appropriations have refused to appropriate for any new works in this service except those that have been previously authorized by law. The Committee on Appropriations have taken the position that it was much safer to have the committee having jurisdiction of the matter recommend the authorization.

Mr. MANN. I was thinking for the moment of lighthouse tenders. There is nothing of that sort in here. I now remember the light vessel for general service. There are some authorizations for lighthouse tenders where they are not needed, and the department desired to have them for general service. That bill has not come along yet.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee did not attempt to determine those questions.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

General expenses, Lighthouse Service: For supplies, repairs, maintenance, and incidental expenses of lighthouses and other lights, beacons, buoyage, fog signals, lighting of rivers heretofore authorized to be lighted, light vessels, other aids to navigation, and lighthouse tenders, including the establishment, repair, and improvement of beacons and day marks and purchase of land for same, the establishment of post lights, buoys, submarine signals and fog signals, the establishment of oil or carbide houses, not to exceed $10,000: Provided, That no oil or carbide house erected hereunder shall exceed $550 in cost; the construction of necessary outbuildings at a cost not exceeding $200 at any one light station in any fiscal year, the improvements of grounds and buildings connected with light stations and depots, wages of laborers attending post lights, pay of temporary employees while engaged on works of general repair and maintenance, rations and provisions or commutation thereof for keepers of lighthouses, officers and crews of light vessels and tenders, and officials and other authorized persons of the Lighthouse Service on duty on board of such tenders or vessels, and money accruing from commutation for rations and provisions for the above-named persons on board of tenders and light vessels may be paid on proper vouchers to the person having charge of the mess of such vessels, reimbursement under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor of keepers of light stations and masters of light vessels and of lighthouse tenders for rations and provisions and clothing furnished shipwrecked persons who may be temporarily provided for by them, not exceeding in all $5,000 in any fiscal year, fuel and rent of quarters where necessary for keepers of lighthouses, the purchase of land sites for fog signals, the rent of necessary ground for all such lights and beacons as are for temporary use or to mark changeable channels and which in consequence can not be made permanent, the rent of offices, depots, and wharves, traveling expenses and mileage, library books for light stations and vessels, and technical books and periodicals not exceeding $1,000, and for all other contingent expenses of district offices and depots, and for contingent expenses of the office of the Bureau of Lighthouses in Washington, $2,569,400.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. This paragraph at the top of page 128 carries a provision for rations for lighthouse keepers, or the commutation that is provided for by law. Now, the gentleman has inserted in the bill the words "and other authorized persons" to receive the rations or the commutation.

The CHAIRMAN. On what line is that?

Mr. MANN. Line 7, page 128. That does not mean authorized by law. That would allow the Lighthouse Service to authorize anyone connected with the service to have these rations in addition to pay.

Mr. FITZGERALD. While on board the tenders.

Mr. MANN. I do not think that is it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is.

Mr. MANN. It says:

Rations and provisions or commutation thereof for keepers of lighthouses, officers and crews of light vessels and tenders, and officials and other authorized persons of the Lighthouse Service on duty on board of such tenders or vessels.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certain officials or employees in the service are compelled at times to be on these tenders, and this is simply to enable the rations to be furnished them. Otherwise they would have to be provided at the expense of the officers of the vessels.

Mr. MANN. Very well. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read to page 135, including line 8.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not think it is on account of the ball game, but the attendance in the committee has fallen off considerably. I suggest to my friend from New York that this would be a good time and place for the committee to rise.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 25069, the sundry civil appropriation bill, but had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 16689. An act legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Union Pacific Railroad Co.;

H. R. 23557. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 18956. An act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 7012. An act to permit the construction of a subway and the maintenance of a railroad under the post-office building at or near Park Place, in the city of New York; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 6573. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and erection of a Federal building at Raton, N. Mex.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 6269. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of Santa Fe, in the State of New Mexico; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 7096. An act to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Narragansett Pier, R. I.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 5790. An act for the relief of C. E. Moore; to the Committee on Claims.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Pensions is discharged from the further consideration of the act (S. 1152) granting an increase of pension to Mary Braford Crowninshield, and the same is referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, that does not require action of the House. If it is a private bill, the rule provides for the transfer of private bills.

The SPEAKER. It is a private bill, but a Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. The rule provides that the committee may do that. I have no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. The references of Senate bills are corrected under the rule like public bills. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HUGHES of Georgia, for one week, on account of attending the annual meeting of the board of trustees of the University of Georgia.

To Mr. LITTLEPAGE, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. DAVENPORT, for one week, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. THOMAS of Kentucky, indefinitely, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, June 17, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting supplemental estimate of appropriation for draining and filling swamps within Government reservations on Constitution Island (H. Doc. No. 834) was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15241) for the relief of Fred R. Payne, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 896), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. PEPPER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 19190) for the relief of John P. Risley, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 897), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 18425) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Simon Nager, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 898), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

SENATE.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. BACON took the chair as President pro tempore under the previous order of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on request of Mr. LODGE and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate communications from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact and conclusions of law filed by the court in the following causes:

William H. Norris, executor of William Bohlen, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 853); and Mary A. Zinn, widow of Henry I. Zinn, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 852).

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

USE OF TELEPHONES BY GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS (S. DOC. NO. 851).

A message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the message just received from the President of the United States may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The message was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of the Congress a communication from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, inviting attention to section 7 of the legislative, executive, and judicial bill with reference to the use of telephones by Government officials.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 15, 1912.

HOUR OF MEETING ON THURSDAY.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next at 10 o'clock a. m. I am asking for a 10 o'clock meeting for the reason that we will have no business to transact other than the usual morning business and a great many Senators could then have an opportunity to put in a full day if they did not have to wait until noon on that day in order to introduce a bill or something of that kind. Waiting until noon breaks up the entire day, and if we can meet at 10 o'clock—as we will be in session only a few minutes—it will give us the entire day to do as we may wish. I know that the motion is not inconsistent with the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock on Thursday. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of members of the Commercial Association of Evanston, Ill., praying that an appropriation be made for the purchase of buildings for the accommodation of American representatives abroad, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of Local Union No. 735, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffers, Stablemen, and Helpers of America; of Local Union No. 194, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers of America; and of G. W. Gibson, secretary of the International Association of Car Workers, all of Chicago, in the State of Illinois, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the better protection of American seamen, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Kewanee, Taylorville, Chicago, Peoria, Freeport, Carlinville, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the passage of the so-called anti-injunction bill, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ASHURST. I present a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which is very short, and I ask that it may be read.

The concurrent resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 5.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the First Legislature of the State of Arizona, in special session convened, That it is the desire of the legislature that the Congress of the United States make such amendment or amendments to the reclamation act as will permit the State of Arizona to purchase from the United States water rights for all State and school lands, under reclamation projects, in excess of the maximum of 160 acres allowed to private purchasers, such water rights to be held by the State for the use and benefit of its citizens.

Provided always, That the State, in leasing said lands and water rights, shall impose the same conditions, regulations, and restrictions upon the lessees of said lands and water rights, as to maximum area of holdings, cultivation, etc., as are now imposed upon private water-right producers by the reclamation act.

Resolved further, That certified copies of this resolution be forwarded to Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST and Hon. MARCUS A. SMITH, United States Senators from Arizona; to Hon. CARL HAYDEN, Representative in Congress from Arizona; and to Hon. Samuel Adams, First Assistant Secretary of the Department of the Interior.

June 10, 1912, adopted by the unanimous vote of the senate.

W. G. CUNNIFF,
President of the Senate.

June 10, 1912, adopted by the unanimous vote of the house.

SAM B. BRADNER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

We, B. F. Thum, chief clerk of the house of representatives of the first State legislature and J. M. McCollum, secretary of the senate of the first State legislature, in extra session, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of house concurrent resolution 5, as passed by the house and senate.

B. F. THUM,
Chief Clerk of House of Representatives.
J. M. McCOLLUM,
Secretary of Senate.

Mr. CURTIS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Kansas City, Kans., remonstrating against the establishment of a department of public health, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Topeka and of Barton, Ness, Scott, Reno, McPherson, and Rush Counties, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the establishment of a department of public health, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ROOT presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Middletown, N. Y., remonstrating against the establishment of a department of public health, which was ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey:

A bill (S. 7172) granting an increase of pension to Augustin Buhl (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 7173) granting a pension to Lydia M. Jacobs (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 7174) authorizing the issuance of a patent to the northwest quarter section 27, township 17 south, range 40 west, Dodge City (Kans.) land district to George H. Lowrey; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 7175) to correct the military record of Patrick McAnany; and

A bill (S. 7176) to correct the military record of Frederick A. Miller; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Maine:

A bill (S. 7177) granting an increase of pension to Ezekiel R. Thomas (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 7178) granting an increase of pension to John J. Jameson (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 7179) granting an increase of pension to Charles T. Knight (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 7180) granting an increase of pension to Alvin H. Ellis (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

THE COTTON SCHEDULE.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 25034) to reduce the duties on the manufactures of cotton, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

TARIFF DUTIES ON WOOL.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 22195) to reduce the duties on wool and the manufactures of wool, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BOURNE. For and on behalf of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] I submit an amendment proposing to appropriate $20,000 for continuing the work of the International Waterways Commission, and so forth, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 25069), which I move be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. On behalf of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and at his request, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 25069) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and at his request I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and it will be printed under the rule.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $120,000 for payment to the treasurer of the Mount Vernon Avenue Association, of Virginia, to be used by the association toward the construction of a boulevard from Mount Vernon to Washington, D. C., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 25069), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for grading and constructing a macadam road on Massachusetts Avenue from Nebraska Avenue west to the District line, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 25069), which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $310.62 to pay the city of Topeka, Kans., being the Government's proportionate part of the expenses incurred in establishing the White Way and the curb and gutter tax against the post-office property in that city, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 25069), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment relative to the promotion of officers in the United States Navy who by their seniority have been placed upon the retired list for physical disability, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 24565), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $7,500 for the erection of a chapel at the Eastern Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Togus, Me., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 25069), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

STATUS OF RESOLUTION ON THE TABLE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there concurrent or other resolutions to be introduced? [After a pause.] There is a resolution on the table, but the Chair understands that under the consent order it will not be in order to be considered. So the Chair does not lay it before the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I have some doubt in my mind as to whether resolutions coming over, as in the case of the resolution on the table, would be included in the routine morning business. I intended to have made some inquiry on that point the other day.

Mr. LODGE. Under the unanimous-consent agreement it could not be taken up anyway, because it requires a vote.

Mr. HEYBURN. It might be debated. I was wondering whether it is routine morning business.

Mr. LODGE. The agreement, I think, is intended plainly to exclude everything.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Idaho not to raise the question as to whether it can be considered under the consent order, but whether it is properly a part of the morning business.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have no desire to have it taken up. I am going away for a few days, and I merely wanted to know whether, in the opinion of the Chair, it is morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that it is not specifically named in the rule, except that a concurrent resolution is in order, and if objected to it goes over. That is the sense in which it is considered as a part of the morning business, and it has been so universally treated by the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I see by a reference to the rules what action has been taken heretofore. I do not want to go away under the impression that such matters could not come up and then find they had been brought up.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator will find it on the table when he returns.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no concurrent or other resolutions, the morning business is closed.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, June 20, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 17, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee that it is not always easy to tell the truth, to be honest, to be just, to be pure; otherwise there would be no virtue in the power of resistance nor in the courage of our convictions. We realize that each day is a day of probation, each test a crucial test. To meet the temptations of to-day successfully is to strengthen us for the conflicts of the morrow. If we live well to-day, we shall be prepared to live better to-morrow. "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, help us to think on these things."

For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, June 15, 1912, was read and approved.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. This is the day set apart for the consideration of bills on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent. The Clerk will report the first bill.

ALLOTTEES OF FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4948) to amend an act approved May 27, 1908, entitled "An act for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, before the bill is read, I ask unanimous consent that consideration of it be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that consideration of the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

SCHOOL SECTIONS WITHIN INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 19344) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange lands for school sections within an Indian, military, national forest, or other reservation, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is not present, and I suggest that the bill be passed without prejudice.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to pass over this bill for the present. I do not see any member of the Public Lands Committee present.

Mr. BUTLER. That will mean the passage for two weeks.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I shall not object, although I gave notice two weeks ago that the bill would have to be disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] asks unanimous consent to pass over the bill without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INHERITED ESTATES IN FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES, OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 22083) relating to inherited estates in the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That conveyances of inherited allotments by full-blood heirs made subsequent to May 27, 1908, in cases of allottees dying prior to May 27, 1908, shall have the same effect as if the allottee had died subsequent to May 27, 1908, and shall not require the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is, not to change, but simply to elucidate the present law, already in existence. Briefly, section 9 of the act of May 27, 1908, gives the probate courts of the State of Oklahoma jurisdiction over all inherited estates of the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes. No contention was made on this point until something more than a year after the law went into effect, when suddenly it dawned upon the Interior Department that the point was sufficiently involved to necessitate a ruling on same by the Department of Justice. The Department of Justice, as is usually the case, decided favorably to the Interior Department, reading into the act the word "hereafter," thereby making it apply only to inherited estates of allottees who died after the passage of the restriction act, which was May 27, 1908. In the meantime a great many bona fide transfers had been made upon the presumption that the act of May 27, 1908, applied to allottees dying both before and after the passage of the law. And it has since that time been so held by both the Supreme Court of the State of Oklahoma and the Federal Court in the Eastern Judicial District of Oklahoma in the cases of McHarg v. Eatman (116 Pacific, 935) and Harris v. Gale (188 Federal, 712), respectively. So that we now have two court decisions on the one hand, as against the ruling of the Attorney General on the other. This bill proposes to construe the law along the line of the two court decisions rather than in accord with the opinion of the Attorney General.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the gentleman mean to say that the law, as this bill would make it, has already been upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. CARTER. Oh, no; not the Supreme Court of the United States, but by the Supreme Court of the State of Oklahoma and the Federal Court of the Eastern Judicial District of the State of Oklahoma. I do not believe the gentleman from Nebraska would dispute that these decisions were correct after reading the law.

Mr. NORRIS. Are the cases on the way to the Federal Supreme Court?

Mr. CARTER. No; and no appeal was taken from the Federal court or from the State supreme court.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the gentleman say that, notwithstanding those decisions have become final, so to speak, the Attorney General still holds otherwise?

Mr. CARTER. The Attorney General made his ruling previous to the two court decisions upon a case submitted to the Department of Justice by the Interior Department. Now, I presume the decision of the Attorney General is so satisfactory to the Interior Department that no further opinion will be asked on the subject.

Mr. NORRIS. Is he not willing to change his ruling now?

Mr. CARTER. Well, he has not done so. There has been no case taken up to him as yet, and it is a rather complicated procedure to get a case before him without submitting same through a department of the Government. What we want is to have these decisions of the courts verified by this Congress—if I may be permitted to use that word—without any further trouble with the Department of Justice or Interior Department, either.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the law was that these conveyances could only be made upon the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CARTER. That was the case before the act of May 27, 1908.

Mr. MANN. Congress passed an act providing that they could be made upon the approval of the probate court, but the Attorney General has held that that did not apply to cases where the allottee had already died. The courts held that it did apply to allottees who had died previous to the passage of the act authorizing the transfers to be made upon the approval of the probate court?

Mr. CARTER. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. A good many transfers have been made, as a matter of fact, upon the approval of the probate court, without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. The gentleman now seeks to pass an act which will validate those conveyances that have already been made, with the approval of the probate court, and would allow other conveyances to be made hereafter of allottees who died previous to the passage of the act, upon the approval of the probate court?

Mr. CARTER. That is the exact purpose of this bill.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know what the position of the department is in reference to it?

Mr. CARTER. As I have just stated, the Interior Department took the matter up several years ago and submitted it to the Attorney General for an opinion. The Attorney General replied, ruling that the probate courts did not have final jurisdiction in the matter, but such transfers must require the approval of the Secretary of the Interior when involving lands of persons dying prior to May 27, 1908, the date of the passage of the act.

The Interior Department has recently sent us a report which, to be candid, I must admit is unfavorable to the passage of the bill.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, of course as to conveyances which might be made hereafter, there is no great difficulty probably in securing the approval of the Secretary of the Interior instead of the approval of the probate court. I apprehend, however, there is considerable work in obtaining the approval of both? That is what the gentleman seeks to avoid?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it complicates matters very much to require the approval of both?

Mr. CARTER. O Mr. Speaker, indeed it does. The nineteen and one-half million acres of lands on the east side of the State of Oklahoma are all Indian lands. The natural percentage of deaths have occurred there the same as in other places, so that this involves deaths that might occur among the allottees of nineteen and one-half million acres of land.

Mr. MANN. This involves only the death of those allottees which occurred prior to 1908?

Mr. CARTER. Yes. My statement should be qualified to that extent. It involves the natural percentage of deaths that might have occurred from the time enrollment began, in 1898, until the passage of this act of May 27, 1908, which would be 10 years in duration, and everyone must admit that this is sure to be a very large percentage.

We are not afraid to go before the Secretary or any other tribunal for the approval of these matters. It is the complicated procedure and delay attendant upon departmental action which is objected to. It takes not less than six month, and often longer than a year, to get these deeds approved by the Secretary. They have to go through all the channels. The application is filed with the district agent; from the district agent it goes to the superintendent of the Union Agency, at Muskogee; from the superintendent to one of his subordinates; from the subordinate back to the superintendent; from the superintendent to the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes; from the commissioner to one of his subordinates; from subordinate back to the commissioner; then from the commissioner to the Secretary of the Interior at Washington; from whence it is referred to the Indian Bureau; from the commissioner of that bureau to his subordinate; from that subordinate back to the commissioner; from the commissioner to the Secretary of the Interior; from the Secretary of the Interior to the law clerk of his department; and the law clerk refers it back to the Secretary. After all of this red tape you will eventually get final action from the Secretary of the Interior—favorable if you have a gilt-edge case, a good lawyer, and a Congressman who is willing to work 18 hours a day in about 6 to 18 months; and you will find when you get the approval that it has cost you more in expenses, lawyers' fees, trips to Muskogee, Washington, and other places, and in interest on money deposited, than you first contemplated paying for the land.

As I said before, this involves the natural percentage of deaths in almost one-half the lands of a great State—35 or 40 counties, if my memory serves me right—which work in itself would be of sufficient volume to engage the entire attention of a pretty good-sized department. With all this mass of business in hand, and the many other things the Interior Department is having to look after just now, procedure in these cases has become so obstructed that there is very little market for this class of titles. What I desire to do is to make the procedure less cumbersome, and this can very easily be done by this bill, which simply clarifies the present law.

Mr. MANN. It is a fact, is it not, that as to at least one probate court in Oklahoma there were serious charges of fraud preferred and believed to be true? Does the gentleman think it is perfectly secure to permit the probate court to make these approvals and that that will properly safeguard the interests of the Indians?

Mr. CARTER. There have been two county judges against whom charges were made in Oklahoma. One of these judges was defeated at the succeeding election and the other removed from office, neither of them serving at the present time. Even if these charges were true, this would make only 2 out of 35 or 40 judges; and let me remind the gentleman that there have also been some serious charges made upon the other side of this question. I do not care to bring any charges against the department or to even discuss that phase of the question at this time, but this House will no doubt remember a case presented here by my colleague [Mr. DAVENPORT] from the third Oklahoma district, in which an agent of the department was insisting on taking less for land—a great deal less, I believe—than the county probate court had already been offered. The county judge stuck to his contention and got the higher price. These things will naturally occur whether in the department or out of it, whether a county judge in Oklahoma or any other State of the Union.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I do not doubt there might be charges properly preferred against some of the officials in the Interior Department, and yet in the main probably the Interior Department would be less influenced by the local desire to get these lands out of the hands of incompetent Indians than would the local authorities be.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat what I said sometime ago in the discussion on the Indian appropriation bill. We have in Oklahoma what we call a State board of charities and corrections. In that board there has been organized a special bureau for the specific purpose of looking after this very character of case—minor children's allotments and inherited estates. That department is very ably presided over by a young lady named Miss Katie Barnard, and her assistant in charge of this specific work is Dr. J. H. Stolper, and the grafter who gets anything past the vigilant eye of these two guardsmen will have to show something better than they have ever yet conjured up.

Mr. MANN. What have they to do with the approval of the probate court?

Mr. CARTER. Well they have a kind of general supervision over the acts of county judges in regard to these matters, and appear as attorneys for the incompetents and minors in these and many other cases.

Mr. MANN. But I do not understand that they appear as attorneys in every case where application is made in the probate court to sell property in the settlement of an estate?

Mr. CARTER. Oh, of course, they could not appear in every case, but they have a general supervision of the entire matter. I presume the county attorney appears very often in such cases; the State board of charities and corrections, however, keeps a pretty close watch over all these transactions and, I think, is amply qualified to take care of the situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read the committee amendments, as follows:

Amend, line 3, page 1, by inserting after the word "full blood" the word "Indian."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 4, page 1, by inserting after the word "heirs" the following: "members of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMERICAN REGISTRY TO NORWEGIAN ICE BREAKER "KIT."

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 17235) to grant American registry to the Norwegian ice breaker Kit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation be, and he is hereby, authorized to register as an American vessel the Norwegian steam ice breaker Kit, of 240 tons net: Provided, however, That such registry is based upon the express condition that such vessel shall engage each year from November 1 to June 1 of the next year in carrying mail, freight, and passengers in Bering Sea, and from June 1 to November 1 in whaling in American waters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FERRIS. I would ask the gentleman to withhold for a moment——

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to the fact that Mr. HARDY is not here this morning, and I ask unanimous consent that this may go over.

Mr. FERRIS. That is the request I was going to make.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I objected to it two weeks ago.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts object?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I do.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be stricken from the calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had, on June 15, 1912, approved and signed bills of the following titles:

H. R. 16674. An act to establish a subport of entry at Indiana Harbor, in the State of Indiana;

H. R. 17679. An act to make Bay City, Mich., a subport of entry; and

H. R. 19476. An act granting certain lands to the State of California to form a part of California Redwood Park in said State.

VETO OF ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL (H. DOC. NO. 835).

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I have carefully considered the important questions presented by the bill entitled "An act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," and I now return it to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, with my objections to its approval.

The bill provides in the usual form for the appropriation required for the support of the Army during the next fiscal year. If it contained no other provisions, it would receive my prompt approval. It includes, however, further legislation of a most important character.

In addition to the appropriation bill proper, there were enacted by the House of Representatives, in six appended sections and elsewhere in the bill, a body of legislation which would substantially reorganize and change the existing military establishment. Among other things, this legislation reduced the Army by five regiments of Cavalry; it changed the existing term of the soldiers' enlistment; it altered the amounts of pay and conditions of allowances made to officers and enlisted men; it consolidated the three great supply corps of the Army, and also merged The Adjutant General's and Inspector General's departments with the General Staff; it reduced not only the number of general officers of the Army, but also reduced very materially the total number of officers and changed the number and methods of detail of such officers to the various departments; and in other ways made changes which necessarily had a far-reaching effect upon the military policy of the Nation as well as upon the organization with which that policy must be carried out.

When this bill reached the Senate that body, by a decisive vote, struck all of this new and affirmative legislation from the bill, giving as its reasons, in the language of the chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, the following:

Mr. President, the sections of the Army bill, from and including section 2, which are known as the legislative sections of the bill, have been stricken out, as the committee does not believe that important and radical legislation of this kind should be included in an appropriation bill, but should be discussed on its own merits as an independent measure as soon as the proposed plan of reorganization is received from the War Department. * * *

The subjects covered by these provisions directly affect the efficiency of the Army, and can not receive the careful consideration which their importance demands when included in the provisions of an appropriation bill. * * *

The consensus of opinion of the military authorities is that it is inadvisable at this time to attempt a partial reorganization of the Army. The entire subject of reorganization has been under prolonged investigation by the General Staff Corps, which corps was created by law for the purpose, among other duties, of studying and advising upon such subjects. * * * Until fully matured by the military authorities of the War Department and by the Military Committees of the two Houses of Congress the time required for its full discussion should not be hastened by the urgency of an appropriation bill.

The bill then went to conference, and the House conferees have now succeeded in restoring to the bill a large portion of this affirmative legislation, and in addition thereto have succeeded in introducing into the bill two entirely new provisions which had not before received the attention of either House of Congress or of either of their military committees.

One of these provisions creates a commission to consist of five retired Army officers, who are named in the bill, instead of being chosen by the President or Secretary of War, and two Members from each House of Congress, to be designated by the presiding officers of such Houses, respectively, to report upon the location and distribution of military posts which are required within the continental limits of the United States for the proper accommodation, instruction, and training of the mobile Army, and until such report is made the Executive is expressly deprived of all power to authorize the commencement of new posts or to change in any manner the posts now in existence in the United States.

The second provision introduced by the conference provides that no officer after March 5, 1913, shall be permitted to serve as Chief of Staff unless he shall have served at least 10 years as a commissioned officer of the line of the Army in grades below that of brigadier general. This provision would render ineligible after that date for service in the most important position of the Army the present Chief of Staff and many other of the most efficient officers of the Army.

This brief summary of the history and character of the affirmative legislation attached to this bill serves to bring out the objections thereto. The dangers inherent in the practice of attaching substantive legislation to appropriation bills have been frequently pointed out by my predecessors. The only justification that has been offered for such practice is that it has been found a convenient method for facilitating the passage of measures which are deemed expedient by all the branches of government which participate in legislation. Thus, it has more than once occurred that useful items of Army legislation, generally of an urgent character, have been passed in this manner, when the desirability of the enactment was recognized and acquiesced in by the common consent of both the Executive and of Congress. But no condition of urgency is here disclosed, nor can it be claimed that there is any such reason for attaching the present legislation to this Army appropriation bill. The history of the measure flatly contradicts this assumption. The most important provisions insisted on by the House of Representatives in this bill have been inserted therein against the recommendation of the President, the Secretary of War, and the General Staff of the Army. They are earnestly opposed by those officers whose experience and knowledge as to matters of Army organization and administration are presumed to be that of experts. The primary purpose of the two provisions last inserted in conference is to limit the existing choice of the President as to his military adviser and to limit the power of his Secretary of War as to the distribution of the mobile Army. Taken as a whole, it would be hard to conceive of a clearer instance of an attempt to force upon the Executive legislation well known to be disapproved by him, and, by attaching such legislation to one of the great supply bills of the Government, to deprive the President of his constitutional power as to legislation.

There can be no constitutional defense to such a practice. On the contrary, such attempts have been firmly resisted by my predecessors. In 1879 President Hayes vetoed an Army appropriation bill because there had been added to it by Congress similar provisions of substantive law.

He said:

> It is clearly the constitutional duty of the President to exercise his discretion and judgment upon all bills presented to him without constraint or duress from any other branch of the Government. To say that a majority of either or both of the Houses of Congress may insist upon the approval of a bill under the penalty of stopping all of the operations of the Government for want of the necessary supplies is to deny to the Executive that share of the legislative power which is plainly conferred by the second section of the seventh article of the Constitution. It strikes from the Constitution the qualified negative of the President.

The legislation attached to the present Army appropriation bill seems to me to be clearly objectionable in the following respects:

First. The provision above mentioned, limiting the eligibility of officers to be Chief of Staff, narrows the choice of the President in selecting incumbents for the most important position of the Army. Had it been in operation in past years, it would have disqualified the majority of the most brilliant officers of our Army. It tends to put a premium upon mere routine service and to exclude from the highest post of the Army the men whose force, intelligence, and opportunities have brought them quickly to the front. It would tend to confine the choice for this principal staff position to men who have had the least staff experience.

If, in addition, this provision, as has been asserted in the debates of Congress, has been introduced for the purpose of affecting the future of individual officers now upon the Army list, it contains a vice frequently reprobated by Executive action in disapproving Army legislation.

Second. By reducing the number of the General Staff the bill, in my opinion, tends to cripple the most important corps of the Army—that corps which, though of comparatively recent organization, is performing invaluable work toward the creation of a consistent military policy for the Nation and the organization of an efficient and economical Army. If, as I believe to be the case, this bill would make necessary the reduction of the work of the War College, harm would be done to our military establishment which would be well-nigh incalculable.

Third. By the provisions of the bill which limit the period during which an officer may remain upon detached service or staff duty the organized personnel of many of the most important bureaus and corps of the War Department and military establishment will be disintegrated, and the work now proceeding under them will be seriously impeded. While these provisions aim at a wise purpose and one which my administration has sought to carry out by Executive action with especial thoroughness, the enactments of this bill are deemed too radical and drastic. By removing at once all of the officers of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, except its chief, they would seriously interfere with the work of that most important bureau in administering the affairs of our insular possessions. Again, they would, on January 1, 1913, relieve all of the officers now assigned to the Philippine Constabulary. Earnest protest has been received from the insular government of the Philippines to the effect that so prompt a relief of all of the officers who have had the especial training and experience necessary for these positions would be disastrous to the morale and efficiency of that important body, and would be a serious handicap to the preservation of law and order in the Philippine Islands.

Again, the provision would at once relieve all but one of the line officers now on duty in the work of constructing the Panama Canal, and, under a very probable construction of the law, it would also relieve the Engineer officers and other staff officers detailed to that work. The organization of the force of officers and men by whom the canal is now being constructed has earned the admiration of the entire Nation. Under this organization that work is fast approaching its completion. The drastic character of the provision can be best understood when it is considered that it might at once relieve from duty the general purchasing officer of the Isthmian Commission, by whom all of the complicated machinery for the locks and gates is being purchased; the officer who is building the Gatun Dam and the spillway; the line officer who, as chief engineer, is relocating the Panama Railroad; the officer in charge of the construction of the new breakwater at Colon; and the medical officer under whose inspection the sanitary work of the zone is being conducted. It would be practically impossible to replace these men or the special knowledge and skill which they have in their departments of the work. The entire organization of the great work in which they are almost indispensable agents would be disintegrated and impaired.

The fact that a single provision of the bill can cause such serious consequences offers further evidence of the unwisdom of a method which deprives legislation of its usual safeguards of scrutiny and discussion.

Fourth. The second section of the bill lengthens the term of enlistment from three to four years. This change has been opposed by the recommendations of the President, the Secretary of War, and the General Staff of the Army. It will tend to make difficult or impossible the establishment of a proper reserve by which the Regular Army could, in time of emergency, be brought up to its full strength. In my opinion it is a step contrary to enlightened military policy.

Fifth. The provision appointing the commission above mentioned to report as to the policy of Army posts seeks to deprive the regularly constituted authorities of our military establishment of all voice in the formulation of one of the most important policies now confronting the Nation in the maintenance of its Regular Army. It devolves the leadership in that matter upon a number of officers now retired and who are no longer responsible in any way for the Army or its maintenance. The very fact that they are selected in the manner proposed by this bill, without the action of the President or the head of the War Department, tends inevitably to create a lack of cooperation between them and the War Department. I believe that the provision will obstruct rather than further the solution of a most important and difficult problem.

Sixth. It is urged that great savings in expenditures are effected by the bill. I have examined carefully its provisions and believe this contention to be unfounded. Thus an examination of the bill in comparison with the estimates shows that there will be a deficit in the pay of the Army alone of $2,262,937. I also find that the amount appropriated for the subsistence of the Army is $191,787 below the amount originally asked for in the estimates and over $900,000 below the amount which, owing to the subsequent rise in the cost of the ration and other causes, will actually be necessary. This simply means that to that extent the alleged economy is arrived at by a failure to appropriate over $3,000,000, which will become necessary to pay and support the Army before the end of the coming year.

Again, the appropriations for the Quartermaster's Department fall short of the estimates by $1,338,319. I find by inquiry that only a portion of this can be met by enforced economy. As to the remainder, the Quartermaster General must either fall back upon his supply of reserve stores or incur a deficiency.

The foregoing enumeration sufficiently sets out some of the grave objections to this bill and sufficiently indicate the reasons which make this method of legislation unwise and dangerous. The Army of the United States is far too vital an institution to the people of this country to be made the victim of hasty or imperfect theories of legislation. As was pointed out by the chairman of the Senate Military Committee in the passage quoted above, it is well known that the War College and the General Staff have been for many months engaged upon a comprehensive plan of Army reorganization. At the present time, therefore, it is especially inappropriate, in my opinion, to force upon the statute book legislation enacted without the usual deliberation and care. I can not conscientiously surrender the responsibility in shaping such laws with which I am vested under the Constitution.

I therefore return to your honorable body without my approval the said bill.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 17, 1912.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to refer the bill and accompanying message to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

USE OF TELEPHONES BY GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS (S. DOC. NO. 851).

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House another message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of the Congress a communication from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia inviting attention to section 7 of the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, with reference to the use of telephones by Government officials.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 15, 1912.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ALLOTTEES OF THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill S. 4948, on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, which was passed temporarily.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 4948) to amend an act approved May 27, 1908, entitled "An act for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes."

Be it enacted, etc., That section 9 of the act approved May 27, 1908, entitled "An act for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes," be amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "This section shall apply to the lands of all deceased allottees who died prior to the passage of this act," so that section 9 of the said act as amended will read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That the death of any allottee of the Five Civilized Tribes shall operate to remove all restrictions upon the alienation of said allottee's land: Provided, That no conveyance of any interest of any full-blood Indian heir in such land shall be valid unless approved by the court having jurisdiction of the settlement of the estate of said deceased allottee: Provided further, That if any member of the Five Civilized Tribes of one-half or more Indian blood shall die leaving issue surviving, born since March 4, 1906, the homestead of such deceased allottee shall remain inalienable, unless restrictions against alienation are removed therefrom by the Secretary of the Interior in the manner provided in section 1 hereof, for the use and support of such issue during their life or lives, until April 26, 1931; but if no such issue survive, then such allottee, if an adult, may dispose of his homestead by will free from all restrictions; if this be not done, or in the event the issue hereinbefore provided for die before April 26, 1931, the land shall then descend to the heirs according to the laws of descent and distribution of the State of Oklahoma, free from all restrictions: Provided further, That the provisions of section 23 of the act of April 26, 1906, as amended by this act, are hereby made applicable to all wills executed under this section. This section shall apply to the lands of all deceased allottees who died prior to the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the text of H. R. 22083 as reported by the House Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman want to substitute?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman wants to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert.

Mr. CARTER. I want to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the language of the text in H. R. 22083, as reported by the House Committee on Indian Affairs and as it just passed the House a few moments ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] moves to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill S. 4948 and substitute the language of the bill H. R. 22083 as it passed the House. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause in the bill S. 4948 and insert the following:

"That conveyances of inherited allotments by full-blood Indian heirs members of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma made subsequent to May 27, 1908, in cases of allottees dying prior to May 27, 1908, shall have the same effect as if the allottee had died subsequent to May 27, 1908, and shall not require the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows: "An act relating to inherited estates in the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to vacate the order by which the bill H. R. 22083 was passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which the bill H. R. 22083 was passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. CARTER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill as amended was passed was laid on the table.

IMMIGRATION STATION AT BALTIMORE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 20501) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to exchange the site heretofore acquired for a United States immigration station at Baltimore, Md., for another suitable site, and to pay, if necessary, out of the appropriation heretofore made for said immigration station an additional sum in accomplishing such exchange; or to sell the present site, the money procured from such sale to revert to the appropriation made for said immigration station, and to purchase another site in lieu thereof.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is in charge of the Committee on Buildings and Grounds, which has the call on next Calendar Wednesday. If the committee is willing to pass it over for the present. I shall not object.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that it be passed over.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MANEUVER CAMP AT ANNISTON, ALA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 322) authorizing the Secretary of War to accept the title to 4,000 acres of land in the vicinity of Anniston, in the State of Alabama, which certain citizens have offered to donate to the United States for the purpose of establishing a maneuver camp and for the maneuvering of troops, establishing and maintaining camps of instruction, for rifle and artillery ranges, and for mobilization and assembling of troops from the group of States composed of Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, and South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects, and it will be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON] desires to be heard, I will reserve my objection.

Mr. BLACKMON. I do not desire to be heard.

The SPEAKER. Then the resolution will be stricken from the calendar.

SALE OF CERTAIN LAND IN FOREST GROVE, OREG.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 18504) to provide for the sale of fractional block No. 6, in the town of Forest Grove, Oreg., no longer needed for school purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and to convey by patent in fee simple to the purchaser the fractional block No. 6, as designated and numbered on the recorded plat of Naylor's addition to the town of Forest Grove, Oreg.: Provided, That N. R. Wells, who has been occupying the tract, be permitted to remove the improvements made thereon by him and his family prior to the date fixed for the sale hereunder, and that the proceeds of sale be used for the benefit of the Salem Indian School.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] a question with reference to the statement made in the report from the Secretary of the Interior, in which he says—

Authority for its sale—

Referring to the land in question—is contained in sections 2122 and 2123 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, but as it is desirable that the proceeds of sale be made available for the use of the Salem Indian School, additional legislation is required.

I do not understand that the bill as reported to the House proposed to turn over the proceeds of the sale to the Indian school. What does the bill accomplish?

Mr. HAWLEY. The committee strikes out that provision. The bill accomplishes this: That inasmuch as N. R. Wells, an aged and decrepit man, went on the property at the direction of the department and has been occupying the tract and placed on it buildings of his own, in case the land is sold he shall have the right to remove his buildings.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read the committee amendment, as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the word "Oregon," in line 8, page 1, and lines 1, 2, and 3, page 2, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That such sale shall be made on condition that N. R. Wells, who has been occupying the tract, be permitted to remove within 60 days from the date of the sale hereunder all improvements made on said lot by him or his family, and that the proceeds of sale be covered into the Treasury of the United States."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COMPENSATION FOR SUPERINTENDENTS OF NATIONAL CEMETERIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 1739) to amend section 4875 of the Revised Statutes, to provide a compensation for superintendents of national cemeteries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if this bill does anything except to increase a man's salary?

Mr. BURNETT. Nothing except to increase the salary of the superintendent at Arlington. It is now $75 a month, and the recommendations of the War Department show that it is a much larger cemetery than the others, and there are many more burials, and several hundred acres of land have to be taken care of, and the increase of $25 per month is deemed to be a reasonable increase.

Mr. MANN. The present superintendent now receives $75 a month and quarters and fuel, and the bill proposes to increase his salary by $25 a month, with quarters and fuel. I call the gentleman's attention to it for the purpose of reminding our friends on the other side that they stated heretofore that no salary would be increased under unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Alabama how long this man has held this position at $75 a month?

Mr. BURNETT. For several years; quite a number of years. I do not remember the exact number.

Mr. FOSTER. What is his particular duty over there?

Mr. BURNETT. Well, I will read a report made by my colleague, Mr. DENT, from the Military Committee, containing a report from the War Department, in which this statement is made:

Favorable action of the Congress on this bill is recommended. The cemetery at Arlington, Va., is the largest and most important of any of the national cemeteries in the United States; the duties and responsibilities of the superintendent of that cemetery are much greater than those of any other by reason of its prominent location near the seat of the National Government and because of the large number of persons, including officials of high rank, with whom he is daily brought in contact; these duties require a man of considerable tact and good address, as well as one who is sufficiently well educated to keep the important records of the cemetery and conduct the correspondence connected therewith in a businesslike manner.

In a former report, made at the second session of the Sixty-first Congress, Mr. YOUNG of Michigan, a member of the committee, compiled these facts:

At the present time there are 408 acres inclosed by a brick wall and 48 acres that are not surrounded with a wall. The interments number 21,774. The number of men employed range from 30 in winter to 100 in summer. Ten mules and 2 horses are required to keep the place in order. The superintendent is responsible for the mules and horses, 25 mowers, 19 vehicles, such as carts, wagons, etc.

The expenditure on account of labor and for running expenses pertaining to the work is between $15,000 and $20,000 per annum; total for all, about $30,000 per annum.

One can therefore see that the duties of the superintendent at this station have greatly increased, as well as his responsibility. He must attend to all funerals, lay out graves, inspect all foundations for monuments and see that they are properly built, show lots to officers, keep a full record of interments, lot assignments, 13 books of entry, and 2 sets of index cards. He is responsible for every dollar's worth of property on the place, and is obliged to make good all losses.

Every employee has had an advance in pay, except the superintendent. The per diem men, from $1 to $1.50 per day; the monthly men 30 per cent additional pay; the landscape gardener's salary has been increased from $60 per month to $150 per month, and although 46 years have elapsed since this cemetery was established, the superintendent still receives the small amount of $75 per month.

The several colored watchmen at the cemetery, who only work 8 hours in the 24, receive $50 and $60 per month. Among the superintendent's responsibilities is the care of all outbuildings, which consist of 3 large stables, 3 sheds for wagons, tools, etc.; 7 buildings, 1 greenhouse 200 feet long, 1 large hothouse, gatekeeper's house, and the care of 7 entrances with large double gates that have to be opened and closed at certain hours.

The interments during the last year have averaged about 50 per month, and the superintendent is supposed to attend and be present at every burial.

There are two foremen under the superintendent that receive $60 per month.

It is also the duty of the superintendent to look after and take charge of the painting of all buildings, the auditorium, temple of fame, entrance gates, etc.

Let me also read this, for the information of the House:

List of first-class national cemeteries, showing their area and number of interments in each from June 30, 1906, to June 30, 1910, as shown by records in office of the Quartermaster General, United States Army, Washington, D. C.

From this it will be seen that the number of interments annually at Arlington is many times the number at any other national cemetery in the United States, and yet the superintendents in the others receive $60 per month, while this man, with all his extra responsibility and extra work, receives only $75 per month.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I take it that if we increase this man's salary from $75 a month to $100 a month, all the other superintendents of national cemeteries will be here at the next session of Congress asking that their salaries be increased also. And while it is true that this man's duties are numerous, yet it seems to me, from the reading of the bill and report, that possibly next year he will want an assistant and possibly two assistants—and so it will go. So I hope the gentleman will let this matter go over for the present.

Mr. BURNETT. I will state to the gentleman, if he will permit, that the present superintendent has been there for several years and has not asked for any assistants. Not only that, this bill was unanimously reported and passed in the Sixty-first Congress by the House and went to the Senate, and there died for want of time for consideration. I have made some personal investigation in relation to this matter. The way I became interested in it was that I was visiting Arlington one day and I saw the work that was done by this man, and I asked him what the amount of his salary was; and I was astonished to find that, with all the responsibilities and duties devolving upon him, he only got $75 a month.

Mr. FOSTER. Has this man any other income from the Government?

Mr. BURNETT. I believe he has a small pension. He was a Union soldier and draws a small pension.

Mr. FOSTER. How old a man is he?

Mr. BURNETT. It is Mr. Magoon, a brother of the former governor general of Cuba. I think he is about 68 years of age.

Mr. FOSTER. I suggest to the gentleman that he let the matter go over, in order that I may look into it a little further.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REPAIR AND ALTERATION OF BRIDGES IN THE STATE OF ARKANSAS.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6479) to authorize the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Co. to repair, alter, or rebuild certain bridges in the State of Arkansas.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri as the successor in interest of the Texas & St. Louis Railway Co., a corporation organized under the laws of Missouri and Arkansas and heretofore duly authorized by act of Congress approved June 27, 1882, to construct, maintain, and operate bridges across the White, Arkansas, Saline, Ouachita, and Red Rivers in the State of Arkansas, be, and it is hereby, authorized to alter, repair, or rebuild the bridges on its line of railroad across the White, Arkansas, Saline, Ouachita, and Red Rivers in the State of Arkansas. This authority is, in all respects, to be exercised subject to and in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges on navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906; and whenever the provisions of said act approved June 27, 1882, differ from or are inconsistent with the provisions of said act approved March 23, 1906, and this act, the same are hereby repealed: Provided, That this act shall not be construed as legalizing the construction nor as authorizing the reconstruction of the bridge across Saline River as it now exists, but in rebuilding said bridge such changes shall be made therein as the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers may deem necessary and order in the interest of navigation.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CULLOP, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALE OF FEDERAL BUILDING AND SITE AT OWENSBORO, KY.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 1718) providing for the old Federal building and site at Owensboro, Ky.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in his discretion, to sell and convey the old Federal building and the site thereof at Owensboro, Ky., at such time and on such terms as he may deem to be to the best interests of the United States, and to deposit the proceeds in the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

FORT COVINGTON, N. Y., SUBPORT OF ENTRY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 21963) making Fort Covington, N. Y., a subport of entry.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Fort Covington, in the State of New York, be, and is hereby, constituted a subport of entry in the customs collection district of Champlain, State of New York, and that the privileges of the first section of the act approved June 10, 1880, relating to the transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, be, and the same are hereby, extended to said subport.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill——

Mr. MANN. I am not in charge of the bill, but the gentleman from New York asked me to make a statement when the bill came up.

Mr. FOSTER. I will ask if this will entail any additional expense on the Government?

Mr. MANN. It may entail a slight expense, but very little. The purpose is to permit the New York Central Railroad, which now brings a large amount of freight from Canada, to bring it by the way of Fort Covington instead of by way of Malone, it being much more expensive, the freight rates being considerably higher by the way of Malone on account of the high grades. The expense will be trifling, and the freight will come through in bond.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the change in traffic routes that is spoken of in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. DALZELL. The bill, I will say to the gentleman, has the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and was reported unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. FOSTER. I observe that, but I wanted to know about the additional expense.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

OWL CREEK COAL CO., WYOMING.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 100) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the continuation of coal mining operations on certain lands in Wyoming.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk read the substitute in lieu of the original joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That all pending homestead entries made in good faith prior to September 1, 1911, under the provisions of the enlarged homestead laws, by persons who, before making such enlarged homestead entry, had acquired title to a technical quarter section of land under the homestead law, and therefore were not qualified to make an enlarged homestead entry, be, and the same are hereby, validated, if in all other respects regular, in all cases where the original homestead entry was for less than 160 acres of land."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask some questions of the author of the joint resolution, in order to get some information concerning it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is in charge of the resolution. He has been called out of town and he left me some memoranda in respect to it.

Mr. CULLOP. Then, I suppose I can ask the gentleman from Illinois. What is the purpose of extending this right to mine coal?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this company had, as I understand, a claim to some coal lands which are in dispute, and the suit had not yet been settled by the Department of the Interior. Pending that dispute the court in Wyoming entered an order to permit the company to continue its mining operations under certain terms upon the payment of certain royalty, the money to be retained until the final settlement of the case.

If the matter should be settled in favor of the Government, the money will go to the Government, otherwise to the company. It is expected that the matter will be disposed of by the department during this year. If it should be disposed of adversely to the company, the mine would be closed, and the purpose of this joint resolution is to permit the continued operation of the mine until Congress shall have a chance to dispose of the matter hereafter, reserving the royalty to the Government in case the matter is settled against the company.

Mr. CULLOP. What is the royalty the company is now paying for the mining of this coal?

Mr. MANN. Six and one-half cents a ton, I believe.

Mr. CULLOP. Is there any other portion of the fund arising from the operation of the mine to be retained by the court other than the royalty?

Mr. MANN. I think not, but I am not sure about that.

Mr. CULLOP. Supposing the suit is decided in favor of the Government, against the company, then what will become of the value of the property the company has taken?

Mr. MANN. The property will become the property of the Government, and the only property which the company will have taken will be the coal, and that they pay for.

Mr. CULLOP. They pay a royalty for it?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. But what will become of the proceeds arising from the sale of the coal other than the royalty that is to be paid?

Mr. MANN. Of course that belongs to the company. They pay the royalty.

Mr. CULLOP. That is the very dispute in this suit, is it not? That is the matter in dispute, as to whether they have the right to mine that coal.

Mr. MANN. That is correct; but when they settled the royalty, which is now 6½ cents a ton and which very likely will be raised if this resolution passes, that fixed full compensation to the Government. This is a mere temporary matter. This company has a mine, and there is no other mine anywhere near it. The company has employed about 200 miners. Of course, if the mine is closed, those miners are thrown out of work.

Mr. CULLOP. If the mine is closed, the property will be saved to the Government until the matter in litigation is settled.

Mr. MANN. It is not a matter in litigation, I will say to the gentleman. The property is saved to the Government in any event. If the Government is right in its contention, it is a matter for settlement by the Department of the Interior, as I understand it. What the court did was to permit the mining to go ahead under an agreement entered into in court that there should be so much royalty set aside and placed in the hands of the Government, to be retained by the Government if the final determination should be in favor of the Government. The Government, therefore, is fully protected.

Mr. CULLOP. Is that the customary royalty in that section of country?

Mr. MANN. That is a very high royalty, I will say to the gentleman. This is the only mine there.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, the royalty that is fixed by the court is 6½ cents a ton. The substitute resolution permits the Secretary to increase that amount or lower it, as the conditions may warrant. If the gentleman will notice the substitute, it gives the Secretary full power to adjudicate this matter until such time as Congress can arrive at a just conclusion about it and act in the premises. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has stated it precisely as it is. I merely want to amplify one or two things that he stated.

As the bill came to the committee I felt rather opposed to it, but we brought in a substitute consisting of a very few lines, and that does precisely what I think ought to be done. The litigation over those claims will in all probability be decided before the Congress convenes in December next, and we thought it would certainly be a bad idea to close the mine down and throw the men out of employment, the property itself reverting in its entirety to the Government of the United States. The company has made valuable improvements there, so that the Government is amply fortified, and the Government will get the royalty, such royalty as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. I think the Government is doubly fortified.

Mr. FOSTER. Also, the order of the court, or the agreement entered into in court, permits the Government to go upon this property, examine it, and check up the weights and do whatever is necessary to see that the contract is being carried out.

Mr. CULLOP. I know that the royalty in mining claims out in some of the Western States is very much higher than 6½ cents a ton. That was the reason I made the inquiry. It occurred to me that this was unreasonably low for that section of the country.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the gentleman that the passage of this joint resolution does not involve the amount of royalty to be charged. Six and one-half cents per ton was fixed by the court, and that will terminate when the litigation terminates. Then the Secretary may step in and demand such royalty as he sees fit. The gentleman will notice that the language of the substitute provides for that:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow the Owl Creek Coal Co. to continue the operation of the mine or mines upon any of the lands embraced in Lander, Wyo., coal entries Nos. 18 to 49, inclusive, until July 1, 1913, upon such conditions and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

It gives the Secretary full latitude. There can no harm or loss to the Government come from it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I might add that this is said to be a very wet mine, and if closed it will very soon fill with water and greatly deteriorate.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This joint resolution is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the resolution in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the amended Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

VALIDITY OF CERTAIN HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 21826) validating certain homestead entries.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all pending homestead entries made prior to September 1, 1911, under the provisions of the act of February 19, 1909, by persons who, before making such entries, had acquired title to less than 160 acres of land under the homestead laws, be, and the same are hereby, validated: Provided, That said entries are in other respects in conformity with the homestead laws.

With the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That all pending homestead entries made in good faith prior to September 1, 1911, under the provisions of the enlarged homestead laws, by persons who, before making such enlarged homestead entry, had acquired title to a technical quarter section of land under the homestead law, and therefore were not qualified to make an enlarged homestead entry, be, and the same are hereby, validated, if in all other respects regular, in all cases where the original homestead entry was for less than 160 acres of land."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to make some inquiries about the bill. To what class of persons is this intended to apply, and about how many of them are there?

Mr. PRAY. Mr. Speaker, I know positively of about 18 or 20 persons at the present time who would come within the scope of this law. There are, of course, others who would be affected by this legislation, but I have not got definite information as to the number.

Mr. CULLOP. Those were persons who have already purchased certain portions of land?

Mr. PRAY. No. These were persons who had previously acquired title to a homestead of less than 160 acres of land under the homestead laws. After the passage of the enlarged-homestead law they were advised that they could acquire title under that act to a second homestead. They accordingly filed upon lands. Their applications were accepted at the land office. In view of the wording of the statute in the act of February 19, 1909, concerning the qualifications of persons who might apply to enter lands under this act, the General Land Office, in effect, held that those who had perfected entry under the homestead laws to less than 160 acres would be entitled to make another homestead entry under the act of February 19, 1909. Consequently, these second entries were held to be valid. Two years later, or about two years later, in July, 1911, in what is known as the Storaasli case, the Secretary of the Interior held these entries for cancellation. In the meantime the entrymen had gone upon their lands, resided upon them, improved them, and had otherwise complied with the requirements of the homestead law.

Mr. CULLOP. Were they still holding the first piece they had homesteaded, or had they disposed of that?

Mr. PRAY. I suppose they had disposed of them some time before. I am unable to inform the gentleman as to what had become of each of the original entries.

Mr. CULLOP. By sale or by forfeit, or how?

Mr. PRAY. I do not know. I have no information in respect to that.

Mr. CULLOP. By whom were they advised that they had a right to homestead under the provisions of which the gentleman speaks? Was it by some private individual whom they consulted, or by some officer of the Government?

Mr. PRAY. They were advised by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. He held that their entries were valid, and the wording of the law itself would indicate that such applications would be received and would be held valid. This matter is fully covered in the report from the Interior Department, which is incorporated in the committee report on the bill.

Mr. CULLOP. But in the first instance, in regard to homesteading this property, did they get their advice from some individual or from some officer connected with the Government?

Mr. PRAY. As I stated to the gentleman, the Commissioner of the General Land Office held they could do this; that these applications would be accepted and held valid. The information upon which the entrymen relied came from the commissioner; otherwise they would have gone ahead in the improvement of their claims.

Mr. CULLOP. I understand that, but he made this holding after they had made the settlement?

Mr. PRAY. No; before they had made settlement and improvement of their claims; at the time they made application to enter the lands.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, they made their improvements before the last holding of invalidity some two years before. If I understand the law—and I want to know whether my understanding is correct—under the enlarged homestead law anyone who had obtained a homestead of less than 160 acres might take an additional tract of land.

Mr. FERRIS. That is the ruling.

Mr. MANN. That is the law now. Some people who had taken title to four forties by a description where the four forties contained less than 160 acres in fact claimed the right or were allowed the right to take additional land.

Mr. CULLOP. A fractional survey.

Mr. MANN. They were not fractional surveys, but they contained less than 40 acres.

Mr. CULLOP. That is what is called a fraction.

Mr. MANN. Then afterwards the department held that a man who had taken a quarter section by description, the northwest quarter of a northwest quarter, was charged with 40 acres regardless of the number that was in it; or if he had taken four forties, his charge was 160 acres, and that prevented him taking an additional tract under the enlarged homestead law; and this bill is designed only to allow those people for that additional grant where, in fact, the land that they had taken before was less than 140 acres, and they had taken under a description which was supposed to cover 160 acres. When the matter was up here before I said to the gentleman from Montana I would not consent to have the bill passed by unanimous consent unless it received an approval from the department, and he has furnished a letter to that effect, which he can give to the gentleman.

Mr. CULLOP. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, in line 5 the word "technical" is used there, "technical quarter section." I presume that means a fractional quarter section.

Mr. MANN. That means the description, the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of a section is technically 40 acres. That is the description. If it contained less than 40 acres, in fact, the department held that a man might take an additional amount under the enlarged homestead law and then afterwards they held that the description was conclusive that it did contain 40 acres.

Mr. CULLOP. If it was less than 40 acres it would be a fractional quarter.

Mr. MANN. It might not be described as fractional.

Mr. CULLOP. Now, I understand this bill is only to let the homesteader make up the difference between what his original homestead was short by either taking an additional 160 acres of land——

Mr. MANN. No; the rule in reference to the taking of additional land under the enlarged homestead law only gives that right if he had taken under certain conditions less than 160 acres, and if this bill passes it confirms the title to these people in their additional 160 acres of land under the enlarged homestead law. Of course, it is not applicable where the land is very good, probably a detriment to the people who get it. I ask unanimous consent, in connection with the bill, to insert the letter from the Secretary, written to the gentleman from Montana.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 31, 1912.

Hon. CHARLES N. PRAY,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of May 25, 1912, inclosing a copy of H. R. 21826 as amended by the House Committee on Public Lands and asking whether the bill as amended is satisfactory to the department.

The purpose of the measure is remedial, designed to validate certain homestead entries made under the so-called enlarged homestead act by persons who had theretofore entered a technical quarter section of land under the general homestead law of less area than 160 acres, but which was held by decision of this department in the case of Saavi Storaasli, July 18, 1911, exhausted the homestead right.

March 18, 1912, the Acting Secretary advised you that the department would offer no objection to the enactment of legislation validating entries now pending and allowed prior to receipt of "notice of the Storaasli decision at the various local land offices (say Sept. 1, 1911) where no other objection is found to the legality of the entries."

The bill as amended by the Committee on Public Lands reads as follows:

"That all pending homestead entries made in good faith prior to September 1, 1911, under the provisions of the enlarged homestead laws by persons who before making such enlarged homestead entry had acquired title to a technical quarter section of land under the homestead law and therefore were not qualified to make an enlarged homestead entry be, and the same are hereby, validated if in all other respects regular in all cases where the original homestead entry was for less than 160 acres of land."

The department has no objection to the measure as amended by the Committee on Public Lands.

Very respectfully,

SAMUEL ADAMS,
First Assistant Secretary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"That all pending homestead entries made in good faith prior to September 1, 1911, under the provisions of the enlarged homestead laws, by persons who, before making such enlarged homestead entry, had acquired title to a technical quarter section of land under the homestead law, and therefore were not qualified to make an enlarged homestead entry, be, and the same are hereby, validated, if in all other respects regular, in all cases where the original homestead entry was for less than 160 acres of land."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PRAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MOTION-PICTURE COPYRIGHTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 24224) to amend sections 5, 11, and 25 of an act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyrights," approved March 4, 1909.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 5, 11, and 25 of the act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyrights," approved March 4, 1909, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That the application for registration shall specify to which of the following classes the work in which copyright is claimed belongs:

"(a) Books, including composite and cyclopedic works, directories, gazetteers, and other compilations;
"(b) Periodicals, including newspapers;
"(c) Lectures, sermons, addresses (prepared for oral delivery);
"(d) Dramatic or dramatico-musical compositions;
"(e) Musical compositions;
"(f) Maps;
"(g) Works of art; models or designs for works of art;
"(h) Reproductions of a work of art;
"(i) Drawings or plastic works of a scientific or technical character;
"(j) Photographs;
"(k) Prints and pictorial illustrations;
"(l) Motion-picture photoplays;
"(m) Motion pictures other than photoplays;

"Provided, nevertheless, That the above specifications shall not be held to limit the subject matter of copyright as defined in section 4 of this act, nor shall any error in classification invalidate or impair the copyright protection secured under this act."

"SEC. 11. That copyright may also be had of the works of an author, of which copies are not reproduced for sale, by the deposit, with claim of copyright, of one complete copy of such work if it be a lecture or similar production or a dramatic, musical, or dramatico-musical composition; of a title and description, with one print taken from each scene or act, if the work be a motion-picture photoplay; of a photographic print if the work be a photograph; of a title and description, with not less than two prints taken from different sections of a complete motion picture, if the work be a motion picture other than a photoplay; or of a photograph or other identifying reproduction thereof, if it be a work of art or a plastic work or drawing. But the privilege of registration of copyright secured hereunder shall not exempt the copyright proprietor from the deposit of copies, under sections 12 and 13 of this act, where the work is later reproduced in copies for sale."

"SEC. 25. That if any person shall infringe the copyright in any work protected under the copyright laws of the United States such person shall be liable:

"(a) To an injunction restraining such infringement;

"(b) To pay to the copyright proprietor such damages as the copyright proprietor may have suffered due to the infringement, as well as all the profits which the infringer shall have made from such infringement, and in proving profits the plaintiff shall be required to prove sales only and the defendant shall be required to prove every element of cost which he claims, or in lieu of actual damages and profits such damages as to the court shall appear to be just, and in assessing such damages the court may, in its discretion, allow the amounts as hereinafter stated, but in case of a newspaper reproduction of a copyrighted photograph such damages shall not exceed the sum of $200 nor be less than the sum of $50, and in the case of the infringement of an undramatized or nondramatic work by means of motion pictures, where the infringer shall show that he was not aware that he was infringing, and that such infringement could not have been reasonably foreseen, such damages shall not exceed the sum of $100 nor be less than the sum of $50; and in the case of an infringement of a copyrighted dramatic or dramatico-musical work by a maker of motion pictures and his agencies for distribution thereof to exhibitors, where such infringer shows that he was not aware that he was infringing a copyrighted work, and that such infringements could not reasonably have been foreseen, the entire sum of such damages recoverable by the copyright proprietor from such infringing maker and his agencies for the distribution to exhibitors of such infringing motion picture shall not exceed the sum of $5,000 nor be less than $250, and such damages shall in no other case exceed the sum of $5,000 nor be less than the sum of $250, and shall not be regarded as a penalty. But the foregoing exceptions shall not deprive the copyright proprietor of any other remedy given him under this law, nor shall the limitation as to the amount of recovery apply to infringements occurring after the actual notice to a defendant, either by service of process in a suit or other written notice served upon him.

"First. In the case of a painting, statue, or sculpture, $10 for every infringing copy made or sold by or found in the possession of the infringer or his agents or employees.

"Second. In the case of any work enumerated in section 5 of this act, except a painting, statue, or sculpture, $1 for every infringing copy made or sold by or found in the possession of the infringer or his agents or employees.

"Third. In the case of a lecture, sermon, or address, $50 for every infringing delivery.

"Fourth. In the case of a dramatic or dramatico-musical or a choral or orchestral composition, $100 for the first and $50 for every subsequent infringing performance; in the case of other musical compositions, $10 for every infringing performance.

"(c) To deliver up on oath, to be impounded during the pendency of the action, upon such terms and conditions as the court may prescribe, all articles alleged to infringe a copyright.

"(d) To deliver up on oath for destruction all the infringing copies or devices, as well as all plates, molds, matrices, or other means for making such infringing copies as the court may order.

"(e) Whenever the owner of a musical copyright has used or permitted the use of the copyrighted work upon the parts of musical instruments serving to reproduce mechanically the musical work, then in case of infringement of such copyright by the unauthorized manufacture, use, or sale of interchangeable parts, such as disks, rolls, bands, or cylinders for use in mechanical music-producing machines adapted to reproduce the copyrighted music, no criminal action shall be brought, but in a civil action an injunction may be granted upon such terms as the court may impose, and the plaintiff shall be entitled to recover in lieu of profits and damages a royalty as provided in section 1, subsection (e), of this act: Provided also, That whenever any person, in the absence of a license agreement, intends to use a copyrighted musical composition upon the parts of instruments serving to reproduce mechanically the musical work, relying upon the compulsory license provision of this act, he shall serve notice of such intention, by registered mail, upon the copyright proprietor at his last address disclosed by the records of the copyright office, sending to the copyright office a duplicate of such notice; and in case of his failure so to do the court may, in its discretion, in addition to sums hereinabove mentioned, award the complainant a further sum, not to exceed three times the amount provided by section 1, subsection (e), by way of damages, and not as a penalty, and also a temporary injunction until the full award is paid.

"Rules and regulations for practice and procedure under this section shall be prescribed by the Supreme Court of the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to state briefly for those of us who do not happen to have a copy of the present law before us, just what change this amendment contemplates?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The bill as read by the Clerk is an exact reproduction of the present law, with the exception of sections 5 and 11. The amendments in section 5 merely add as copyrightable matter motion-picture photoplays and motion pictures other than photoplays.

Mr. TILSON. Those are the only two additions?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Absolutely. Otherwise the section is identical with the present law. The amendments to section 11 are intended to change the law in this respect: At present an infringement by a motion-picture maker of a copyright story made into a motion play would subject the infringer, even though he were innocent, to a penalty of $100 fine for the first reproduction and $50 for each subsequent reproduction. The motion-picture makers produce in duplicate of each play about 50 reels or films. They are played in these little theaters from four to eight times a day. A very simple calculation will show the gentleman that at that rate of penalty the motion-picture playmakers would soon be put out of the business. This law provides that the infringement of the copyright of a play—as ordinarily understood—in the case of innocent infringement and where the infringer shows that by no reasonable precaution could he have avoided the infringement of the copyright, a maximum penalty of $5,000. But the copyright holder does not lose any of his other rights as the law at present reads. There is another provision in the amendment which permits, in the case of an infringement of what is termed here a "nondramatic production," the recovery of a maximum of $100 and a minimum of $50 damages where the infringer shows he was innocent and by no reasonable precaution could have known of the copyright. That is to cover, I will explain to the gentleman, in such a case as this: A great majority of these motion-picture plays are based on scenarios sent in to the manufacturers from all over the country. They take all the precaution they can think of to avoid infringing a copyright. The large makers have practically what in a newspaper office is called an exchange desk; yet from some remote town, in an inconsequential paper, a good story might be written and copyrighted and turned into a scenario and innocently accepted.

Mr. BATHRICK. I notice in the case you have cited that a motion-picture owner, in the event of an infringement where he is innocent of knowledge of that infringement, the customary recovery would be $5,000 and the minimum $250. Do you not think such a recovery from the average proprietor of a moving-picture show would be absolutely prohibitive and put him out of business?

Mr. TOWNSEND. No action would be brought against the owner of a theater. The action would be brought against the companies manufacturing the films. They are responsible corporations or companies.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The Edison Co. is one of the largest manufacturers, is it not?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALEXANDER. All these manufacturers are companies of large financial responsibility?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, yes, indeed.

Mr. ALEXANDER. And able to respond in damages for any infringement?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Quite so.

Mr. BATHRICK. Under the provisions of this law, is it possible to enter action against the exhibitor?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It would be possible, but a very much more responsible person or company being back of the exhibitor, the proceeding would be naturally against the party from whom it would be possible to recover damages.

Mr. BATHRICK. You have received communications from the picture-show people?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; and favorable to the bill as it is presented now.

Mr. BATHRICK. And this is what they desire?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Absolutely.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SULZER). Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has referred to the amendment to section 5, covering the law about sheet pictures. He did not, I think, refer to section 11, covering dramatico-musical compositions?

Mr. TOWNSEND. No.

Mr. MANN. There has been at different times considerable controversy with reference to the copyright on musical reproductions. What effect will this change have on that, if any?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It enlarges the scope embraced within that classification. Heretofore, I believe, the classification has been "dramatic or musical productions." There is now recognized, I think, in the theatrical world a third class of performances, commonly known as "dramatico-musical." This amendment makes the manufacturers of motion pictures or other infringers of copyright liable in the case of the infringement of a dramatic or musical or dramatico-musical performance.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me to ask him about the form of his bill, I would suggest that, on page 4, under section 25, as I understand, the language beginning after the word "dollars" in line 2 down to and including the word "dollars" in line 19 is new matter.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is new matter.

Mr. MANN. That provides that under certain conditions where the infringement—could not reasonably have been foreseen, the entire sum of such damages recoverable by the copyright proprietor from such infringing maker and his agencies for the distribution to exhibitors of such infringing motion pictures shall not exceed the sum of $5,000 nor be less than $250.

Then follows the language of the existing law, covering precisely the same thing:

And such damages shall in no other case exceed the sum of $5,000 nor be less than the sum of $250.

What is the object of inserting that under certain conditions the damages shall not be over $5,000 nor less than $250, when you have a general provision that in no other case shall the damages be more than $5,000 nor less than $250?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I should like to have Judge ALEXANDER answer that question. That requires a lawyer.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Of course the dramatist has his remedy by injunction also. He may have his remedy by suit for infringement.

Mr. MANN. I do not think the gentleman caught my question.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am a member of the committee, and I was present at the hearings.

Mr. MANN. The proposition is that the damages shall not exceed $5,000 or be less than $250. That is followed by a provision that in all cases the damages shall not exceed $5,000 or be less than $250. Having provided that in no case can the damages be less than $250 or more than $5,000, why do you insert a provision that in a particular case that shall be the case?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, on the face of it, it looks like redundancy, to my mind.

Mr. MANN. I did not know but that there was a reason for it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The attorney and Augustus Thomas were there in person, representing the dramatist as his counsel, and the manufacturer of these films was present with his attorney, and various substitute bills were introduced, until finally a bill was framed that met the views of all the parties in interest. That was accepted by the committee, and it has been reported.

Mr. MANN. I apprehend, the committee having agreed upon a bill, having done such a thing in a technical matter, it would be highly proper to send it to the Commissioner of Patents for his examination. I suppose he would cut that part out.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will say to the gentleman that the register of copyrights attended a number of these hearings and was satisfied with the form of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Then he and the others were very easily satisfied.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New Jersey yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. I notice on page 4 of the bill there is a provision as to undramatized or nondramatic work produced by means of motion pictures that where the infringer can show that he was not aware that he was infringing, and such infringement could not have been reasonably foreseen, the damages shall not exceed $100 nor be less than $50. I should like to ask the gentleman why there should be any minimum of that kind imposed. Why should you fix a penalty of $50 arbitrarily where the infringer can show that he was not infringing consciously and could not reasonably have foreseen that he was?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will answer the gentleman by saying that, so far as the motion-picture makers are concerned, they would quite agree with the gentleman, but there appeared before the committee the representatives of the scenario writers. This is rather a new profession, growing rapidly, and they insisted, and the committee agreed that the insistence was just, that there should be some penalty attached to the infringement, even where it was innocent in such an immaterial thing as a scenario of some trifling sketch or story. The committee seemed to think that while the innocent infringer in such an immaterial matter should not be mulcted, as was demanded on the part of these companies, the committee granted it, and it is now satisfactory to all parties concerned.

Mr. BORLAND. As I understand, these films are produced by a few large companies—three or four?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, there are 11 licensed companies, and they are the responsible ones.

Mr. BORLAND. There is no doubt but that the 11 companies which actually make the films ought to have some means of knowing where they get the story out of which the films are made. But when the films are made they rent the films to a thousand little theaters all over the country, and one little theater will rent 40 or 50 in a week. They have absolutely no way of telling whether the story is an infringement of a copyright or not; it is absolutely beyond their power to know. They will produce the copyrighted film that they have innocently acquired and that they do not know is copyrighted 40 or 50 times a week in some theater, and you will put a penalty on them of a minimum of $50 on each production.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, no, no.

Mr. BORLAND. The only explanation the gentleman made was that the chances were that the owner of the copyright would pursue his remedy against the man or company who made the film, but as far as the law is concerned he would have the right to pursue the remedy against the motion theater proprietor who produced it, would he not?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The gentleman is mistaken. Under the present copyright law there could be a recovery for each production, but if this amendment passes, in the case of an innocent infringer there could be only one recovery of $100 or a minimum of $50.

Mr. BORLAND. For how many productions?

Mr. TOWNSEND. For the infringement. Of course, as soon as the manufacturer received ordinary notice that it was an infringement the film would have to be withdrawn or he would be subjected to all the pains and penalties as the law reads at present.

Mr. BORLAND. Let me understand. Suppose a picture theater proprietor has rented a film that contains an infringement of a copyright story. He produces it 40 times in one week, and then he is notified that he is an infringer. Do you say that there could only be one recovery of $50?

Mr. TOWNSEND. In case the court is convinced that the infringement was innocent and the infringer had taken all reasonable precautions, yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Where is that language?

Mr. MANN. On line 5, page 4, where it says "if he was not aware that he was infringing."

Mr. BORLAND. That does not say that the damages shall not apply to all previous infringements.

Mr. MANN. It says that in case of an infringement under these conditions the damages shall not exceed $100 nor be less than the sum of $50.

Mr. BORLAND. That is for the infringement, but each production of a copyrighted work is an infringement.

Mr. MANN. There is only one penalty.

Mr. BORLAND. Each exhibition of a copyrighted dramatic production is an infringement.

Mr. MANN. Not under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If the gentleman will permit me, the bill says:

> And in the case of an infringement of a copyrighted dramatic or dramatico-musical work by a maker of motion pictures and his agencies for distribution thereof to exhibitors, where such infringer shows that he was not aware that he was infringing a copyrighted work, and that such infringements could not reasonably have been foreseen, the entire sum of such damages recoverable by the copyright proprietor from such infringing maker and his agencies for the distribution to exhibitors of such infringing motion picture shall not exceed the sum of $5,000 nor be less than $250, and such damages shall in no other case exceed the sum of $5,000 nor be less than the sum of $250, and shall not be regarded as a penalty.

There can be only one recovery, and that language was left in there to protect the small producer of moving pictures.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] say that where there have been 40 or 50 reproductions of the same film there can only be one recovery for the entire 40 or 50 reproductions?

Mr. ALEXANDER. If it has been done innocently there can be only one recovery.

Mr. BORLAND. I can not read that meaning into the bill. Here is a film that has been sent to 100 moving-picture shows in the same town during the same week, because that is their custom. They will send it to one on Monday afternoon and another concern on Tuesday morning, to another on Tuesday afternoon and to another on Tuesday night. Suppose that in that way they have covered the rounds of 100 little theaters. There is a fine of $50 for each theater, even according to that construction of the law.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, no.

Mr. BORLAND. Which the fortunate owner of that infringed work can proceed against in each town. I can not see any reason for the minimum penalty. I can not see any reason for guaranteeing $50 for each infringement, regardless of the actual damage to the owner of the copyright.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I will call the gentleman's attention to the bill at page 5, on line 14, and I think he will then see that if it was the intention of the drafters of the bill to impose a fine for each exhibition or reproduction the language would have been inserted in the law. I read:

> Fourth. In the case of a dramatic or dramatico-musical or a choral or orchestral composition, $100 for the first and $50 for every subsequent infringing performance; in the case of other musical compositions, $10 for every infringing performance.

There is no such language in the amendment as the gentleman is discussing.

Mr. BORLAND. For each subsequent infringing performance.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. And the gentleman contends that the absence of that language on page 4 indicates that each infringing performance would be one infringement.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is the judgment of the committee.

Mr. BORLAND. Is that the decision of the court on this subject?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The decisions of the court are that the guilty infringer is punishable under the present law for each reproduction in the case of a play for each performance, and in the case of an opera for each infringing performance.

Mr. BORLAND. Is not that the law? Assuming that all the infringing performances might be included in one, it still remains true that each individual infringer will be subject to the penalty.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; not at all. The infringement is made by the manufacturer of the film.

Mr. BORLAND. Does not the infringement occur on the part of the exhibitor?

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the law intended that each performance should be a new and continuing infringement, I judge it would so state, as it has in the law I quoted.

Mr. BORLAND. I will assume that the law is that all of the infringements by one exhibitor may be included in one penalty. I do not believe that is the law, but I assume that for the purpose of argument. Suppose that 100 different men had produced this copyrighted film, A, B, and C; would they not be guilty of infringement, and one penalty would not cover all of the different circumstances?

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; they would be guilty under the law as it is now for reproductions or performances as the law states. The amendment which the committee seeks to have the House adopt makes the penalty attach to the infringement of the copyright, and that infringement is begun and completed when a copyrighted story is made into a scenario and produced in the film.

Mr. BORLAND. Would not the gentleman be willing to consent, then, that the penalty should apply against the man who made the film?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is the intention of the law.

Mr. BORLAND. And that the exhibitor should not be liable for an innocent infringement?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That was the understanding of lawyers on the committee.

Mr. BORLAND. Would the gentleman consent to an amendment of that character, that no right of action should lie against the exhibitor until notice is given?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Why, the attorneys representing all these parties were before the committee, and they were jealous of their rights.

Mr. BORLAND. Of course that does not dispense with the necessity of putting it in here.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It may be that the gentleman will be able to frame such an amendment that meets the difficulty he speaks of, but I doubt it.

Mr. BORLAND. Then, Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SULZER). Objection is heard, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

REMISSION OF PORTION OF CHINESE INDEMNITY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 137) to amend the joint resolution of May 25, 1908, providing for the remission of a portion of the Chinese indemnity.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer from the sum of $2,000,000 reserved from the "Chinese indemnity, 1900," by provisions of the joint resolution of May 25, 1908, and place to the credit of the fund for "defending suits in claims against the United States" such sums as the Attorney General may from time to time certify to said Secretary as having been expended under his authority and direction in defending claims of citizens of the United States against said Chinese indemnity fund in the Court of Claims of the United States, exclusive of salaries; also that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the credit of the said Court of Claims with the Public Printer, from the said reservation of $2,000,000, upon the certificate of the chief justice of the said court, such sums as the said court may have spent or shall hereafter spend for printing testimony in the trial of the said claims; and further that there shall be allowed as costs in the suits in which recoveries have been or may hereafter be had under the said joint resolution of May 25, 1908, such expenses of the claimants, including reasonable counsel fees, as the said Court of Claims may adjudge to be fair and just, and such costs so allowed shall be paid out of the said reserved sum of $2,000,000 by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the certificate of the said court: Provided, That applications for such costs shall be filed as supplementary motions in the said court by or on behalf of the persons who have recovered judgments under the said joint resolution, within three months from the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from New Jersey whether under this bill it would not provide that there should be paid counsel fees of claimants on cases that have already been disposed of? Would not the bill allow the payment of counsel fees on cases already disposed of?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It was the opinion of the committee that this resolution, if passed, would permit successful claimants to go before the Court of Claims and present a bill of costs to be allowed in the discretion of the court.

Mr. MANN. On cases which have been finally disposed of and the claims paid?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes. The equity of the claim appealed to the committee in this way: That these people have recovered from that indemnity fund various amounts, but those amounts have not been net amounts. They have been obliged to pay sometimes very large sums for the procuring of testimony and the bringing of witnesses here. In one case a large trading company found it necessary to send an official of the company to China and there make extensive investigations, and also to bring witnesses.

Mr. MANN. The same would be true if the claim had been brought against the Government of the United States, would it not?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I presume so. I am not a lawyer. If that is the gentleman's judgment, I will agree with it.

Mr. MANN. It does not require the services of a lawyer to know that when you bring a claim against the United States and try it in the Court of Claims you have to pay counsel fees and more or less expense in procuring testimony. If the gentleman has not had that much legal experience, I congratulate him.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I hope never to have, I assure the gentleman. I will say to the gentleman that the Government itself would be a beneficiary under the operation of this resolution, if passed. The Government defended that Chinese indemnity fund against the claimants, and itself was put to considerable expense, which it could recover from the remaining balance of the fund.

Mr. MANN. But the Government might have kept it all, if it wanted to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It did not care to, but it might like to recover what it has expended in defending the claims.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I rose to reserve the right to object, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] was recognized. I want to say a word on a different phase of this question. I consider it a very honorable and magnanimous act on the part of this Congress four years ago to have remitted ten or eleven million dollars of claims against China. We have been bragging about that ever since and congratulating ourselves on our generosity. Now, I desire to read one provision in that resolution. It is:

That the sum of $2,000,000—

Which were reserved to pay the claims—

be reserved from the Chinese indemnity of 1900 for the payment of such judgments, the same to be paid by the Treasurer of the United States, as and when they shall be certified to the Secretary of the Treasury by the said court, and any balances remaining after all such claims have been adjudicated and paid shall be returned to the Chinese Government in such manner as the Secretary of State shall decide, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to so return the same.

That is a clear-cut provision, reserving $2,000,000 to pay any and all claims which may be established by American citizens against China on account of the uprising in the Boxer movement, and to pay judgments recovered on such claims. There is no provision for anything else except to pay judgments. This resolution provides that in addition to the payment of these judgments the expenses in the Department of Justice shall be paid—expenses incurred in the defense of the claims—and also provides that the expense incurred in the Court of Claims for printing and miscellaneous expenses shall be paid. It also provides that counsel fees and expenses for attorneys prosecuting these claims in the Court of Claims shall be paid. I do not believe in doing an honorable thing and then spoiling it. It was a highly honorable and magnanimous act which we did, and we ought not to come down and revise that resolution now simply because there are $2,000,000 in our hands and we do not want to let it go back, according to the provisions of the resolution originally passed. According to the provisions of this resolution we are going to grab out of it for the Department of Justice a certain amount, then another bite for the expenses of printing in the Court of Claims, and another grab for attorneys, some of whom have closed up their cases and got their pay, and others of whom very likely have made agreements with the claimants for a certain percentage of the claim, and have never thought of getting any other counsel fees, because counsel fees are not awarded in the Court of Claims. I do not know that they are ever awarded. I have never known of any of them being awarded. This is something that has never been done, so far as I have known, since I have been here—awarding costs and counsel fees to attorneys in prosecuting claims in the Court of Claims. Because this money is here and because there is enough to pay it, they want to get this grab out of it, and thus spoil the magnanimous act that we have done.

And if the gentleman from Illinois does not object——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield? Is the gentleman familiar with the expression that is used by boys of "an Indian giver"?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Yes. It applies here, and I accept the suggestion.

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman does not believe in being an Indian giver.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. No. While I am willing to hear the gentleman from New Jersey upon——

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the gentleman is going to object, it is not necessary for me to make any further explanation in regard to a simple act of justice, for the objection will carry, no matter how eloquent my explanation may be.

Mr. MANN. This is one of several efforts that have been made for different claimants to extract the amount of this $2,000,000 indemnity fund which was retained by the Government to pay legitimate claims, which ought to have been returned to the Chinese Government before this time. It has been long enough ago to have all these things disposed of, but I think it is intentionally held back in order to let people try to pass bills like this. There are a number of others, but I think this is the worst one of the lot.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, in reply to that I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that his suspicion regarding at least the greater claimant in this case is entirely gratuitous, unfounded, and unjust. He represents a trading company which has been in operation in the Far East for 60 or 70 years, which began in Boston and now, I think, has its headquarters in New York. It is to-day selling many millions of dollars worth of southern cotton in China and Japan against competition of England and France.

Mr. MANN. And doing a profitable business, I take it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. And they were doing a profitable business until this war interruption came. They recovered damages through the Court of Claims against the indemnity fund, but in doing so they were put to very large expense for conducting their case.

Mr. MANN. And they were not satisfied with the damage they recovered and want the right to go into court and recover more.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Not at all; I do not look at it that way.

Mr. MANN. I do not mean this bill. They tried to get permission to go into the Court of Claims and file their claims, which were rejected——

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. And now they want to eat up this fund.

Mr. MANN. When they saw the two millions they did not want that to get away.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I object.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be stricken from the calendar.

AMENDING COPYRIGHT ACT.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, in regard to H. R. 24224 I desire to withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill, and the gentleman in charge of the bill consents to an amendment on line 8, page 4, by striking out the words "nor be less than the sum of $50."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objected to the present consideration of the bill H. R. 24224, and he and the gentleman from New Jersey, in charge of the bill, have come to an agreement that he will withdraw his objection provided the gentleman from New Jersey agrees to the amendment offered.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I accept the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know what the amendment is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 8, strike out the words "nor be less than the sum of $50."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to this bill being taken up again by unanimous consent? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 8, strike out the words "nor be less than the sum of $50."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

LITTLE RIVER DRAINAGE DISTRICT NO. 1, POTTAWATOMIE COUNTY, OKLA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4913) to enable the Indians allotted lands in severalty within the boundaries of Little River drainage district No. 1, in Pottawatomie County, Okla., to cooperate with the officials of said State in the protection of their lands from overflow, and for other purposes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the substitute be read in lieu of the bill, as it is very much shorter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the substitute be read in lieu of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to approve the assessments, together with maps showing right of way and definite location of proposed drainage ditches made under the laws of the State of Oklahoma upon the allotments of certain Absentee Shawnee and Citizen Pottawatomie allottees in Little River drainage district, in Pottawatomie County, Okla., and upon the allotments of certain Sac and Fox allottees in Deep Fork drainage districts, in Lincoln County, Okla.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to pay the amount assessed against each of said allotments: Provided, That said assessment shall not exceed $15 per acre on any allotment or portion thereof; and there is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $40,000, to be immediately available, the said sum to be reimbursable from the rentals of said allotments, not to exceed 50 per cent of the amount of rents received annually, or from any funds the said allottees may have in the United States Treasury, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to approve deeds for right of way from such said allottees or their heirs as may be necessary to permit the construction and maintenance of said drainage ditch upon the payment of adequate damages therefor.

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to approve the assessments upon all other redistricted allotments located within any proposed drainage district located and made under the laws of the State of Oklahoma.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BORLAND). Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire, if I may, what the point of difference between the House and Senate would be in case the Senate bill is passed striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the substitute bill?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, there are two well-defined differences. In the first place, this bill makes the Indian rentals and moneys pay the bill, whereas the Senate made a direct appropriation out of the Federal Treasury. That is one difference. The other difference is we add the county of Lincoln, which is adjoining Pottawatomie County, and the same stream flows through them and conditions are precisely the same, and the Secretary came before the committee and stated that the same conditions prevailed there.

Mr. MANN. I understand the main point of difference would be that under the Senate bill the expense would be paid outside of the General Treasury. Under the House bill it is proposed to have that expense paid by the Indians.

Mr. FERRIS. That is the main difference; yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Then I notice in the bill the provision or the appropriation of the sum of $40,000, to be immediately available, the said sum to be reimbursible from the rentals of said allotments, not to exceed 50 per cent of the amount of rents received annually, or from any funds the said allottees have in the United States Treasury. It being admitted that most of the allottees, or many of them, have no funds in the Treasury, does the gentleman say that they can afford to pay 50 per cent of the rentals and live on the other 50 per cent?

Mr. FERRIS. In the first place, the gentleman has assumed they have no money, which is not according to the facts.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the facts are. I only know what the report says. The Secretary of the Interior says they have no funds in the Treasury.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the gentleman will find that some of them have. They all have money and trust funds. But, answering the gentleman's question more specifically, we had better take half of the rents of these good lands, well protected from flood, than to take nothing at all, as the report says we would have to do in most cases in event there was no flood protection. In the spring, their lands flooding, they get little or nothing out of them. It is good potato land and alfalfa land and good agricultural land generally. It will yield good crops protected. It will yield good revenues protected. The land will be lost and destroyed unless protected.

Mr. MANN. It is all flooded in the spring?

Mr. FERRIS. It is. They usually have torrents of rain in April and May. That is true of dry countries generally. Because it is dry part of the year it does not follow that it does not need protection.

Mr. MANN. Has it been flooded in the last two or three years?

Mr. FERRIS. Each year in July and August we suffer from the drought for two or three years, but it rains and floods us almost every spring.

Mr. MANN. If the land is all flooded in the spring, it being high land, it would be impossible to drain it without great expense. I would like to ask, in reference to the statement of the superintendent referring to the payment by the Indians and requiring them to assume such burdens as would work a great hardship, how much money do you think, under these conditions, the Secretary of the Interior, having discretion, would take out of their rents to reimburse the Federal Treasury? About as much as they have taken out to reimburse the Federal Treasury for Indian depredations?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit, he quotes from a superintendent whose judgment I presume is——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman published it in his report, and I assume he would not have done it if he did not think it was right.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Giving the gentleman all the information he had.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. I want to read from the same report. I have no doubt the Indian agent, in an effort to protect his Indian wards, was saying what he could to get the Federal Government to protect these lands at their expense. I want to read from the report:

> A large part of the valley of Little River is, in its present state, almost worthless, except for pasturage, and I do not hesitate to say that the successful construction of the proposed ditch will very materially increase the value of the Indian lands coming within said drainage district. It is needless for me to add that in my judgment it is especially advisable that the Indian Bureau should cooperate with the State in such matters.

A part of the valley of the Little River is, in its present state, worthless.

Mr. MANN. Except for pasturage?

Mr. FERRIS. The land has been plowed up once. You can not have pasturage land where it has been plowed up. It requires a long time to resod it after it is once plowed.

Mr. MANN. What?

Mr. FERRIS. It will take him 10 years to resod it, and it would all wash away before that.

Mr. MANN. It will take about a year in our State.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman if, in all probability, the rental would not be increased by this improvement, so that one-half of it would be greater than the rental that is now received?

Mr. FERRIS. I think the gentleman has very forcibly stated it.

Mr. MANN. Does he want to provide that one-half of the rental shall be used to reimburse the Government?

Mr. FERRIS. It says that.

Mr. MANN. It provides that not exceeding 50 per cent.

Mr. FERRIS. It means that they shall put that in.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it means anything of the sort. I think it means the Senate proposes to pay the money out of the Treasury, and the House proposes reimbursement out of a fund where it would never be reimbursed to the extent of a dollar.

Mr. FERRIS. In the first place, most of them, nearly all of them, have money of their own. I have just called on the telephone a few moments ago to see how much they have. Shawnees have $6,000; Pottawatomies have $292,221.17; Sacs and Fox have $578,724.98. So, it will be observed, they not only have land but also money. This certainly magnifies the importance of this legislation to the Indians as well as to the whites.

We provide that these expenditures shall be reimbursed from the rentals and their trust funds; and I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that as the dead claims and unallotted claims and remnant claims are sold and administered the money is covered in.

What the gentleman says with respect to the Senate is true. They appropriate with a freer hand than we do. The House committee thought the Indian would get the benefit, and the Indian should pay for it. That was the feeling in the committee. To do otherwise would be to hold up the entire drainage district that our legislature recognized and provided for by law for the white people. Our legislature passed a drainage bill authorizing the county commissioners to let the white people associate themselves together and drain their lands. Interspersed among the white deeded lands are the Indian lands. When the drainage district is formed and the engineer comes along with his ditch and tries to complete his drainage system he runs into an Indian allotment. The State has no power to subject these allotments to any lien of any sort, or any right of way, or to do anything except as Congress permits. The Indian, of course, is without capacity to act, due to his Federal restriction. The thing that necessarily follows is that we must come here and ask the Federal Government to give these Indians permission to let these Indian lands be subjected to the charge and otherwise articulate with the State's drainage law, drainage district. The two of necessity must cooperate, must articulate, must act in conjunction, or the whole system fails. Surely neither should stand in the way of the other; surely both should act together, and all they need to do so is in this bill.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. What do the white people pay?

Mr. FERRIS. The white people pay precisely the same as the Indians would. This report says that the engineer has been fair. No advantage is sought. No advantage one over the other is obtained.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. How do they make payment?

Mr. FERRIS. They have the power to bond the deeded lands and pay for it. But with respect to Indian lands you can not do that. We are really traveling about the only avenue we can. There is no fee title to them in the Indians. Congress alone can help us out.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is traveling the way he ought to, to make these Indian lands pay the needed expense of improvement and drainage. But there is no reason in the world that I can see why the Government should pay out of the Federal Treasury the expense of adding to the value of the Indian lands. If the drainage district does not add to the value of the Indian lands, there is no reason why they should be compelled to pay. If it does add to the value of the Indian lands, the Government ought to have a lien on the lands for any money advanced to them.

The law provides that the Government shall pay Indian depredation claims out of the funds of the Indians. The law also provides that it shall first use the money available for the support of the Indians and taking care of the Indians, and under that the Secretary of the Interior pays no Indian depredation claims whatever out of Indian funds. I am not criticizing. It is perfectly proper. There is no reason why, if they can pay 50 per cent of the annual rentals on account of this, the Government should not retain a lien on the lands of the Indians until the advances made by the Government are paid.

Now, the gentleman has proposed in this bill legislation with reference to two drainage districts, and only to two drainage districts. That is what the original title of the bill refers to, and that is what the amended title of the bill refers to. But the essence of the bill has not been referred to yet on the floor. It says:

> That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to approve the assessments upon all other restricted allotments located within any proposed drainage district located and made under the laws of the State of Oklahoma.

Now, if we are going to undertake to let the State of Oklahoma make drainage districts wherever they please, and have the Indians pay assessments on their lands, there ought to be some provision to cover it.

Mr. FERRIS. The Secretary under this bill has full power and latitude to approve any estimate, or any charge, or any ditch, or any right of way. He has full and complete power.

Mr. MANN. He has not the power to make any assessments a lien upon the land. He has not the power to pay any money out of the Treasury that belongs to the Indians.

He has not the power under that provision to do anything except get us into a bad box, and he could do that readily enough.

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman undertake to say that under this act he has no authority to pay funds out of the Treasury?

Mr. MANN. For anything outside of these two drainage districts. In these two drainage districts the act gives him the authority.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This only applies to these specified Indians—

> Certain Absentee Shawnee and Citizen Pottawatomie allottees in Little River drainage district, in Pottawatomie County, Okla., and upon the allotments of certain Sac and Fox allottees in Deep Fork drainage districts, in Lincoln County, Okla.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman thinks that this bill only applies to these Indians?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is, the first section.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman thinks it does not apply to any other Indians or any other land?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The amended bill reported, under the first section, applies to these Indians. I think the gentleman from Illinois is wrong as to this amount not being reimbursable. The latter part of the section reads in this way:

The said sum to be reimbursable from the rentals of said allotments, not to exceed 50 per cent of the amount of rents received annually, or from any funds the said allottees may have in the United States Treasury, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

That makes it reimbursable, except the amount that may be paid out of the 50 per cent coming from rentals.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I can give the gentleman additional information as far as Lincoln County is concerned. I have a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, received since this report was made, in which he stated:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 31, 1912.

Hon. BIRD MCGUIRE,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Referring again to your letter of May 9, 1912, regarding S. 4913, you are advised that the following telegram has been received from the superintendent of the Sac and Fox School, Oklahoma:

"Office wire 15th. County clerk advises two sixty one and fifty one hundredths acres Indian allotments and two thirty acres school reserve within proposed drainage district. Assessment against Indian allotment, $4,285; against school reserve, $4,862; damages awarded, $150."

Respectfully,
SAMUEL ADAMS,
First Assistant Secretary.

Now, as to that drainage district, it would not take one dollar out of the Treasury of the United States, for the reason that this is very rich land. The estimate is about $9.50 for the land drained. In two years I doubt if there is an acre of that land that would not pay for the drainage, and each of these Indians—the Sacs and Fox—have money in the Treasury of the United States. The tribe has money in the Treasury of the United States, and it was the intention of the bill where they have money that the Secretary should use it, and as far as they are concerned it would not take a dollar out of the Treasury. Now, I agree with my colleague [Mr. FERRIS] that while the superintendent, a capable gentleman, would like to do all he can for the Indians—I know him personally—and from his own additional statement, under his report to the Secretary of the Interior, the fact developed the land is comparatively worthless, and it is; and one-half of the rentals for one year after it was drained would be equal to all the rentals for five years under the present conditions. I know something about the conditions there, and there is a gentleman on the floor—the gentleman from Kansas—who has personal knowledge of the situation and will bear out what I say.

Mr. MANN. How much pasture or grassland is there belonging to private owners in that county?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. No land that is to be drained. It is weed land, because the sod has been broken and it comes up in weeds. It is absolutely worthless for grazing or for any other purpose.

Mr. MANN. They seem to be able to rent it.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes; but for nothing like the value of it.

Mr. MANN. I will say that I am going to object to the consideration of this bill unless it is passed over. If the Government is to cooperate in a drainage district in behalf of the Indian lands, I think it is quite proper that the Government that is to advance the money should be entitled to a lien on the Indian lands so that the Government in the end will receive the money back.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That would be perfectly satisfactory to me. Will the gentleman offer an amendment to that effect?

Mr. MANN. No; I have not one prepared, and, furthermore, I do not know enough about the subject to prepare one properly. I have no objection to passing the bill over without prejudice.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would the gentleman extend the same remark to the irrigable land in the United States belonging to the Indians, and make it responsible for the money that is used for irrigation purposes?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If you did, you would make paupers out of the Indians.

Mr. MANN. If it is not for the benefit of the lands, do not do the irrigating. If it is, the land ought to be able to stand for the cost of it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are the wards of the Government, and we must take care of them, irrespective of whether it is a benefit or not.

Mr. MANN. I never before heard that it was the duty of the guardian of a ward to spend his own money to advance the value of the property of the ward. That is a new doctrine to me.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then the gentleman would reverse the doctrine that we have stood by for all of these years?

Mr. MANN. We never have done that. We make it reimbursable whenever we provide for these irrigation projects, except in the few that got away from us.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In the last Congress we passed a provision by which the moneys expended for irrigation of Indian allotments are a perpetual lien upon the allotment. That is, if the land should be sold by the allottee, the cost of irrigating it would be a lien that would have to be paid.

Mr. MANN. That is what I understand.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma, in charge of this bill, in regard to this provision in line 23, by which it provides that from any funds the said allottees may have in the United States Treasury the Treasury shall be reimbursed. Do moneys belonging to these Indians that are known as individual moneys go into the Treasury of the United States? Are they not deposited in the local banks to the credit of the Indians and paid out under the supervision of the superintendent, and never do go into the Treasury?

Mr. FERRIS. That is true as to individual moneys; but they have lands unallotted.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I understand this relates to any money belonging to individual allottees in the Treasury of the United States. They may have a large sum of money that would not be in the Treasury, but deposited in banks, and such money ought to be subject to reimburse this fund.

Mr. FERRIS. I heartily agree with the gentleman about that. I do not think the bill refers to individual funds. It says from any funds.

Mr. MANN. In the Treasury.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that consideration of the bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BORLAND). The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

STANDARD BARRELS AND GRADES FOR APPLES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 21480) to establish a standard barrel and standard grades for apples when packed in barrels, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk read the substitute in lieu of the original bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the standard barrel for apples shall be of the following dimensions when measured without distention of its parts: Length of stave, 28½ inches; diameter of head, 17½ inches; distance between heads, 26 inches; circumference of bulge, 64 inches outside measurement, representing as nearly as possible 7,056 cubic inches.

"SEC. 2. That the standard grades for apples when packed in barrels which shall be shipped or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce, or which shall be sold or offered for sale within the District of Columbia or the Territories of the United States shall be as follows: Apples of one variety, which are well-grown specimens, hand picked, of good color for the variety, normal shape, practically free from insect and fungous injury, bruises, and other defects, except such as are necessarily caused in the operation of packing, or apples of one variety which are not more than 10 per cent below the foregoing specifications shall be 'U. S. Standard, minimum size 2½ inches,' if the minimum size of the apples is 2½ inches in transverse diameter; 'U. S. Standard, minimum size 2¼ inches,' if the minimum size of the apples is 2¼ inches in transverse diameter; or 'U. S. Standard, minimum size 2 inches,' if the minimum size of the apples is 2 inches in transverse diameter.

"SEC. 3. That apples packed in barrels in accordance with the provision of this act may be branded in accordance with section 2 of this act.

"SEC. 4. That all barrels packed with apples shall be deemed to be below standard if the barrel bears any statement, design, or device indicating that the barrel is a standard barrel of apples, as herein defined, and the capacity of the barrel is less than the capacity prescribed by section 1 of this act, unless the barrel shall be plainly marked on end and side with words or figures showing the fractional relation which the actual capacity of the barrel bears to the capacity prescribed by section 1 of this act. The marking required by this paragraph shall be in block letters of size not less than 72-point 1-inch gothic.

"SEC. 5. That barrels packed with apples shall be deemed to be misbranded within the meaning of this act—

"First. If the barrel bears any statement, design, or device indicating that the apples contained therein are 'U. S. Standard' and the apples when packed do not conform to the requirements prescribed by section 2 of this act.

"Second. If the barrel bears any statement, design, or device indicating that the apples contained therein are 'U. S. Standard' and the barrel fails to bear also a statement of the name of the variety, the name of the locality where grown, and the name of the packer or the person by whose authority the apples were packed and the barrel marked.

"SEC. 6. That any person, firm, or corporation, or association who shall pack or cause to be packed apples in barrels or who shall sell or offer for sale such barrels in violation of the provisions of this act shall be liable to a penalty of $1 for each such barrel so sold or offered for sale, to be recovered at the suit of the United States in any court of the United States having jurisdiction. This penalty to be recovered under the provisions of an act approved June 30, 1906, entitled 'An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes.' (34 Stat., p. 768.)

"SEC. 7. That this act shall be in force and effect from and after the 1st day of July, 1913."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know something of what the bill is sought to accomplish.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to prevent fraud and deception in the apple business, which handles the largest fruit crop in the country. Provision is made for standard packages throughout the United States, and a standard is fixed for the grade and sizes of apples in commerce. It will establish for the producer a broader and more stable market; it will give the distributor confidence in the integrity of the package and the grade; and it will assure the consumer of both the quantity and quality of the food which he buys.

This measure has received the substantial approval of all branches of the apple industry; and representatives of fruit growers, fruit jobbers, horticultural societies, boards of trade, granges, commission merchants, apple shippers, and exporters from all parts of the United States, with scarcely a dissenting voice, urge its passage.

It establishes a standard barrel of the same dimension which is now established by law in many States, and which is in general use throughout the country. It provides that a barrel of less capacity than specified may be used, providing it is marked to show the fractional relation which the actual capacity bears to the standard barrel prescribed.

It establishes, for the purpose of interstate and foreign commerce, three standard grades of apples, to be designated according to the minimum size of the fruit, and specifies the quality of merchantable apples. It provides that barrels marked within the meaning of the act shall also show the identity of the packer and the locality where the fruit is grown and its grade.

The provisions establishing standard grades are not compulsory, and any person will be at liberty to pack his fruit in the old way or as he may desire, so long as he does not brand or mark it as "U. S. Standard," etc.

The penalty for violation of the standard package clause may be recovered at the suit of the United States in any district court having jurisdiction, and that part of the bill which is placed within the pure-food act is enforceable as a part of that law.

The provisions of the bill are in line with the statutes of the various States which have adopted a standard apple barrel, and I will say to the gentleman that this bill is approved by substantially all of the apple growers in the United States, by all of the apple dealers in the United States, by all of the boards of trades and chambers of commerce in the United States. It is an honest bill for honest dealing, and the demand for its enactment has come from every section of the country. It is reported unanimously from the committee, after extensive investigation and prolonged hearings. It is a bill to promote honest dealing between the producer and the consumer. It can only be done by a common standard.

Mr. JACKSON. What is the interest of the apple grower in such a measure as this?

Mr. SULZER. The interest of the apple grower in such a measure as this is that the honest apple producer wants a common standard that the dishonest apple grower must live up to in order to have honest competition. In other words, an honest apple grower wants to give a full barrel, while a dishonest apple grower does not. This compels the dishonest apple grower to live up to a standard.

Mr. JACKSON. Does the gentleman think any honest apple grower can pack apples in accordance with the second section of this bill?

Mr. SULZER. Yes; the producers of apples appeared before the committee and testified they could, and that is what they wanted to do. All the apple growers in the United States were present or duly represented. The hearings tell the whole story. This bill should pass.

Mr. JACKSON. Then a man must subject himself to all of the penalties of the pure-food law if he packs an apple of less than a certain diameter.

Mr. SULZER. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. In that connection I would ask where there is any provision in reference to a violation of this law. How can a man violate the law?

Mr. BUTLER. By shortening his barrel.

Mr. MANN. No; there is no prohibition against shortening the barrel in this bill.

Mr. SULZER. That is correct.

Mr. BUTLER. Then this is merely a declaration of morals?

Mr. MANN. Merely a declaration of intent.

Mr. SULZER. In other words, if a man packs less than a barrel and does not comply with this act he can not mark it "U. S. Standard."

Mr. MANN. There is no prohibition respecting that.

Mr. SULZER. He subjects himself to a fine of a dollar a barrel if he marks the barrel "U. S. Standard" when it is not United States standard, in accordance with this act.

Mr. HAY. He can pack his apples in any way he pleases, but he can not brand the barrel as provided for in this bill without incurring the penalty.

Mr. JACKSON. The bill provides for the branding of apples, not the branding of barrels.

Mr. HAY. It does not make it obligatory upon anybody who packs apples to pack them in barrels of this character. I will say to the gentleman from Kansas, representing as I do the largest apple district perhaps in the country——

Mr. JACKSON. Oh, I did not know the gentleman was from Kansas. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman should except myself.

Mr. HAY. I said I represented the largest apple-growing district.

Mr. JACKSON. And I repeat that I was not aware that the gentleman came from Kansas.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Virginia means that he represents the district that grows the largest apple. [Laughter].

Mr. HAY. No; the largest number of apples and the district that ships the largest number of barrels of apples. I may say for the apple growers that they are all in favor of this bill in the interest of honest packing; and, furthermore, they believe by the passage of this bill that the apple industry of the country will be very much aided, and all of the apple interests, both the growers and the buyers, have agreed upon the terms of the bill. It is not the bill that everybody would like to have, but, like all legislation, it is a compromise. I trust the gentleman from Kansas will not object.

Mr. JACKSON. Will not the result of the bill be to increase the price of certain kinds of apples that are designated as standard apples?

Mr. HAY. No; there is no designation of any standard here.

Mr. JACKSON. What does the bill do, if it does not do that?

Mr. MANN. That is all it does do. It does not prohibit anything.

Mr. HAY. It standardizes the size, not the quality—United States standard minimum size.

Mr. JACKSON. It tends to standardize the quality also.

Mr. HAY. Not at all. It is only the size.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. The size of the apple or of the barrel?

Mr. HAY. Of the apple.

Mr. TUTTLE. It does standardize the quality of merchantable apples.

Mr. JACKSON. That is what I thought.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, as the matter is up I shall not object to the consideration of it, but I would like to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that the only apparent prohibition in the bill is one against selling barrels and not against selling barrels of apples. There is no prohibition in the bill against marking barrels "U. S. Standard" when they are not United States standard. There is no prohibition in the bill against putting in apples of a different size and then marking them United States standard of a certain size. There is no provision in the bill except providing a penalty for violation of the act, and there can be no violation of an act unless there is a prohibition.

Mr. HARDWICK. Would the gentleman leave it that way?

Mr. MANN. Absolutely. I want to leave it that way unless the gentleman can correct it.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman is right in one sense and wrong in another. The bill does provide that any violation of any of its provisions shall subject the violator to a penalty of $1 per barrel.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; there is a violation which relates to the size of the barrel or the size of the apple——

Mr. MANN. But there can be no violation unless there is a prohibition.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is purely technical.

Mr. MANN. I take it is very pertinent.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is purely technical.

Mr. MANN. It is purely basic to say that a man can not pack apples and market them when there is no prohibition against the packing of apples and the marketing of them.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman has not read the bill carefully.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; I have read the bill a half a dozen times, but I should not oppose its consideration even in the form it is.

Mr. HARDWICK. Then the gentleman is not opposed to its consideration?

Mr. MANN. Or to passing it, as it will not accomplish anything.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask what section 3 means.

Mr. SULZER. That section will be amended. I call attention to section 5, which says "that barrels packed with apples shall be deemed to be misbranded if not within the meaning of this act."

Mr. MANN. There is no provision against misbranding. It is no violation of the act, because there is no prohibition which makes it a criminal——

Mr. HARDWICK. It is not criminal but civil. A man can violate the law and only be subject to a civil penalty.

Mr. MANN. It is neither one.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Illinois does not object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Nobody has objected yet.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I reserved the right to object, and I do object. I think the bill is too imperfectly drawn to be passed.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman is very much mistaken, and I hope the gentleman will reserve the right to object and let us explain the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman reserve the right to object or does he object?

Mr. JACKSON. I object.

Mr. HARDWICK. I ask the gentleman to let us explain the bill to him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects, and that is the end of it. The bill will be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman reserve the right to object?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman insists on his objection, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

PHOSPHATE LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8883) providing for adjustment of conflict between placer and lode locators of phosphate lands.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the gentleman who introduced the bill, I will ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BLANK MANIFESTS AND CLEARANCES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13392) to repeal section 2648 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, 1878, being an act entitled "An act authorizing the surveyors of collection districts to sell blank manifests and clearances, etc., in the northeastern and northwestern frontiers, etc."

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2648 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, 1878, being an act entitled "An act authorizing the surveyors of collection districts to sell blank manifests and clearances, etc., in the northeastern and northwestern frontiers, etc.," be repealed, and the following be enacted in lieu thereof:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to obtain by purchase, or cause to be printed, blank forms of clearances, manifests, and other forms used in connection with the transaction of customs business, and to sell such forms at ports and subports of entry, ports of delivery, and elsewhere at such prices as he may deem proper and under regulations to be prescribed by him.

"SEC. 2. That all moneys received from the sale of such forms shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury in the same manner as other moneys collected by customs officers.

"SEC. 3. That section 2648 of the Revised Statutes, and all additions thereto and amendments thereof, are hereby repealed."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next bill.

DISPOSITION AND SALE OF SURPLUS OF UNALLOTTED LANDS, STANDING ROCK INDIAN RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 109, an act to authorize the sale and disposition of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Standing Rock Indian Reservation in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota and making appropriation and provision to carry same into effect.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been read in the House on a former occasion. I do not believe it is necessary to have it read again.

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair thinks to-day is the day and the bill ought to be read.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I did not want to take up the time of the House in reading it if there is going to be objection. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RADIO COMMUNICATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6412) to regulate radio communication.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill was read before.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I was going to ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with, as it was read in full when it came up for consideration on the last Unanimous Consent Calendar day.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I simply want to ask the gentleman whether the international conference already agreed upon the other day might not in some way affect this?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It does not relate to any subject included in this bill.

Mr. MANN. It would relate to wireless signals at sea, would it not?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It might so far as regulations for two or more operators on shipboard, character of apparatus, and so forth, but this bill does not relate to those subjects in any way. This bill in part carries out the provisions of the Berlin convention, which has been ratified by the Senate on the part of the United States.

Mr. MANN. It seems to be very important that the regulations among the nations should be practically uniform, and as this conference has been provided for I suppose it will be reported before a great while.

Mr. ALEXANDER. But this bill is to carry out the provisions of the Berlin convention, and does not cover the subjects embraced in the joint resolution that passed the other day and that the gentleman from Illinois has in mind.

Mr. MANN. Yes; I know. It is a great deal more than that, though.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The other conference provided for in that joint resolution will not consider any of the questions that are embraced in the subject matter of this bill.

Mr. MANN. I will personally say to the gentleman, without any knowledge of the subject, and hence without an opinion that is worth anything, I do not believe it is practicable to enforce this bill in the language in which it is drawn, nor do I believe it would be fair to the amateurs of the country to endeavor to enforce it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. We have gone over the subject matter with the amateurs, and with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], who is in touch with them. The Wireless Association of Pennsylvania represents the largest number of wireless amateurs in the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. I think the association to which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] refers contains more experimenters, perhaps, than any other association devoted to this subject in the United States, and, as the gentleman knows, to-day the Department of the Navy is in communication and in consultation with these experimenters in Philadelphia for the purpose of agreeing, if they can, upon some measure—I would not say to be inserted in this bill, because I will be honest in my statement, but in consultation relative to the rights of the experimenter or relative to the obstruction of his work which the passage of this bill might make. Now, I have not heard from them. I know they are in consultation. Has the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] had any word from them?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania and I have agreed that one amendment shall be made that they insist on.

Mr. BUTLER. One amendment in the first section.

Mr. MANN. I have 22 question marks after provisions in this bill which I would like to have explained and possibly amended, and I do not see how that can be done to-day.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will undertake to explain them if in my power, and if the gentleman has any amendments that will improve the bill and will protect either the commercial or amateur interests, I am entirely willing that they may be brought before the House. But this is such an important measure, and the time for its consideration is passing, I do hope no objection to its consideration will be made.

Mr. MANN. We passed a law the other day about radio communication, and it may be that this ought to pass at once, but then we may change it next year. Sometimes it is wise to wait a bit. I know the gentleman and his committee have done extremely able work and hard work, too, upon this and other bills from his committee, and while I am disposed to follow the gentleman on a good many things from his committee, I am not disposed to pass a bill like this without consideration in the House.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I would be very glad to have it considered, and if there is any Member of the House that does not understand any provision of this bill, we will endeavor to make it clear.

Mr. MANN. If we can strike a time on unanimous-consent to-day when the calendar is not full, I would as soon have this bill up as any other. Unless the gentleman asks to have it passed over, I will have to suggest——

Mr. BUTLER. Let it go over for two weeks.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am not more interested in this than in many other measures. The subject matter comes from the administration, and I know the importance of the legislation, and for that reason I am so anxious that it may be considered and passed. At the same time I do not want to pass any law through the House without consideration. For that reason the bill was printed in the RECORD two weeks ago that all Members of the House might have opportunity to study it. If the gentleman has not read the bill and insists on his objection to its present consideration, I will ask unanimous consent that it may go over until next unanimous-consent day.

Mr. MANN. So far as I am concerned, I would be glad to take it up at any time.

Mr. BUTLER. In the meantime, I think he has practically removed the objections of the association to which he referred.

Mr. MANN. What is the amendment they propose to section 5?

Mr. BUTLER. As to reception of messages.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Line 8, page 1, strike out the words "receipt or." In the meantime, I hope the gentleman will frame such amendments as he may wish to propose? I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of this bill may go over until the next Unanimous Consent Calendar day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] asks unanimous consent to pass the bill by without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SALE AND ENTRY OF CERTAIN LANDS IN OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 22647) providing for the sale and entry of certain lands in the State of Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described tracts of land within the State of Oklahoma, to wit, the southeast quarter and the south half of the northeast quarter of section 30, the east half of section 31, and section 32, all in township 19 north of range 13 west of the Indian meridian; and the west half of section 5 and the northeast quarter of section 5, and section 6, all in township 18 north of range 13 west of the Indian meridian; and also any other tract or tracts of land within what was formerly the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indian Reservation which heretofore may have been reserved for agency or school purposes which, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, are no longer needed or necessary for the purpose for which said tract or tracts were originally reserved; and said lands shall be opened to entry and settlement and disposed of under the conditions, terms, and provisions prescribed in the act approved June 17, 1910, entitled "An act to open to settlement and entry under the general provisions of the homestead laws of the United States certain lands in the State of Oklahoma, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand the subject matter of this bill, the Secretary has now the authority to sell this land if he wants to?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I will state that there is a letter in the hands of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which I had in my possession a few weeks ago, but which I returned to the chairman, in which the Secretary says that his statement, which is made in this letter and printed in the report, was made through inadvertence.

Mr. MANN. I recollect that fact now.

Now, this bill provides that the proceeds of this land, which the committee says belongs to the Government, shall be turned over for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; but, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. It further says that the Indians do not want the land to be sold, because they want the land.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, in regard to the land, first, I will say that the Indians believed that they had the legal title to this land, and the agent no doubt had the same conception. The Indians who signed the petition of course got their information from the agent.

Now, as a matter of fact, as shown by the report of the Secretary, the legal title, the cold, naked legal title, belongs to the United States. The Indians signed this petition against the sale on the theory that these lands which are referred to in the body of the petition would, when they should cease to be used for school purposes, revert to the Indians, which is not true.

I desire to say, further, that one of the chiefs of that tribe, who was the first man who signed that petition, is here in Washington at the present time, in company with other Indians of that tribe. They have talked the matter over with me and with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and after they have been made to understand it they are now willing that these lands should be disposed of according to the terms of this bill.

Now, while it is true, Mr. Speaker, going to the other point, that this bill provides that the proceeds of this land shall go to the benefit of the Indians, and while the report states correctly that the legal title is in the United States, yet I want to call the attention of the gentleman to this fact, that here was a great reservation, comprising something like 2,000,000 acres, and the United States, through commissioners, entered into a treaty for the allotting of these lands to the Indians, 160 acres to each, and for the disposal of the rest under the homestead laws to settlers.

The Indians in that treaty in terms did release their right to all the lands except their allotments. However, certain little reservations were reserved for school purposes for the benefit of the Indians and are being used and have been dedicated to that purpose.

Now, it appears that there is a surplus of these lands that have been reserved by the United States for school purposes for the benefit of the Indians. I should not think that the Government of the United States would be doing just the right thing to take these lands that were reserved for the Indians, for the purpose of educating this tribe of Indians, and appropriate these lands and place the money to the credit of the people of the United States. The Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians are not a very progressive tribe. They have not advanced very far in civilization. It will take many years before these Indians will reach the point where they will not need great care and a great amount of education and training; and I would feel that we were doing an act of great injustice now to appropriate these lands and take them away from these 3,000 Indians, who are wards of the Government, and who are not, as I say, advanced very far in civilization. I do hope the gentleman from Illinois will not oppose this bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is both able, ardent, and plausible. But even he can not escape the fact that at one time we paid the Indians for the land—bought it and paid for it—and thereupon let the Indians make use of it by establishing Indian schools upon the land. Thereupon the Indians got an idea that they owned the land, and then they objected to our selling the land because they wanted the land. They visited Washington, they visited my distinguished friend from Oklahoma, and he explained to them that they did not own the land, but if they let this bill pass they would get the money for it. Of course they flopped over, but the very reason that actuates the Indians in favor of the bill which they formerly was opposed to makes me a little more opposed to it.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. I will.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, these lands were bought and paid for by the Federal Government from the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, and it was said that the Federal Government got it for the purpose of settling friendly Indians thereon. The Federal Government, when it bought the land, bought it for a very small price. It did not in its negotiations with the Choctaws and Chickasaws, as the treaty will show, make any pretention that it wanted the land for itself, but wanted it for settling friendly Indians. It did not want it for white men.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Then it belongs to the Choctaws and Chickasaws?

Mr. CARTER. No; they have been paid for it at the rate of $1.25 an acre, but it was taken to settle friendly Indians on it. They were not so very friendly, however, as it turned out.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, is this a plan to buy it over again and see if we can not get it in that way?

Mr. CARTER. I make the point that the Federal Government did not buy the land for itself, but bought it for the Shawnees and Arapahoes and friendly Indians.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma if it is not a fact that this land was ceded to the Government along with other land, and that this particular portion of it was simply reserved by the Government for the purpose of using it in connection with an Indian school established there.

Mr. MORGAN. That is a fact.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. This bill, if I understand it, provides that when this land is sold the proceeds shall go into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; to the credit of the Indians, to be disposed of by Congress.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. My understanding was, when the bill was reported—I may labor under a misapprehension—that it was the opinion of the committee that the Indians had no right whatever to the land, and if there was no further use for it for the purpose of a school, that when it was sold the proceeds should go to the United States; in other words, we ought not to purchase land from the Indians, allow them to use it for 10 or 20 years, and then purchase it of them again, or sell it and give them the proceeds. We have been doing that in a number of cases for several years, notably in the case of the Kiowas and Comanches, where we gave them several million dollars.

Mr. MORGAN. It is true, as I understand it, the Indians have released their right to these lands, but the United States Government reserved these 4,000 acres of land for the purpose of educating these Indians. Now, that is a fact that can not be denied. I would not feel that I was doing justice to these Indians to now take this land that was reserved by the United States for the high and noble purpose of providing means for the proper education, culture, and development of these Indians to make them citizens of the United States, capable of self-support—I could not consent that we should take the lands reserved for that purpose and appropriate them to the general purposes of the United States. I do not think there is anybody here that wants to do that. If this land can not be disposed of so that the proceeds will go to the Indians, we ought to leave the lands there as they are, to be used in connection with that Indian school. I hope the gentleman will not object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, as I understand this bill, this property was acquired by the Government in 1891 by purchase from the Indians. More than a year later the department set aside this particular tract of land as a part for Indian schools. It did not belong to the Indians, nobody pretended that it did; but because they have been on it for 20 years, or sending children to school there, they came to the conclusion that they own it; they believe they own it, and believing they owned it they objected to the sale of it. The committee and the department, in order to excuse themselves for making a sale of it, called attention to the fact that the Indians did not own it, and that, therefore, the objection of the Indians to the sale of it ought not to be given any weight. If that be the case, why, when we sell it should we give them the money for it?

Mr. MORGAN. Because the United States reserved this for the purpose of educating these Indians.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Why not keep it for that purpose?

Mr. MORGAN. We are; we are going to put it in the Treasury, because we can utilize it better if it is put in the form of cash.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Suppose the Government had not reserved the land; suppose it had gone outside and purchased a tract and located the Indian school upon it, would that give the Indian any right to the proceeds from the sale of it now when it is no longer needed for school purposes? The Government purchased the land, paid for it, and then reserved what is authorized to be sold by this bill and built a school thereon to educate the Indians, but that did not give the Indians any right to the land.

Mr. MORGAN. I think if we purchased the land for the use and benefit of the Indians, if we ever dispose of it we should use it for the benefit of the education of the Indians who need it.

Mr. MILLER. The land was originally a part of an Indian reservation and sold by the Indians. At what price was it sold?

Mr. MORGAN. I think at $1.25 an acre.

Mr. MILLER. Has the gentleman any information as to the real value of the land at the time of the sale?

Mr. MORGAN. It is now worth $10 or $15 per acre.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope the gentleman will allow me to ask that the bill may be passed without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. I will not object to that; we have got in the habit of passing bills over in that way.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

STANDARD BARRELS AND GRADES FOR APPLES.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21480) providing for standard barrels and grades of apples.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas withdraws his objection to the bill H. R. 21480, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to establish a standard barrel and standard grades for apples when packed in barrels, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have not objected to the consideration of the bill and I have no objection to its passage, and yet I think it is proper to call attention to some of the things this bill does do and does not do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for an hour.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in the first place it provides for the size of an apple barrel, that it shall represent as nearly as possible 7,056 cubic inches. It is possible to have exactly 7,056 cubic inches in a barrel, and if it is a provision with a penalty to it, what is to be the result? We have been considering for a year in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce the question of the quantity of the contents of packages, and the committee has recently reported the bill, which I think is a very desirable one to pass, providing that there shall be tolerances; putting it in the law, that word "tolerances" having a well-defined meaning. In this bill you may just as well say that the size of the barrel shall be 7,056 cubic inches, because it is possible to make a barrel of that size. But it is not practicable in the trade to make them of that size. How would you determine whether a man was violating the law or not? A man could not tell in advance whether he was violating the law.

However, the bill contains no provision that anything is a violation of the act. It provides what shall be the United States standard on apple barrels and apples, and provides for the marking of United States standard on the apple barrel, but it makes no prohibition against a man falsely marking the barrel. Anybody can put the mark on the barrel. It provides for the packing of certain grades of apples under certain marks which may be put on the barrel, but you can pack potatoes in the barrel and mark it "United States standard, minimum size, 2¼ inches," and there is no violation of the act.

The bill says the barrels packed with apples shall be deemed to be misbranded within the meaning of the act, but there is no prohibition against misbranding. There is nothing in the act that makes it illegal to misbrand unless it is covered by the existing pure-food law. Under that it would be illegal to mark potatoes as apples and it might be illegal to lie about the size. This bill does not cover that.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to ask the gentleman where this bill originated? Where does the demand come from for this legislation? Is it from the growers?

Mr. MANN. I will say frankly I think it comes from the apple growers of the United States. They have been asking for legislation of this sort for years, and, as I understand, the demand also comes because we export a great many apples. They want to be able to sell their apples at a high price. The Canadians pack their apples and standardize them, and the United States wants to be able to do the same thing.

Mr. LOBECK. The apple and fruit growers of Nebraska desire it.

Mr. MANN. I think there is a general demand for the passage of the bill. I think it is a desirable measure to pass. If it was not for that fact I would not be willing to pass this bill which I think will not cover the case. I simply call attention to these things now and hope that the gentlemen who are interested in the bill will at some stage insert some provision that will make it of value.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not see, to save my life, why if we are going to undertake to supervise trade in this inquisitorial and severe way, we should not say that the stuff shall be sold by weight, where there can be exactness.

Mr. MANN. Because apples, with many worms in them, will weigh just as much as those without worms, and little apples will weigh more than big apples, and they are not worth as much.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The buyer could then examine the stuff that he buys. Apples are sold by weight in a large part of the world.

Mr. FOSTER. The barrels are not opened.

Mr. MANN. Apples can not be sold by weight unless they are guaranteed of certain quality in the barrels, not exposed or examined.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will say to the gentleman that I have seen them sold by weight.

Mr. MANN. I will not say that somebody has not done it. I only say that it is not practicable to do it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not mean to say that it is exceptional. It is customary to sell them by weight in many parts of the world.

Mr. MANN. Where?

Mr. SLAYDEN. In Europe.

Mr. MANN. Oh, they do not have many apples there, and they buy their apples from us. They do not buy the big bulk of apples from this country by weight, however.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not know about that.

Mr. MANN. They may sell them over there for 50 cents a pound. I have heard people say that it was impossible to get apples over there.

Mr. JACKSON. I think apples are sold almost entirely in the West, out beyond the mountains, by weight.

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, no; they are sold by the box.

Mr. MANN. It is a box weighing so much, but it is the kind of apple and the quality of apple that determines the value.

I myself have been a witness at what is probably the largest apple market in the world, on South Market Street, in Chicago. I have gone there myself a number of times as a matter of experience.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes; for a question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, the gentleman has one hour.

Mr. MANN. But I do not wish to occupy it all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] has made an inquiry which deserves an answer. I have petitions in favor of the passage of this bill. Some come from dealers in apples and some from consumers, and the reason they would like to have a bill of this kind passed is that they would like to have the apples delivered as represented. The gentleman may be aware of the fact, since he comes from a partly agricultural district, that sometimes when apples fall or are picked they are grouped in the orchard in piles of primes and culls. When they are packed it sometimes happens that the primes go to the bottom of the barrel, the culls to the middle, and the good, big, red, round apples again to the top. The consumer is often deceived in this way. The honest apple grower sells the consumer and would like to regulate the distribution of apples so far as fair dealing is concerned. The consumer's interest is almost entirely in the fact that he wants to receive the contents of the barrel as they are represented to him.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] will notice that this bill does not endeavor to cover the entire apple trade at all. It only purports to authorize the packing of apples under certain conditions and marking the barrel with a certain mark. That was a proposition I tried to put in the pure-food law—to mark a thing "United States standard" and allow a standard to be made. That is all this bill endeavors to do. Nobody needs to mark it who does not want to.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman will remember that I was one of his humblest lieutenants in the passage of the pure-food law.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman was one of the ablest lieutenants I had.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am absolutely in favor of doing everything possible to prevent fraud in trade, because the more honest you make it the more you develop commerce; but I have not been able to see the necessity for this sort of legislation.

Mr. MANN. Of course gentlemen who represent apple districts——

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am an apple grower.

Mr. MANN. Well, I have been raising apples all my life, my father having been a nurseryman and owning orchards when I was a baby, and we still own orchards in our family, although we do not sell very many profitably now. Apples are a peculiar thing. The value depends largely upon the size and quality, more so than almost any other fruit, and that is not plainly observable. All you can see in a barrel of apples is the top of it, and you can not run anything in that will bring out the quality of the apples like you can most things of that sort. With ordinary fruit you can take out a sample, and if necessary you can turn the box out and find whether it is a half pint instead of a pint, whether all the little strawberries are in the bottom. That we are trying to regulate now.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And whether the little apples are all at the bottom.

Mr. HAY. The purpose of this bill is to have an honest pack, to have an honest grade.

Mr. SULZER. In the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois, will not this bill, if it becomes a law, have a tendency to make the trade more honest in its dealing with the consumer?

Mr. MANN. This bill would be a fine thing to make a standard barrel of apples and require that the apples shall conform to a standard and permit that standard to be marked on the barrel if you forbid, which this bill does not do, anybody falsely marking on the barrel the same thing.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How do you explain section 3, which requires a branding of the apple itself?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia to answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and then I will yield to my friend from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. HAY. Section 3 provides that the apples shall be branded—I have not a copy of the bill——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; it says the apples shall be branded.

Mr. HAY (continuing). As is provided for in section 2, and section 2 provides the brand that shall be placed upon the barrel.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is aware that a great deal of annoyance to dealers arises from inspection methods, and if the paragraph is taken literally as meaniug that the apple itself shall be branded it would lead to all sorts of difficulties.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, section 3 provides for the branding of the apples and section 6 provides a penalty for the sale of the barrels, not the apples.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is where I wanted to ask my question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is why I thought paragraph 3 was unnecessary and ought to be stricken out of the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit the gentleman from Virginia to answer a question?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Line 19, page 6, I suggest, should read, with a slight change, in this way: "or who shall sell or offer for sale such barrels which under the provisions of this act are misbranded."

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman wants my opinion in reference to this, this only relates to the sale of barrels and not barrels of apples.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Such barrels would refer back to section 5.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that we propose to change section 3 so as to provide that the barrel in which the apples are packed in accordance with the provisions of this act may be branded.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That removes the objection I had to the paragraph.

Mr. HAY. That amendment will be offered.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think if it is left as it is it will result in great annoyance both to growers and dealers.

Mr. HAY. It is badly worded.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois another question or two. This bill in section 2 undertakes to compel the uniform packing in that it requires the apples shall be all——

Mr. MANN. Undertakes to permit a uniform packing.

Mr. SLAYDEN. In that section it requires that they shall be the minimum size of so many inches in transverse diameter, and so forth. How in the world is the average apple grower of the country to arrive at an exactness of that sort of thing? He can only go by his eye; he has not got the time to measure every apple.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman ever seen them separate oranges and apples? It is a very simple process.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have seen them separate oranges. They do that through screens.

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that in separating apples they have a grading table, and there is no trouble about that at all.

Mr. MANN. Yes; they do not run them through screens, as oranges, because it would bruise the apples.

Mr. HAY. But they have a uniform size and they have a grading table.

Mr. SLAYDEN. There should be a glossary to this bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. At the proper time I propose to offer an amendment to section 3.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserve the balance of his time?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] is recognized for an hour.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want just a minute. I will not use the hour. At the proper time I will offer an amendment to the amendment to cure the objection to the verbiage of section 3 raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I want to say this in answer to the technical objections of my friend, who is for the bill, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. They are not technical.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think they are, with all due deference to the gentleman's judgment. It was not intended in this bill to make any violation of any of its provisions a criminal offense. It was simply intended, and your committee did not go any further, that for each and every infraction of the provisions of this bill there should not be a criminal penalty, but a civil penalty, and the committee has so provided and the bill so reads. In answer to every word that the gentleman has said on the subject, I want to read from section 6 of the bill, as follows:

That any person, firm, or corporation, or association who shall pack or caused to be packed apples in barrels, or who shall sell or offer for sale such barrels in violation of the provisions of this act shall be liable to a penalty of $1 for each such barrel—

For each and every violation of the provisions of this act there shall be this civil penalty of $1 per barrel.

Now, this legislation is not exclusive. It is cumulative. If the bill is enacted into law a man can ship into interstate commerce any sort of barrel, even though it is not the United States standard.

Mr. MANN. There is no doubt the statement you have just made is correct, and that you can ship in interstate commerce apples just as we do now, only we can not brand them.

Mr. HARDWICK. We can not brand them. After this bill is enacted into law if you want to ship apples in boxes or in bags you can ship them in that way, and also in carload lots.

Mr. BOOHER. The gentleman from Georgia is quite sure that this bill does not interfere with the shipment of apples in interstate commerce in barrels other than the standard barrel provided in this bill and in carload lots without branding.

Mr. HARDWICK. The bill does not interfere in any way with such shipments, unless the shipper desires to brand the barrel as provided by the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the suggestion the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made is good. The provisions of the act prior to section 6, the gentlemen will observe, do not make anything obligatory, and some persons would not want to brand their apples.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is the reason why they do not.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The provision in section 6—

Any person—

who shall sell or offer for sale such barrels in violation of the provisions of this act—

is the only provision that is obligatory. There is nothing obligatory in the preceding sections. If we should offer apples that were misbranded—

Mr. HARDWICK. To you and the gentleman from Illinois I want to repeat the assurance that it ought not to take much examination of the question for you to find out that every section need not carry the statement that "This is a violation of law if you do not live up to it."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is very elementary. The trouble is, you have nothing there with reference to violating the preceding sections.

Mr. HARDWICK. We have laid down the law in the preceding sections.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think you do it.

Mr. HARDWICK. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Section 1 provides that the standard barrel for apples shall be of certain prescribed dimensions. Section 2 provides what the standard grades shall be. Section 3 provides for the branding of the barrels in which the apples are packed. Section 4 provides that all barrels packed with apples shall be deemed to be below standard, if the barrel bears any statement, design, or device indicating that the barrel is of less than the capacity prescribed by section 1, unless the barrel is plainly marked otherwise. Section 5 describes misbranding. Then comes section 6, and it says:

That any person, firm or corporation, or association who shall pack or cause to be packed apples in barrels, or who shall sell or offer for sale such barrels in violation of the provisions of this act shall be liable to a penalty of $1 for each such barrel so sold or offered for sale.

And so forth.

Now, if that does not explain it to the gentleman, it is not my fault. If the gentleman still can not understand, it is through no fault of mine.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It would not hold in any court.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think any lawyer in any court would make such a point.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me, I may say that I am not giving offhand information on this subject. It was a matter that was brought up when the pure-food legislation was considered in committee, and when it was considered in the House; and I do not think there is any question in the slightest that unless a prohibition is put in the bill there can not be any penalty enforced.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will say to the gentleman that this bill was very carefully prepared and considered by the committee, and there is not a single member on the committee on either side who has the slightest doubt on the proposition which the gentleman raises.

We provide in section 6 that each and any violation of the provisions of this act shall subject the person who violates the act to a fine of $1 a barrel. It seems to me that is plain and specific and covers all. I can not see why not. I do not think you have got to say in each section, in so many words, that a man who does such and such a thing commits a violation of the law, and repeat it every time.

Now, if the gentleman contends that we have not established a criminal penalty for the violations of this provision, he is right, but——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman misunderstands me entirely. My objection is not based on that ground. There is nothing obligatory in the preceding sections.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does not the gentleman see anything obligatory in section 6?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The trouble is there is nothing for them to violate.

Mr. HARDWICK. If a man packs his apples and ships them in a different way from what the act of Congress prescribes and brands them as standard under this act, he is guilty of a violation of the act, and if the gentleman can not understand that, Mr. Speaker, it is simply another instance of "De gustibus non disputandum est." There is not any use discussing such a proposition as that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is entirely wrong about that.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have not finished. I have the floor, I believe.

Mr. MANN. When the gentleman is through I will take the floor.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I want this bill to prescribe a real standard. I know, of course, that my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is a friend of the bill just as much as I am, and if he wants to offer an amendment like that, and not make the bill too stringent, I shall not oppose it. But I do not think it is necessary.

It will be a matter of absolute indifference to me whether such an amendment is adopted or not. I do not think it will improve the bill any; neither do I think it will hurt it.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. The purpose of this bill is to make a standard barrel of apples. That is the intention?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. And when it is marked "United States standard," that mark shows that it comes up to the provisions of the bill?

Mr. HARDWICK. Exactly; and the buyer has the guaranty that it must come up to the provisions of this law, and the seller is protected because he can sell his apples on that basis.

Mr. FOSTER. If it does not come up to the standard, does the gentleman contend that the man who sells or ships that barrel of apples is subject to a fine of a dollar a barrel?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes. That is the penalty. The House can go further, if it desires, and make the violation of this law a criminal act and punish it, but I think what is provided in here is sufficient.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me that a dollar a barrel is penalty enough.

Mr. HARDWICK. We thought so. The committee was unanimous about it. Of course, if anybody wants a criminal provision attached to it, the bill is subject to amendment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time. I shall offer an amendment when we get to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed 10 minutes.

Mr. HARDWICK. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FAISON].

[Mr. FAISON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. MANN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the principle of the bill, and I would rather see it go through under its present form than not at all, because I am sure that the error in the bill of which I complained will be subsequently corrected. I wish to state that from section 2 up to section 6 it merely consists of definitions. It absolutely imposes no obligations; it does not determine and could not determine that anybody should have his barrels of this size or that he should brand them in a specific way. Of necessity that is left to his choice. The difficulty with the bill is that it does not provide, as it stands, for anything to which to apply the words in line 19, section 6, "in violation of the provisions of this act." As it stands there is nothing to violate. This provision of the bill should read something like this: "Any person who shall sell of offer for sale such barrels containing apples which are misbranded under the provisions of this act."

Mr. SULZER. We will accept that amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not care particularly that it should be in that form, only that the bill shall be in some form so that there will be something to predicate a violation upon.

Mr. BUTLER. You can sell with or without branding.

Mr. MANN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this bill for the reason that, in my judgment, it will benefit both the producer and consumer. It seems to me that if a person buys a barrel of apples that are marked "U. S. Standard" he knows that he is going to get apples in a certain kind of a barrel as a measurement, just as he does when he goes to the dry goods store and buys a yard of cloth he knows there is to be 36 inches to a yard of that cloth. Now, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks by printing some letters from the horticultural societies and fruit dealers from the State of Illinois in support of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letters and petitions are as follows:

ILLINOIS STATE HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Kinmundy, Ill., June 12, 1912.

Hon. MARTIN D. FOSTER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am writing to ask one more favor of you, not only for myself personally, but also in behalf of the Illinois State Horticultural Society. I wish your favorable consideration and hearty support of House bill 21480, which has been favorably reported upon by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures and is upon the calendar of the House.

The bill provides for a standard apple barrel and the marking of the grade of apples the barrel contains upon the barrel, and is known as the Sulzer apple package and grade bill.

I hope you may see your way clear to vote for the bill when it comes to a vote.

Respectfully,

W. B. LLOYD,
Secretary Illinois State Horticultural Society.

FREEPORT, ILL., June 13, 1912.

Hon. MARTIN D. FOSTER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have been notified that the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures of the House of Representatives have reported favorably on the Sulzer apple barrel and grade bill—H. R. 21480—and that it is now upon the House Calendar.

We are very much interested in the passage of this bill, and understand that it is on the calendar for Monday, June 17, and we hope that you will give this bill your special attention and hearty support.

Yours, respectfully,

F. R. RICE & Co.

CENTRALIA, ILL., March 6, 1912.

DEAR SIR: I strongly favor the passage of the Sulzer bill and also any measure giving us a general parcel post, and ask your support for these measures.

Yours, truly,

W. S. PERRINE,
President of Southern Illinois Horticultural Society,
Member of State Board of Horticulture,
Secretary Illinois Commercial Apple Growers' Association.

Mr. FAISON, by unanimous consent, was given leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to speak on this particular bill. I hope it will pass.

Mr. Speaker, some days ago, on May 27, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL] made some remarks on the naval appropriation bill, in which he said he would, if unanimous consent was given him, print in the RECORD, from the statutes of Georgia, certain laws in regard to labor.

I inquired at the time what he proposed to print, and he stated that he proposed to publish only what was in the statute books of Georgia, and, of course, I did not object, and I had no objection then and shall never have any objection to anyone publishing any of the statutes of my State. He has published the statutes of quite a number of States in the South upon certain subjects. I shall have nothing to say with reference to any except the statutes of the State which I have the honor, in part, to represent upon this floor. I will not say anything with reference to the statutes which he has alleged to have copied on page 7261 of the RECORD as being taken from the Penal Code of Georgia. I think they are correct. They refer to punishment for offenses against enticing apprentices away, offenses against conspiracy to interfere with laborers under contract, and things of that sort. They are the same laws we find not only in the Southern States, but the laws against conspiracy that we find in the State of New York and in the State of Massachusetts and in other States of the Union. They are the same laws that have existed in England, and some of them are the common law. I have no controversy with my friend the gentleman from New York upon correctly citing the statutes of the State of Georgia, but he has made one statement in which he has committed a great error. He says on page 7262 of the RECORD:

> I further submit a condensed reference to labor laws in those 12 States as a comparison of them with those of other States.
> Twenty-eight States of the Union provide by statute that children under the age of 14 shall not be employed in mills, factories, and so forth. Only one of those States is from the above group of 12, viz, Kentucky.
> Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, North Carolina, and South Carolina fix the age limit at 12 years, while Georgia fixes it at 10, and Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia have no laws for the protection of children.

Mr. Speaker, in 1889 and prior to that time we had a law which limited the hours of labor—in fact, we have it now—and also limited the age to 12 years. We have a law now which limits the age to 14 years. I will read the statute, for that is the clearest way to put it. My friend has fallen into the error of taking somebody else's investigation instead of his own. I am sure that he did not intentionally misrepresent the facts, because I have the utmost confidence in the fact that he would not do so.

I read from the statutes of the State of Georgia:

ARTICLE 4.

CHILD LABOR IN FACTORIES REGULATED.

3143. No child under 10 years of age to be employed: No child under 10 years of age shall be employed or allowed to labor in or about any factory or manufacturing establishment within this State under any circumstances.

3144. Child under 12 years: On and after January 1, 1907, no child under 12 years of age shall be employed or allowed to labor unless such child be an orphan and has no other means of support or unless a widowed mother or an aged or disabled father is dependent upon the labor of such child, in which event, before putting such child at such labor, such father shall produce and file in the office of such factory or manufacturing establishment a certificate from the ordinary of the county in which such factory or establishment is located, certifying under his seal of office to the facts required to be shown as herein prescribed: Provided, That no ordinary shall issue any such certificate except upon strict proof in writing and under oath clearly showing the necessary facts: And provided further, That no such certificate shall be granted for longer than one year nor accepted by any employer after one year from the date of such certificate.

3145. Child under 14 years: On and after January 1, 1908, no child under 14 years of age shall be employed or allowed to labor in or about any factory or manufacturing establishment within this State between the hours of 7 p. m. and 6 a. m.

3146. Educational qualification: On and after January 1, 1908, no child, except as heretofore provided, under 14 years of age shall be employed or allowed to labor in or about any factory or manufacturing establishment within this State unless he or she can write his or her name and simple sentences and shall have attended school for 12 weeks of the preceding year, 6 weeks of which school attendance shall be consecutive; and no such child, as aforesaid, between the ages of 14 and 18 years shall be so employed unless such child shall have attended school for 12 weeks of the preceding year, 6 weeks of which school attendance shall be consecutive; and at the end of each year, until such child shall have passed the public-school age, an affidavit certifying to such attendance as is required by this section shall be furnished to the employer by the parent or guardian or person sustaining parental relation to such child. The provisions of this section shall apply only to children entering such employment at the age of 14 years or less.

3147. Affidavit as to age, birth, etc.: It shall be unlawful for any owner, superintendent, agent, or any other person acting for or in behalf of any factory or manufacturing establishment to hire or employ any child unless there is first provided and placed on file in the office of such employer an affidavit signed by the parent, guardian, or person standing in parental relation thereto certifying to the age and date of birth of such child and other facts required in this article. Any person knowingly furnishing a false affidavit as to the age or as to any other facts required in this article shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

3148. Inspection by the grand juries: The affidavit and certificates required in this article shall be open to inspection by the grand juries of any county where such factory or manufacturing establishments are located.

3149. Penalties: Any person or agent or representative of any firm or corporation who shall violate any provision of this article, or any parent, guardian, or other person standing in parental relation to a child who shall hire or place for employment or labor in or about any factory or manufacturing establishment within this State a child in violation of any provision of this article shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

This morning I notified the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL], and recently by phone, that I intended to call the attention of the House to this matter and to set the matter right. Unfortunately for him, I think, he has relied upon some statements that he has seen made by some one, not of recent date. I have read the statutes of the State of Georgia upon the subject of limit of age when a child may be employed in a factory.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. What age does the gentleman give?

Mr. BARTLETT. I have read the statute that said that after 1908 the age shall be 14 years.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Day or night?

Mr. BARTLETT. That no child under 14 years of age shall be employed in any factory or manufacturing establishment in the State between the hours of 7 p. m. and 6 a. m., and no child at all under the age of 12 years shall be permitted to be employed. All I desire is that there shall be put into the RECORD the entire law upon the subject as it exists at this time. I do this in the utmost good will, knowing that my friend has been misinformed as to the true facts. That is all I desire to say.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK].

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this bill in relation to the standardizing size of apple barrels and the markings thereon. I live in the eastern portion of Nebraska. We have there a great apple country. We also adjoin western Iowa. In Omaha we have a great apple market, and our commission merchants in Omaha and those that raise apples in our vicinity have been writing to me and asking me to support this bill. I believe that if this bill is passed that from our country, the Missouri River Valley, where my good friend from Iowa, Mr. GREEN, resides, and also the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. STEPHENS, and the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. MAGUIRE, represents, will be afforded larger markets for apples throughout the country. We have a great apple-producing country. Our farmers raise a fine quality of apples. My people are in favor of this bill, and I am in favor of it and will give it my hearty support.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, returning the courtesy of my friend from Illinois to my colleague, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL].

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I made an error in the statute that I put in the RECORD. I called on my good friend from Georgia, Mr. BARTLETT, and submitted to him several statutes, but not this particular one. Of course I assume the responsibility, and yet it may be said truthfully that another party was looking up these statutes for me and did not find the latest law. The law that I found was the law of 1906, which provides that from and after the approval of that act no child under 10 years of age should be employed or allowed to labor in or about any factory or manufacturing establishment within the State under any circumstances. There is another statute which I had not seen and which I will refer to now, in order to correct the RECORD. This says that on and after January 1, 1907, no child under 12 years of age shall be employed or allowed to labor unless such child be an orphan and has no other means of support, unless the widowed mother or an aged or disabled father is dependent upon the labor of such child, in which event before putting the child at labor the father shall produce and file in the office of such factory or manufacturing establishment a certificate from the officials of the county in which the factory is located, certifying certain things.

I made a mistake, and I apologize. [Applause.] But this second statute does not help the gentleman very much, in my judgment. The other statute provides that they shall not work during the nighttime when under 14 years of age, which has no application here.

But I will refer to this particular statute which the gentleman puts in. I supposed these laws were to protect children—young children under the age of 12 or under the age of 14—from work in factories. I believe in work. I worked from the time I was 6 years old, and my notion is that too much idleness is worse for boys than too much work; yet I believe it is wrong to put a boy of immature years to work in a factory or mill where the air is not good and fresh and his health may be impaired, and where he is subjected to the risk of accident and permanent injury.

Mr. BUTLER. You quit too soon. Did the gentleman say six weeks or six years?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. These laws were intended to protect children and not their parents, and here children under the age of 12 years, according to this statute, may work in a factory or manufacturing establishment or mill when the child has a poor mother or a disabled father, or if it is necessary, on account of the condition of his family, to work. You will not find any such law as that in any of the Northern States. Why can not the State of Georgia in some way support these little children under 12 years of age where their fathers or their mothers are poor or disabled and can not support them without forcing them into the factories to work? [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would ask unanimous consent for two minutes right on this point, as the matter has been brought up.

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL] to permit me to call his attention to another mistake that he made in the remarks that he inserted in the RECORD, June 12. In his statement he included Tennessee as one of the five Southern States which had no laws upon their statute books for the protection of children. My attention has just been called to those remarks, and I will say to the gentleman that Tennessee has had for several years, in fact, since 1893, a law upon its statute books which forbids the employment of children under 14 years of age in factories and elsewhere. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I have taken my facts from the Twenty-second Annual Report of the Commissioner of Labor.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. If there is any other exception to be taken to the remarks such as I have indicated I would like to have them made now.

Mr. BUTLER. Or else hold your peace.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Or else hold your peace.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. How much time?

Mr. BARTLETT. About three minutes.

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I did not have any feeling in this matter. I am sorry the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL] has evinced any about it. I desire to call attention in his hearing to this: It is a fact that after 1908 no child under 14 years of age shall be employed or allowed to labor about any factory unless he can write his name, and so forth, and shall have attended school for 12 weeks of the preceding year, 6 weeks of which shall be school attendance, and so forth. I am going to put all these laws of the State in the RECORD. I thought my friend was with good grace going to admit his error in the matter, and he did admit it, but he would not be satisfied without taking a fling at the State which I have the honor in part to represent. That I shall pass by, Mr. Speaker, as idle wind about which I care not.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 5, line 15, by inserting after the word "that" the following: "the barrels in which apples are packed."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motions of Mr. HAY, Mr. SULZER, and Mr. HARDWICK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LITTLE RIVER DRAINAGE DISTRICT NO. 1, POTTAWATOMIE COUNTY, OKLA.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the bill S. 4913 was passed temporarily in order to permit the preparation of an amendment. We have prepared the amendment, and as I understand the gentleman who objected is willing to withdraw his objection I ask unanimous consent to recur to that bill for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to recur to the bill S. 4913. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 4913) to enable the Indians allotted lands in severalty within the boundaries of Little River drainage district No. 1, in Pottawatomie County, Okla., to cooperate with the officials of said State in the protection of their lands from overflow, and for other purposes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chairs hears none.

The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. To be added at the end of the page on page 3, after the word "interior" on line 24.

The SPEAKER. This is really an amendment to the amendment, as the amendment strikes out all after the enacting clause and inserts entirely new matter.

Mr. FERRIS. That is not it, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, line 24, by adding at the end of the line the following:

"Provided, That in the event any allottee shall receive a patent in fee to an allotment of land in any lawfully constituted drainage district within the State of Oklahoma, before the United States shall have been wholly reimbursed as herein provided, the amount remaining unpaid shall become a first lien on such allotment, and the fact of such lien shall be recited on the face of each patent in fee issued and the amount of the lien set forth thereon, and the receipt of the Secretary of the Interior, or of the officer, agent, or employee duly authorized by him for that purpose, for the payment of the amount assessed against any allotment as herein provided, shall, when fully recorded by the recorder of deeds in the county wherein the land is located, operate as a satisfaction of such lien."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman showed me the amendment while I was sitting in my seat. My brain works a little bit differently when I am on my feet than when sitting down. This is purely a limitation on the two drainage districts, but the bill provides for drainage throughout the State. It seems to me it would be desirable to insert this amendment without the word "Provided" in it, after line 10, on page 4.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman thinks it would more properly go there, I have no objection to it.

Mr. MANN. It is simply a limitation on these two districts, and the gentleman wants it to apply anywhere.

Mr. FERRIS. Strike out the word "Provided" and offer the amendment at the end of line 10, page 4.

Mr. MANN. As a new paragraph.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 10, add the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] suggested another amendment, and I submitted it to the gentleman from Illinois, and I think perhaps there ought to be another one. On line 23, after the word "funds," the same line, strike out the words "in the United States Treasury," the thought being that the Indian funds might be on deposit in banks or might be individual funds; so it gives the Government three different avenues in which to get their money back.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, line 23, by inserting, after the word "funds," the words "belonging to."

On the same page, at the end of line 23 and the beginning of line 24, strike out the words "in the United States Treasury."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the amended sections of the bill.

Mr. MANN. What was the amendment you inserted after the words "funds"?

Mr. FERRIS. "Any funds belonging to the allottees."

Mr. MANN. The words "may have" ought to go out.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true.

The SPEAKER. What is the amendment?

Mr. FERRIS. In line 23, strike out the words "may have," in order to make proper sense.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "may have in the United States Treasury."

Mr. MANN. You just simply want the words "may have" stricken out?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; the other was already stricken out. This would make a repetition.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the amended Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, it is called to my attention that the title ought to be amended.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended according to the text of the bill.

There was no objection.

LIGHTING PINEY BRANCH ROAD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 21708) to authorize the lighting of Piney Branch Road from Georgia Avenue to Butternut Street.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to light and maintain the lights on Piney Branch Road from Georgia Avenue to Butternut Street.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the author of this bill some questions. Is it necessary to have an act of Congress every time you put lights on the streets in the city of Washington?

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. JOHNSON, the author of the bill, is not present. So I will reply. It seems so. It seems necessary either to have an act of Congress to light a street or change the boundary of a street.

Mr. CULLOP. It seems reasonable that you should have an act of Congress to change the boundaries of a street, but it seems to me there is some provision of Congress, or ought to be, at least, authorizing the authorities under an act of Congress to light the streets.

Mr. LOBECK. I will say that in the report on this bill, made by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, it is stated that the street was lighted for about 30 years.

Mr. CULLOP. How long is it since it has been lighted now?

Mr. LOBECK. Since February last.

Mr. CULLOP. What was the occasion of doing away with the lights since then?

Mr. LOBECK. Another street was laid out and they removed the lights to that street.

Mr. CULLOP. Did they get an act of Congress to do that?

Mr. LOBECK. No; the commissioners did it of their own accord.

Mr. CULLOP. Then it seems there is a precedent in which they lighted a new street without coming to Congress for an enactment.

Mr. LOBECK. The commissioners did that; yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOP. Then why can they not light this street without an act of Congress?

Mr. LOBECK. Because they will not do it.

Mr. CULLOP. Because they will not do it?

Mr. LOBECK. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. Then it seems to me it would be better to pass some act concerning the conduct of the commissioners than to pass an act to light the street. It would be more appropriate, I should think. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAY). Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LOBECK, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF PROCESS OR RENOVATED OR ADULTERATED BUTTER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 24828) to amend the law relative to manufacture and sale of process or renovated or adulterated butter.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act section 4 of the act of August 2, 1886 (24 Stat. L., 209), as amended by the act of May 9, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 194), defining butter, etc., be, and the same is hereby, amended so that where the words "Every person who sells adulterated butter shall be regarded as a dealer in adulterated butter" now appear in said section 4 shall, as amended, reads as follows:

"Every person who knowingly sells, or offers for sale, adulterated butter, knowing the same to be adulterated butter, shall be regarded as a dealer in adulterated butter."

And further, that the second clause of section 4 of chapter 784 of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 32, page 195, relating to the internal-revenue tax upon process or renovated butter and adulterated butter, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Manufacturers of process or renovated butter or adulterated butter shall pay a tax of $50 per year.

"Every person who engages in the production of process or renovated butter or adulterated butter as a business shall be considered to be a manufacturer thereof.

"Wholesale dealers in adulterated butter shall pay a tax of $480 per annum and retail dealers in adulterated butter shall pay a tax of $48 per annum.

"Every person who knowingly sells or offers for sale adulterated butter, knowing the same to be adulterated butter, in less quantities than 10 pounds at one time, shall be regarded as a retail dealer in adulterated butter.

"And sections 3232, 3233, 3234, 3235, 3236, 3237, 3238, 3239, 3240, 3241, and 3243 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are, so far as applicable, made to extend to and include and apply to the special taxes imposed by this section and to the person upon whom they are imposed."

SEC. 2. That all other acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice, for the reason that other Members who are interested equally with myself are absent, and it would not be fair to take up the bill in their absence. There are Members also who are better informed than I on certain questions involved in the bill, and they are absent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID] asks unanimous consent to pass the consideration of the bill without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I do not know whether I shall object or not; but, reserving the right to object, I would like to make a remark concerning the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to pass the bill over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. What position will that give this bill on the next unanimous-consent day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will retain its place on the calendar.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will it be the first bill on the calendar?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; some other matters have been passed over by unanimous consent without prejudice. It will be on the calendar.

Mr. BARTLETT. Objection now would take it off the calendar. Has it ever been on the calendar before?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has not. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I shall not object; but I hope some gentlemen will read it before it comes up again, and that some sections which ought to be amended will be amended——

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

UNRIGGED VESSELS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 4445, an act concerning unrigged vessels.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon affidavit by a reputable shipbuilder of the United States that an unrigged wooden vessel of the United States has been rebuilt, giving the date and place of such rebuilding, is sound and free from rotten or doted wood in structural parts, properly fastened and calked and in strength and seaworthiness as good as new, the Commissioner of Navigation shall include in the List of Merchant Vessels a notation to that effect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the following committee amendments:

In line 3 insert the word "a" after the word "by," and make the word "shipbuilders," in the same line, singular instead of plural.

In line 4, after the word "that," insert the word "an." Make the word "vessels," in the same line, singular instead of plural. In the same line insert the words "of the United States" after the word "vessel." In the same line change the word "have" to "has."

In line 5 change the word "are" to the word "is."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BOARD OF REGENTS, SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 101) to appoint Andrew D. White a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in the class other than Members of Congress, shall be filled by the reappointment of Andrew D. White, a citizen of New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The Senate joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 94) providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents in the Smithsonian Institution in the class other than Members of Congress.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in the class other than Members of Congress, caused by the resignation of James B. Angell, of Michigan, be filled by the appointment of Charles W. Fairbanks, of Indiana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by inserting in line 6, after the name "Fairbanks," the words "a citizen."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, page 1, line 6, after the word "Fairbanks," the words "a citizen."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amended Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

COMPENSATION FOR SUPERINTENDENTS IN NATIONAL CEMETERIES.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to recur to the bill (H. R. 1739) to amend section 4875, Revised Statutes, providing compensation for superintendents of national cemeteries, passed without prejudice this morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to return to the bill he mentions, passed without prejudice this morning, of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1739) to amend section 4875 of the Revised Statutes, providing compensation for superintendents of national cemeteries.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is fair to ask to take up a bill of that sort in the absence of Members——

Mr. FOSTER. It was only passed over for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois object?

Mr. MANN. I object to its being taken up at this time. It is on the calendar and will stay there. I am only objecting to recurring to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects to the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. MANN. It is not before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman objects to the request to recur to it.

Mr. MANN. I object to going back to it and taking it up out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the next bill.

SALE OF LANDS, COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 338) authorizing the sale of certain lands in the Colville Indian Reservation to the town of Okanogan, State of Washington, for public park purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted and conveyed, for public park purposes, to the town of Okanogan, county of Okanogan, State of Washington, a municipal corporation, the following-described lands, or so much thereof as said town may desire, to wit: All that portion of lot 8 of section 17, township 23 north, range 26 east of the Willamette meridian, containing 47.35 acres.

SEC. 2. That the said conveyance shall be made of the said lands to the said town by the Secretary of the Interior upon the payment by the said town for the said lands, or such portion thereof as it may select, of such sum as may be fixed by the appraisement hereafter to be made under the act entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of surplus or unallotted lands of the diminished Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1906, and patent issued to the said town for the said lands selected, to have and to hold for public park purposes, subject to the existing laws and regulations concerning public parks, and that the grant hereby made shall not include any lands which at the date of the issuance of patent shall be covered by a valid, existing, bona fide right or claim initiated under the laws of the United States: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, and other mineral deposits that may be found in the lands so granted, and all necessary use of the lands for extracting the same: And provided further, That the said town shall not have the right to sell or convey the lands herein granted, or any parts thereof, or to devote the same to any other purpose than as hereinbefore described, and that if the said lands shall not be used as public parks the same, or such parts thereof not so used, shall revert to the United States: And provided further, That the lands conveyed to the town of Okanogan, as authorized herein, shall be subject for a period of 25 years to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the bill in section 1 grants and conveys certain land to the town of Okanogan. A bill of that sort enacted into law is an absolute conveyance, and requires nothing further. That is what section 1 does. After section 1 is passed the land is conveyed. Then the bill goes ahead in section 2 and provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall make a conveyance upon certain terms.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman not consent that this go over until the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is here?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of the bill be passed without prejudice in the absence of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, ST. LOUIS, MO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6925) to authorize the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River near the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River, from a point to be located by said company and approved by the War Department, suitable to the interests of navigation, between the Eads Bridge in St. Louis, Mo., and the Alton Bridge at Alton, Ill., to a point in the State of Illinois, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "railroad."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by inserting, on page 1, line 7, after the word "point," the words "on the west side of said river."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CULLOP, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CAPTAIN AND CREW OF CUNARD STEAMSHIP "CARPATHIA."

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 306) to provide for the award of medals of honor to the captain, officers, and crew of the Cunard steamship Carpathia.

The Clerk read the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this resolution is on the calendar and provides for medals of honor to be presented to Capt. Rostron and the officers and crew of his vessel. There is also a bill on the calendar, or a resolution, carrying the thanks of Congress and naming Capt. Rostron and generally the officers of the vessel. While the Carpathia and those in charge of her did a very noble thing, it does not seem to me that there is any occasion for Congress to pass two resolutions upon the subject. To one of them, if it comes up by unanimous consent, I shall object. I am perfectly willing to give my friend from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] his choice as to which one he will pass by unanimous consent. Of course he can pass the other one in any way he desires.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois will recall that the other joint resolution is a Senate joint resolution.

Mr. MANN. That is true.

Mr. ALEXANDER. And it provides that the thanks of Congress shall be extended to Capt. Rostron.

Mr. MANN. And the officers of his vessel.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I really think that is the resolution that we ought to pass. It is not on this calendar, and I hope to have it passed under the suspension of the rules.

Mr. MANN. It does not seem to me that there will be very much chance to pass any bill under suspension of the rules to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, pending an arrangement in respect to the matter, I will ask unanimous consent that consideration of the resolution be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that consideration of the resolution be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR STEAMER "OCEANA."

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5207) to provide an American register for the steamer Oceana.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built steamer Oceana, when owned by the United States Marine Exposition Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York, to be registered as a vessel of the United States, and upon application of the owner to change the name of said steamer: Provided, That said steamer shall not have the right to engage in the coastwise trade or enjoy the tolls in the use of the Panama Canal that may be limited by law to American-built ships engaged in the coastwise trade: Provided further, That all repairs or alterations made upon the said vessel shall be made in the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Certainly. I withhold the objection for a few moments.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill. It passed the Senate without objection. It has the indorsement of the Department of Commerce and Labor and is reported from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries with one amendment, striking out the words "the United States Marine Exposition Co." and inserting the words "a citizen or citizens of the United States or by," and striking out the words, in line 7, "State of New York" and inserting the words "United States, or of any State thereof."

The bill was introduced in the Senate by Senator ROOT. It was introduced in the House by myself. Before I introduced the bill I told the gentleman who brought it to me that I would insist that this vessel should not be admitted to the coastwise trade, and that proviso was written into the House bill, and the Senate has added one other proviso, that the repairs or alterations made upon the vessel shall be made in the United States. The purpose of the parties is to hold a marine exposition of the industries of the United States, and to visit various ports in South America first and perhaps after that other ports in the world. Since the original bill was introduced the United States Marine Exposition Co. undertook to buy an American-built ship, and I withheld a report upon the bill for nearly a month in order that they might effect that purchase, as we believed it would be more consistent in making an exhibit of American manufactures to do it in an American-built ship.

Since the disaster to the Titanic, the Kroonland or the Finland, one or the other of which vessels the company undertook to purchase, has been found to be beyond their reach. At least the company has not been able to effect the purchase. Another company was made up of the owners of the Oceana, whose purpose it is to carry out this exposition in the event the other company fails, and not wishing to engage in any controversy between them or to show any partiality to one or the other, we simply amended the bill and provided that this vessel might be registered for the foreign trade and leave it open to purchase by one company or for use by the other to carry out this purpose. The bill has the indorsement of the President and of the Department of State and of the Department of Commerce and Labor, and I hope under the circumstances that my colleague on the committee, the ranking minority member, will not object to its consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects, and the bill will be stricken from the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

IMPORTATION OF GOODS BY COMBINATION, CONSPIRACY, TRUST, ETC.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25002), to amend section 73 and section 76 of the act of August 27, 1894.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25002) to amend section 73 and section 76 of the act of August 27, 1894.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 73 and section 76 of the act of August 27, 1894, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 73. That every combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, or contract is hereby declared to be contrary to public policy, illegal, and void when the same is made by or between two or more persons or corporations either of whom, as agent or principal, is engaged in importing any article from any foreign country into the United States, and when such combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, or contract is intended to operate in restraint of lawful trade, or free competition in lawful trade or commerce, or to increase the market price in any part of the United States of any article or articles imported or intended to be imported into the United States, or of any manufacture into which such imported article enters or is intended to enter. Every person who is or shall hereafter be engaged in the importation of goods or any commodity from any foreign country in violation of this section of this act, or who shall combine or conspire with another to violate the same, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof in any court of the United States such person shall be fined in a sum not less than $100 and not exceeding $5,000, and shall be further punished by imprisonment, in the discretion of the court, for a term not less than 3 months nor exceeding 12 months."

"SEC. 76. That any property owned under any contract or by any combination, or pursuant to any conspiracy (and being the subject thereof) mentioned in section 73 of this act, and being in the course of transportation from a foreign country into any State, or from one State to another, or to or from a Territory or the District of Columbia, shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized and condemned by like proceedings as those provided by law for the forfeiture, seizure, and condemnation of property imported into the United States contrary to law."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know what the bill is.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, this bill reenacts section 73 and section 76 of the act of August 27, 1894, with but slight changes. It adds the words in section 73 "as agent or principal." It adds the words in section 76 as follows, "from a foreign country into any State or." As the bill now reads it provides that the property mentioned being the subject of an illegal combination can be seized by the Government as it is being transferred from one State to another. That is the law now. The intention of the law as it was enacted was to apply to importations. There is not any question about that. This adds these words that I have just read, so that there will be no doubt but that it will apply to the property not only when it is going from one State to another, but when it is going into any State from a foreign country.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. This applies simply to bringing goods from foreign countries?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. It does not apply to interstate commerce?

Mr. MANN. The existing law applies to interstate commerce.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. This is to leave it so that there will be no doubt that it shall apply just as well when goods are coming in from a foreign country to a State as when the goods are going from one State to another.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read the committee amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "be" insert the words "and the same is hereby."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say I do not believe anybody but the gentleman from Nebraska could pass through the House by unanimous consent a bill amending in very important particulars very important provisions in a very important tariff law.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. NORRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REPEAL OF SECTION 4716, REVISED STATUTES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 18434) to repeal section 4716 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4716 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The committee amendment was read as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

"Provided, however, That no name of any pensioner which may have been dropped from the rolls under the provisions of this section shall be restored thereto, nor that of any person whose application for pension has been rejected, or who may hereafter apply for pension, shall be placed thereon prior to the date of filing an application in the Bureau of Pensions after the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to explain what is meant by this bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I will do so as well as I can. Mr. Speaker, this bill to repeal section 4716 of the Revised Statutes, of course, has to be considered by the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. It appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that a bill of this kind and of its nature and purposes ought more properly to be considered upon the floor of the House under the Calendar of Unanimous Consent than on any other calendar provided for under the rules of the House. This bill, Mr. Speaker, has a long history, or rather the statute to which it refers. It is statute 4716 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and is as follows:

No money on account of pensions shall be paid to any person, or to the widow, children, or heirs of any deceased person, who in any manner voluntarily engaged in, or aided or abetted, the late rebellion against the authority of the United States.

This statute, Mr. Speaker, had its origin or beginning during the period of the great conflict between the States of the North and the South, and was enacted by the Congress in 1862 as a proviso to section 4 of the act approved July 14, 1862. This section and its repeal has received very earnest and careful consideration and thought by a subcommittee of the Committee on Pensions after full deliberation concerning the history of the act proposed to be repealed and the propriety and justice of repealing it. No member of the subcommittee or anyone of the Pensions Committee said that section ought longer to remain among the statute laws of our Government.

Mr. Speaker, I regret very much indeed that a very distinguished Member of this House, a member of the Pensions Committee, and in my opinion justly and worthily classed among the ablest lawyers on the floor of this House, from the State of Rhode Island [Mr. UTTER], is not present. He was on that subcommittee and gave this matter very careful study and attention, and a bill was reported by the subcommittee unanimously and by the committee unanimously reported favorably to the House. I am aware—yes, know—that ordinarily the consideration of a bill or the repeal of a section of this kind years ago would have been considered as having a dynamite quality, but it is a fact known to every man here that over 50 years have transpired since this section was first enacted by the Congress of the United States. The world has never witnessed in the same period greater developments from every standpoint of life, socially and materially. I will first read to you in connection with this bill the report that came from the Department of the Interior:

It may be said * * * that practically the only class of persons who would be benefited by the passage of bill H. R. 18434 would be those persons who, having had a prior service in the Confederate army or navy, enlisted in the military or naval service of the United States subsequent to January 1, 1865. The exact number of such enlistments is not known, but it is of record that the Fifth and Sixth Regiments of United States Volunteers, made up of prisoners of war, were recruited and mustered into the service of the United States subsequent to January 1, 1865. There were doubtless many individual enlistments subsequent to that time, and as the provisions of the joint resolution of July 1, 1902 (32 S. L., 750) did not remove the limitation imposed by section 4716, Revised Statutes United States, as to such persons, they would be benefited in some degree at least by the enactment of the bill submitted.

Mr. Speaker, it is undoubtedly a fact that in effect section 4716 of the Revised Statutes of the United States has been repeatedly modified, altered, and changed by various acts of legislation on the part of Congress in the last 35 years. This section, as I said in the beginning of my remarks, in substance appeared in the Statutes of the United States in 1862, and this section, though worded differently, is a proviso to the same section which was, in its present form, made section 23 of the act of March 3, 1873. At the present time it stands, as its number indicates, a section of the Revised Statutes. This section, as originally drawn, was very sweeping in its provisions, but Congress has, at various times, exempted from its provisions certain possible pensioners, as follows:

By an act approved March 9, 1878, dependents of soldiers of the War of 1812 and the Indian wars were exempt.

By an act approved January 29, 1887, dependents of the soldiers who served in the Mexican War were exempt.

By an act approved July 27, 1892, the dependents of soldiers who served in the Black Hawk War, the Creek War, the Cherokee disturbances, and the Seminole War were exempt. Later this exemption was extended to the veterans of all the other Indian wars and to the survivors of the Texas Volunteers and their widows.

By the act of March 3, 1877, all those who voluntarily served in the Army of the United States, and by the act of August 1, 1892, all those who voluntarily served in the Navy of the United States, and who, during such service, contracted disability, were exempt.

By the act of April 18, 1900, the dependents of soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the War with Spain were exempt.

By a joint resolution approved July 1, 1902, construing "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who were incapacitated for the performance of manual labor," which act had been approved June 27, 1890, the benefits of said act were extended to all persons, and the widows and minor children of all deceased persons subject to the limitations of said act, who had served for 90 days in the military or naval service of the United States during the late War of the Rebellion, and the resolution amended section 4716 to comply therewith, except in the case of persons who served in the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Regiments, United States Volunteer Infantry, who had a prior service in the Confederate army or navy, and who had enlisted in said regiments while confined as prisoners under a stipulation that they were not to be pensionable under the laws of the United States, and those who having had prior service in the Confederate army or navy had enlisted in the military or naval service of the United States after the 1st day of January, 1865.

Gentlemen, you have heard frequently of these regiments. These Confederate regiments were prisoners of war. They were put in certain prisons—most of them, I think—and they took the oath of allegiance, and, as I am now advised, many of them afterwards were given pensions and then for some reason they were taken away from them, as I am informed. Now, this bill H. R. 18344 has but little meaning and carries but little meaning with it. It is but a memory connected with a period of our history that we all would be glad to forget. It is there as one of a batch of statutes—I am not offering to condemn it; I do not feel that way about it—which were made at that time when passion prevailed. It has been gradually repealed and modified and changed until now it has but little effect. It ought to be repealed. It is just such a bill, having in view the repeal of this section, that ought to be and will be repealed by the unanimous consent of every Member of Congress present.

And just as the Secretary of the Interior said, there is a certain class of men that would be benefited.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly I will.

Mr. MANN. As I understand the gentleman's statement, the law now would forbid the payment of pensions to any person or the widow of any person who served in the Confederate Army?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir; that is the meaning of it.

Mr. MANN. This bill is designed to permit those men who served in the Union Army, but who previously had had service in the Confederate Army, or their widows, to draw pensions?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. How many people is it estimated it would apply to in the United States, so far as anyone can tell?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have not accurately secured that information and neither can the Secretary of the Interior give it to me.

Mr. MANN. I notice in the report it is estimated there would not be more than a thousand pension cases.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; that is it; but it could not be definitely ascertained.

Mr. MANN. In one place in the proviso which the gentleman has inserted it reads that it shall not be applicable to anyone who may hereafter apply for a pension prior to the date of filing an application with the Bureau of Pensions.

I do not see the force of the word "hereafter." I suppose it is not desired to have this bill apply to anyone so as to place their name on the pension roll before they make application under this act?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think your construction is right. I do not think there is any meaning in that.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, really this is wiping out, so far as we are concerned——

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is the last vestige of war and blood and bad sectional feeling that goes.

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

OBSERVANCE OF MEMORIAL DAY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (H. J. Res. 321) relative to observance of Memorial Day.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House joint resolution (No. 321) relative to observance of Memorial Day.

Resolved, etc., That as a tribute to the memory of those who fought and those who died in defense of their country, the flags on all Government reservations and property shall be lowered to half-mast between 12 o'clock noon and 12 o'clock and 5 minutes postmeridian on each Memorial Day hereafter, and that wherever practicable bugles shall sound taps, bells shall be tolled, and a salute of 13 guns shall be fired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, who has charge of this bill? What is the point of ordering a salute of 13 guns to be fired on every Government reservation?

Mr. SLAYDEN. It costs something.

Mr. FRENCH. I reported the resolution from the committee. The whole purpose of the resolution is to contribute in the ways indicated to the fitting observance of Memorial Day, and the committee was of the opinion that it should pass in the way it was introduced, which is in line, as I understand it, with the desire of patriotic bodies throughout the country.

Mr. MANN. If you could provide for the firing of 13 or any other number of guns loaded at some of these automobile races on Memorial Day I should approve of the bill. I am not sure that I approve it as it stands. Does the gentleman want to dispose of it now?

Mr. FRENCH. I would have no objection.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman want to dispose of the matter now or have it passed over?

Mr. FRENCH. I would be glad to have it passed over, or be glad to see an amendment in line with the gentleman's suggestion approved.

Mr. GARNER. In regard to the automobiles?

Mr. FRENCH. I think I would go as far as he on that question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. FRENCH. I ask unanimous consent to have it passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman ought to make such a request before I object to the consideration of the bill.

CHECKS FOR DUTIES ON IMPORTS, ETC.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 24703) to extend the authority to receive certified checks drawn on national and State banks and trust companies in payment for duties on imports and internal taxes and all public dues.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be lawful for collecting officers to receive certified checks drawn on national and State banks and trust companies, during such time and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, in payment for duties on imports, internal taxes, and all public dues, including special customs deposits; and the act of March 2, 1911, entitled "An act to authorize the receipt of certified checks for duties on imports and internal taxes," is hereby amended accordingly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question. This is applicable to nearly everything. What is it not applicable to?

Mr. PETERS. It is not applicable now to some 20 or 25 items in the Treasurer's report, on which there was collected between fifty and sixty million dollars last year as sales from public lands, consular fees, customs fees and fines, forest-reserve fund, sales of Government property, and a number of items, none of which amount to a very large sum, but which occasion trouble and inconvenience to the Treasury Department.

Mr. MANN. The act of 1911 permitted what is proposed to be done here as to the payment of internal-revenue taxes, customs duties——

Mr. PETERS. And nothing else.

Mr. MANN. And that has worked so well that the Treasury Department desires the law made applicable to the items of all money that goes to the Government?

Mr. PETERS. That is the purpose. It has been of so great a convenience to the people who pay revenue duties and internal taxes, as well as to the Treasury Department, that it is proposed to extend the act to all items.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

QUITCLAIM OF INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES IN CERTAIN LANDS IN HAMPDEN COUNTY, MASS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11933) authorizing the quitclaiming of the interest of the United States in certain land situated in Hampden County, Mass.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed by quitclaim deed for and on behalf of the United States to convey to John D. McKnight and William H. McKnight or their heirs and assigns forever all right, title, and interest it may have in and to all of that plat or parcel of ground described as containing 40 rods of land, together with a right of way, "situated in Springfield in Hatch's pasture, so called, near Garden Brook," Hampden County, Mass., and acquired by the United States through the deed of Solomon Hatch, dated September 14, 1825, recorded September 15, 1825, in book 75 at page 186 of the records of Hampden County.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF ARTS AND LETTERS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 18841) incorporating the National Institute of Arts and Letters.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Brooks Adams, of Massachusetts; Charles Francis Adams, of Massachusetts; Henry Adams, of the District of Columbia; George Ade, of Indiana; Henry M. Alden, of New Jersey; Richard Aldrich, of New York; James Lane Allen, of New York; Simeon E. Baldwin, of Connecticut; Arlo Bates, of Massachusetts; Robert Bridges, of New York; W. C. Smith, of Connecticut; F. Van der Stucken, of Ohio; Arthur Whiting, of New York; and their successors duly chosen, are hereby incorporated, constituted, and declared to be a body corporate of the District of Columbia, by the name of the National Institute of Arts and Letters.

SEC. 2. That the purposes of this corporation are and shall be the furtherance of the interests of literature and the fine arts.

SEC. 3. That the National Institute of Arts and Letters shall consist of not more than 250 regular members, and the said corporation hereby constituted shall have power to make by-laws, and rules, and regulations; to fill all vacancies created by death, resignation, or otherwise; to provide for the election of foreign, domestic, or honorary associate members, and the division of such members into classes, and all other matters needful or usual in such institutions.

SEC. 4. That the National Institute of Arts and Letters shall hold an annual meeting at such place in the United States as may be designated and shall make an annual report to the Congress to be filed with the Librarian of Congress.

SEC. 5. That the National Institute of Arts and Letters be, and the same is hereby, authorized and empowered to receive bequests and donations of real and personal property and to hold the same in trust, and to invest and reinvest the same for the furtherance of the interests of literature and the fine arts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Texas if there is any limitation in the bill as to the amount of the property the corporation may hold, and whether if they acquire property it will be taxable?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I say with perfect frankness, as the gentleman from Illinois probably knows, that I did not write the bill. The bill was brought to the committee and approved by the members of the committee. There is nothing in it that I can see that exempts property from taxation.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that bills of this character have quite frequently been referred to the Committee on the Library, of which the gentleman is a member, but recently some of them, I think at the suggestion of the Committee on the Library, have been sent to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not recall any instance of that kind.

Mr. MANN. The bill to incorporate the American Hospital of Paris—did not that go to the Committee on the Judiciary? And there was one the other day taken away from the Committee on the Library and sent to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That was an appropriation bill for a building.

Mr. MANN. Congress ought to have some policy in reference to incorporating institutions of this character, and not put in one bill a provision limiting the life of a corporation and not in another; to put in one bill a limit to the amount of property they can hold and not in another; to put in one bill a provision that the property that they may acquire shall be exempt from taxation and not put it in another. I shall make no objection to this bill, but I think the gentleman and his committee ought to be careful in that particular.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, all the property that this association expects to have is such as it will get by gift, and it is not likely that under such circumstances their coffers will ever overflow.

Mr. MANN. No one knows how much property a corporation may acquire which has no limit on its life and practically no limit on its purpose. I shall offer an amendment to this bill, that Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. There is no objection to that amendment. There is one other amendment, Mr. Speaker, that will have to be offered. Since the bill was presented and recommended by the committee one of the distinguished gentlemen whom it was proposed to associate has been drowned, Mr. Millet, of New York, and his name will have to be taken out.

Mr. MANN. I see the name of one distinguished gentleman in here as of New York, and I am quite sure that he is of Chicago now. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out the name of Francis D. Millet, of New York, at the bottom of page 5 and the top of page 6 of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pages 5 and 6, strike out the name of Francis D. Millet, of New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by inserting as a new section the words "The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new section, on page 8, after line 5, the following:
"SEC. 6. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by inserting the words "Albert Jaeger, of New York," in line 18, page 5, after the words "New York" where they occur the second time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What is his particular line of work?

Mr. CANNON. He is a sculptor. He is the artist who designed the Steuben statue in Lafayette Square.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 18, page 5, after the words "New York" where they occur the second time, insert the words "Albert Jaeger, of New York."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SLAYDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], that in order to expedite the passage of the sundry civil appropriation bill he desires to have the House meet to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock, and then for the balance of the two weeks ahead of us I think the business of the House is not such that we need to meet before 12 o'clock. I therefore ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 10 o'clock, and that after to-morrow, and until otherwise ordered, the daily hour of meeting shall be 12 o'clock noon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 10 o'clock, and that after that, and until otherwise ordered, the daily hour of meeting shall be 12 o'clock noon. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REPAYMENT OF CERTAIN WAR-REVENUE TAXES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 24699) extending the time for the repayment of certain war-revenue taxes erroneously collected.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims for the refunding of any internal tax alleged to have been erroneously or illegally assessed or collected under the provisions of section 29 of the act of Congress approved July, 1, 1898, known as the war-revenue tax, or of any sums alleged to have been excessive, or in any manner wrongfully collected under the provisions of said act may be presented to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue on or before the 1st day of January, 1914, and not thereafter.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to such claimants as have presented or shall hereafter so present their claims, and shall establish the erroneous or illegal assessment and collection, of any sums paid by them or on their account or in their interest to the United States under the provisions of the act aforesaid.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I understand there are a lot of private claims pending now which, if this bill does not pass, are likely to take up a good deal of time on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; and I think the gentleman knows also that they are not likely to be reached at all.

Mr. MANN. Oh, we will reach them this week.

Mr. AINEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill originates with the Committee on Claims, before whom there are pending a number of private bills for the refund of taxes which had been erroneously collected by the Government under the war-revenue act of 1898. It was decided by the Committee on Claims, rather than report these bills severally and favorably, that a bill of this nature should be introduced whereby the statute of limitations now barring the repayment should be removed, and authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund the several amounts to claimants upon proofs to be furnished by them. This bill was introduced, and was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman has nothing to do with the reference of the bill.

Mr. AINEY. No.

Mr. MANN. I have not been able to get through my noddle as yet what jurisdiction of the bill the Committee on the Judiciary had. The bill should certainly have been referred to either the Committee on Claims or the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. AINEY. Surely the gentleman does not purpose asking that question of me, after his experience in the House and his knowledge of my lack of experience.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I merely asked a question for the purpose of attracting the attention of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. AINEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a statement more fully regarding these cases. Under the war-revenue act of 1898 there was a provision that inheritances and legacies in excess of $10,000 should be subject to a tax. Through a misinterpretation on the part of the department, individual legacies less than $10,000 were improperly taxed. That is, when the sum total of several individual legacies or inheritances in any estate aggregated more than $10,000 the department held that the estate was subject to the tax. The Supreme Court subsequently, in Knowlton v. Moore (178 U. S., 41), decided that where there were five legacies, say, each less than $5,000, they were not subject to the tax, even though in the aggregate they amounted to more than $10,000. Prior to this judicial interpretation there had been paid to the Government under this act taxes upon legacies and inheritances amounting to less than $5,000. When the case of Knowlton v. Moore had become known the statute of limitations had run and claimants had no opportunity to recover, and this bill is to relieve that situation. Not until the decision of the Supreme Court was rendered was there any knowledge on the part of these people who had paid these taxes on legacies of less than $10,000 that there was no liability. There are about 90 claimants and some 15 or 20 bills, largely coming from the Senate, some originating in the House. It was thought best that these be cared for by a general bill removing the statute of limitations.

Mr. BUTLER. Has not the Treasury Department reported favorably upon this measure?

Mr. AINEY. It has, and it has recommended that this bill be passed rather than separate bills as introduced.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AINEY. Certainly.

Mr. EDWARDS. What is the aggregate amount of these claims?

Mr. AINEY. It is impossible to say accurately, but not to exceed $50,000. There are bills now pending aggregating $28,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. AINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I hope this bill will pass. It is merely an act of ordinary justice. The Senate has already passed several of the private bills for the refund of these taxes. As stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. AINEY] it was decided by the Supreme Court that the tax had been erroneously collected. A large number of people were unaware of the decision of the Supreme Court and consequently failed to put in their claims within the time prescribed by section 3228 of the Revised Statutes. Others did put in their claims in time, and those have been paid. The greater portion of this tax that was erroneously collected has been refunded, but only those who were unaware of the decision of the Supreme Court in time to make their claim within the provisions of section 3228 of the Revised Statutes, which requires a claim for refund to be made within two years, now ask that the tax be refunded.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I did not object to the consideration of this bill, but it is one of those pestiferous bills which, while it originated with the committee, is the result of the activity of claim agents. Congress passed the act of 1898. It was intended that there should be a payment on every legacy where the estate was over $10,000. That was the understanding here in the House and in the Senate. Some enterprising claim attorney took the case to the court, and insisted that the act did not require the payment of any tax unless each legacy amounted to $10,000. When we passed the act we thought that we were exempting from taxation an estate of $10,000 which was being devised. The court through some process of reasoning, which very likely was correct from our language, held that it could not be applied as against any legacy which amounted to less than $10,000. Before that decision was reached the time in which you could file claims for refunds had passed. Then the enterprising claim attorneys throughout the country got busy and hunted up all the claims they could find of cases where money had been collected on legacies of less than $10,000. They commenced to have bills introduced and corresponded with the people who paid the tax, which they ought to have paid, and which was collected and which ought not to be paid back, and got these people to appeal to Congress to refund the tax illegally and erroneously collected under a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. They now come along and ask for a general bill. Of course, this means the presentation to claim agents or attorneys of probably 50 per cent of the amount that we will pay without any real justice at all. Nobody likes to pay a tax. People get it back if they can. We intended the tax to be paid. It was paid. We pay it back. There are a thousand such cases and more pending around Congress now not covered by this decision, but on all fours as far as reasoning is concerned.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the words "July 1" and insert the words "June 13."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 8, strike out the word "the" and insert the word "such."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 9, strike out the word "of."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. AINEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COMPENSATION FOR SUPERINTENDENTS OF NATIONAL CEMETERIES.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to recur to the bill H. R. 1739, which was passed over without prejudice this morning.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1739) to amend section 4875 of the Revised Statutes, to provide a compensation for superintendents of national cemeteries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN REGISTRY FOR STEAMER "DAMARA."

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 22907) to provide American register for the steamer Damara.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed to cause the steamer Damara, rebuilt at San Francisco, Cal., from the wreck of the British steamer Damara, wrecked in the harbor of San Francisco and abandoned by her owners as a total wreck, to be registered as a vessel of the United States whenever it shall be shown to the Commissioner of Navigation that the cost of rebuilding said vessel in the United States amounted to three times the actual cost of said wreck and that the vessel is wholly owned by citizens of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the Senate has passed a bill——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I said I did object.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if he will withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am not personally interested in this bill, but Mr. POST has written me a note saying that he is confined to his bed on account of sickness to-day and could not be here, and asked me to make a statement for him in reference to this bill, if the gentleman from Washington will allow me. It seems that this vessel was wrecked going out of the harbor of San Francisco, and I wish to state, so the RECORD may show, that the committee gives the following reasons as to why this bill should pass:

The committee believes she should be granted an American register, because—

(1) She is, in reality, an American-built vessel.

(2) No American shipbuilding industry has been or will be deprived of a single dollar's worth of business or profit.

(3) Her gross tonnage constitutes but one twenty-six hundredth part of the gross tonnage of American registered vessels with which she would come in competition.

(4) The building of nine-tenths of a vessel in the United States should be encouraged, as well as the building of a vessel entire.

(5) There have been presented to the committee petitions representing, in addition to the Union Iron Works Co., every other steel-ship builder on the California coast, praying that favorable action be taken on this bill.

(6) The owners of 75 per cent of the vessels on the Pacific coast have petitioned Congress to grant a register to the Damara.

(7) It appears that the repair account and other items making up the record in his case are bona fide, in no manner inflated, and the prices paid or charged for labor, dry dockage, and material were in every case the current and reasonable charges therefor.

(8) It clearly appears and is uniformly conceded that the Damara presents the most meritorious case ever coming before Congress in a similar application, and the admission of this vessel to American registry is in all ways desirable, and, while increasing the American merchant marine to the extent of the Damara's tonnage, will work a hardship to no American industry.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there was a time when we had on the statute books of this country a law that authorized a foreign-built vessel which was wrecked on our coasts to be admitted to American registry, providing a certain portion of the ship was rebuilt in this country—a very much less proportion than that which constitutes the repairs on this vessel—and when that law was repealed in 1906 it was not the intention of Congress to foreclose the right absolutely of repairing a vessel wrecked on the American coast and giving the American shipbuilding yards the right to repair such a vessel and put it back into commission, but it was stated when the bill went through Congress that it was better to leave the matter optional with Congress as to whether the vessel should be admitted to American registry or not. Of course, if Congress takes the position that a vessel should not be admitted where nine-tenths of it is rebuilt in American yards after registry, then it practically takes the position that no wreck on American coasts of a foreign-built vessel can be repaired by an American citizen, because he can not use it under American registry. I think it is really a very meritorious bill and one that should be passed. Of course, the gentleman from Washington has a right to exercise the privilege of objecting to the bill; but I will ask him, as Mr. POST is not here—I would like to see the bill go through this evening—if he will withdraw his objection, and if he does not, I will ask him to withdraw it so that I may ask unanimous consent to allow it to remain on the calendar, so the gentleman who is interested in it may have an opportunity to be present.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I feel inclined to grant the gentleman's request and let the bill go over, but there is this difference in regard to this bill from the ordinary bill which goes on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. When it was placed on this calendar it was well understood by the gentleman placing it there that there was strong opposition to the bill. It was opposed in the committee, and there are a number of men on both sides of this aisle who are opposed from principle to admitting any of these foreign-built wrecks to American registry. The Merchant Marine Committee, I believe it was, in the Sixtieth Congress, by resolution introduced by a distinguished gentleman, now chairman of that committee, Judge ALEXANDER, went on record as saying that they would not consider any more of this class of bills. The reason of it was this, that there had grown up a custom in the country among certain wrecking companies and certain attorneys to speculate upon their influence with Congress, and in this particular bill I have no doubt but what the same thing has been done. I happen to know of my own personal knowledge that a certain attorney of this city, and not one of those now representing those interested in the bill, was offered $10,000 if he secured the passage of this bill through Congress. Now, this bill in itself possesses considerable merit, and if you could stop it here I probably would not object, but the fact that this bill has been favorably considered has already caused several others to be introduced. Things will soon go back to where they were before, when they amounted to almost a national scandal, when certain attorneys and wrecking companies of this country were letting it be understood that if they took charge of one of these wreck bills that by certain influence which they could wield they could get the bill passed. This is why the committee went upon record as it did, and I think it would be a very bad policy to change that action of the committee. While this bill has been before the House before on this calendar, I will not object to its going over, although it seems to me it would be just as well to let it go off this calendar, as the gentleman who has charge of it knows it will be objected to. But under the circumstances I will consent to its going over.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who is interested in this bill and who has charge of it is sick at home in his room, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the bill may be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SALE OF CERTAIN LANDS TO PENDLETON, OREG.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3203) to authorize the sale of certain lands within the Umatilla Indian Reservation to the city of Pendleton Oreg.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to sell and convey to the city of Pendleton, a municipal corporation in Umatilla County, State of Oregon, under such terms, conditions, and regulations as he may prescribe, not to exceed 200 acres of unallotted tribal Indian lands within the Umatilla Reservation at not less than its appraised value, said lands to be used by the city of Pendleton, Oreg., for municipal waterworks purposes: Provided, That the net proceeds from the sale of said lands shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Umatilla Tribe of Indians and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "annum," strike out all down to and including the word "Interior" in line 5.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand from the reading of this case that the Indians themselves have been opposed to the sale of this land—200 acres—that they want to keep it themselves. The Senate in its bill inserted a provision that the net proceeds of the lands when sold should be paid to the Indians or used for their benefit, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. The House bill proposes to strike out the provision and sell this land against the protest of the Indians and deposit the money in the Treasury, depending upon what Congress shall do hereafter. I will say to the gentleman frankly that I think if they are going to take this land away from the Indians and sell it they are entitled to get the money for it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman the last clause of the bill makes a provision for the payment to the Indians in this language:

Provided, That the net proceeds from the sale of said lands shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Umatilla Tribe of Indians and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum.

Now, our committee struck out this language:

And may hereafter be paid to the said tribe of Indians pro rata or used for their benefit, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

We struck that out for the reason that we did not think it right for Congress to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of the proceeds of money arising from the sale of this land and pay it out for the benefit of the Indians, because it should be put in the United States Treasury and held there for the Indians subject to the future action of Congress.

Mr. MANN. The Indians were opposed to this bill, and stated that they did believe that to take the land described in this bill was a violation of the treaty and agreements with them; that they had very little land left, and they needed all they had. And they especially objected because, as originally introduced, it was proposed that the money be deposited in the Treasury. Then the Indians said, "We lose the land and we will never get the benefit of the money."

Now, I feel very much as the Indians do about it. [Laughter.] When you want to take this land away from them, which they say they want, and do not want to sell, but want to use it, give them the money.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Secretary makes this statement in his letter to the Senate indorsing this bill, viz:

On January 18, 1912, a council of the Umatilla Indians was held for the purpose of ascertaining their wishes with regard to the disposal of lands within their reservation to the city of Pendleton, and, as the inclosed copy of the council proceedings will show, the Indians objected to the proposed sale. Their objections, however, are due principally to the fact that they do not desire to see any more tribal lands pass from the ownership of the Indians.

Now, that is their only objection. It has been our policy for years to allot Indian lands to individual Indians and to sell the remainder. The Indians are not usually consulted as to what shall be done with the land. They are our wards, and Congress only can dispose of their property. This tract of land is land adjoining the city of Pendleton, and is necessary for the use of that city for waterworks, and we are permitting the Secretary by this bill to sell these lands of the Indians to the city for that purpose. They will get a better price from the city than from any other party. The Indians can not use the land; it is not fit to use for agricultural purposes, because it can not be irrigated. It is upon a mountainous part of the reservation and at the present time not used by the Indians for any purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. How much land have these Indians there?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. One hundred and ninety-nine and a fraction acres.

Mr. FOSTER. And that is all the land there is?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is only a small portion of a large Indian reservation adjoining the city; and the city needs this little tract for waterworks. The Secretary recommends its sale, as proposed by this bill. The Senate passed it, and the Indian Committee of the House has reported it favorably.

Mr. FOSTER. About what is that land worth?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has called my attention to what the Secretary of the Interior says in his report. In part let me call his attention to what the Secretary says:

If the bill is amended as suggested, however—

After reciting what the gentleman has referred to—it is believed that its provisions will be fair to both the Indians and the city of Pendleton.

Now, what was the amendment suggested? That the money should be paid to the Indians or used for their benefit in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior—the very thing that the gentleman strikes out of the bill. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman from Oregon shall explain it, but I will say frankly, gentlemen, I expect if you are going to take this land away from these Indians who want to keep it, and simply to turn it over to a city which may or may not need it, I think the Indians are entitled to have the money, and unless the gentlemen agree to that I shall object.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman misunderstands the use of this language. It plainly says—

That the net proceeds from the sale of said lands shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the said Umatilla Tribe of Indians and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum.

Mr. MANN. I understand what the language is. You only strike out that part that it shall be used for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. FINLEY. I notice the words "appraised value" are used. What is the difference in the "appraised value" and "actual value"?

Mr. MANN. That would depend on what the appraised value is. It is supposed to be the same.

Mr. LAFFERTY. This bill relates to land in my district.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. First to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. As I understand the gentleman, it is his opinion that if you sell the land the Indians ought to have the money. I want to pause a moment and rejoice at his attitude in this regard. We did not think of letting the department, without bridle or restraint to go ahead and expend the money, without coming back to Congress and letting Congress have something to say about it. In other words, they go out there and build houses and buy horses and teams that the Indians do not want, and it was that reason why the committee acted as it did. I have not consulted with the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] about it, but I have no doubt they would be glad to accept the amendment and let the Indians have the money from the sale of these lands.

Mr. MANN. I think where large sums are involved the policy of the committee is correct.

Mr. FERRIS. I think so.

Mr. MANN. When these Indians object to the sale of this land I am not willing to have the Government put in a position where they can justly complain "You took away our lands after you promised we should have them and you give us nothing for them."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware that nearly every tribe of Indians has objected to selling their lands and to breaking up the reservation, and in spite of their protests the Government has required them to be broken up and allotted them part of their reservations in severalty and sold the remainder of the land to white settlers and put the money derived from its sale in the Treasury to the Indians' credit.

Mr. MANN. That is a matter that has nothing to do with this; it is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the only reason they have suggested in their objection to this bill. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, there is considerable importance attached to the present passage of this bill for the reason that the city of Pendleton has been designated as the location of the insane asylum for eastern Oregon. The waterworks of the city are inadequate at the present time. The object of this bill is to permit the city to purchase land for the waterworks.

The report on the bill says that Joseph Craig, a member of the Umatilla Tribe, was here during the past winter. He is the gentleman who wrote the letter dated Washington, D. C., January 21, 1911, protesting in the usual form against the encroachment of the white man upon the Indian. Mr. Craig's protest, which was referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], was written over here in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I heartily sympathize with the protest against the white men encroaching on the Indians, but Mr. Craig's protest is of a general nature rather than a protest against this particular bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAFFERTY. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. Does not the gentleman think that if he would accept the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois and let the Indian have the money, that his objections would at once subside.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I think so. Mr. Craig's protest shows that it is the form of the bill that he objects to. The bill as it was originally introduced in the Senate provided that the land should be appraised by local appraisers, to be appointed by the register and receiver of the land office. Mr. Craig said he thought an Indian ought to be on the commission. The Indian Office prepared a form of a bill to suit Mr. Craig. It provides that the appraisement shall be in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. Now, perhaps there will be an Indian put on the commission, and I do not care if there are two Indians on it.

Referring to the treaty obligations of the United States, the treaty provided that certain lands should be open to homestead settlement and certain other lands remain for the purpose of Indian allotments. The Indians take the position that that should be permanent. We all know that these lands that were designated in treaties as homestead lands have been disposed of otherwise by Congress when emergencies arose, and the lands that were to be subject for all time to Indian allotments are not more sacred. They can certainly be very properly used to relieve suffering humanity.

Senator CHAMBERLAIN requested me to put the bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, knowing the need of this asylum at Pendleton. Then the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs very courteously consented to a favorable report at the first meeting of the committee.

Now, the next matter that I wish to comment on is the committee amendment striking out these words. Here is what Mr. Craig wanted put in the bill:

Provided, That the net proceeds from the sale of said lands shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Umatilla Tribe of Indians and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum and may thereafter be paid to the said tribe of Indians pro rata or used for their benefit in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

The committee recommended striking out the words "and may thereafter be paid to the said tribe of Indians pro rata or used for their benefit in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior."

I am willing to adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois to reject the committee amendment and let the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to pay these moneys to these Indians. I think that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs will agree to that.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAFFERTY. Certainly.

Mr. FINLEY. What are these lands worth?

Mr. LAFFERTY. They are desert lands. It is in a high altitude. They are of no particular value except for the waterworks for the city. The Indians always get the best of it, and they will probably be appraised for five or six times what they are worth.

Mr. FINLEY. You say that the Indians always get the best end of it?

Mr. LAFFERTY. That is so in our country.

Mr. MANN. That is what they say when they strike them under the belt. [Laughter.]

Mr. FINLEY. Are you not rather isolated in that respect?

Mr. LAFFERTY. I do not think so. These Indians are in Washington and on the job.

Mr. FINLEY. Are these lands worth $1 an acre or $50 an acre?

Mr. LAFFERTY. Well, right up next to the city probably the land is worth $25 an acre.

Mr. FINLEY. How near the city is it?

Mr. LAFFERTY. The nearest point is several miles, I understand.

Mr. FINLEY. Any of it under cultivation?

Mr. LAFFERTY. A great deal of it, but this particular portion where the right of way for the waterworks is desired is too high to be reached by irrigation.

Mr. FINLEY. I am speaking of the land proposed to be turned over to the city.

Mr. LAFFERTY. It is not under cultivation.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is too high for irrigation.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I want to add that if the committee amendment is withdrawn or voted down I would like to have the chairman of the committee——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says that this is very important; that he wants to get a right of way for a water pipe; but he is getting a tract of land amounting to 200 acres.

Mr. LAFFERTY. But they want a reservoir site.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said they wanted a right of way for a water pipe from a distant reservoir down to the city.

Mr. LAFFERTY. This is to be a reservoir site to which the water is to be pumped.

Mr. HAWLEY. They want sufficient area for a reservoir and to protect the surrounding area from which water will be drawn into the reservoir.

Mr. MANN. This is not intended, then, as a right of way?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is a reservoir site.

Mr. MANN. It is intended as a watershed and as a reservoir.

Mr. HAWLEY. A reservoir.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Not as a watershed.

Mr. MANN. It is a watershed if they intend to have water drained into the reservoir.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman think that 200 acres are too much?

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt they have a great deal more than that. Two hundred acres are too much for a right of way to cross.

Mr. HAWLEY. This is for a reservoir.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the bill being passed if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] will agree to disagree to the committee amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And let it remain as it was in the Senate?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is a small bill, and I do not think we ought to violate the principle of our committee for years. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that, but rather than to lose the passage of the bill I will agree to it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may consider himself knocked down and tied.

Mr. HAWLEY. The water is being taken up there very rapidly, and unless we can get this for the use of the city of Pendleton and the insane asylum the water may be appropriated. It is very important to the State that this bill be passed at this time.

Mr. MANN. I think this a different case from the ordinary case. I quite agree with the chairman of the committee and the gentleman in charge of the bill that ordinarily with large sums of money it is not advisable to give the Secretary of the Interior a free hand.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will not the gentleman agree to leave out the words "used for their benefit"?

Mr. MANN. That puts it in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. There is no other way of doing that.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will leave that language in there "or use for their benefit, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior," I think it would be better. Of course he does not pay it to them. He goes and buys things for them that they may want or may not want.

Mr. MANN. Oh, that is the case with a great many appropriations.

Mr. FERRIS. "And may thereafter be paid to said tribe of Indians pro rata." That would accomplish the gentleman's purpose.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What is the amendment that the gentleman proposes?

Mr. MANN. I propose to disagree to the committee amendment, and that is the only thing I do propose. I do not offer anything. I just ask the gentleman if he will agree to vote down the committee amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; in order to pass the bill we will do that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 5, 6, and 7, strike out the words—
"And may thereafter be paid to the said tribe of Indians pro rata or used for their benefit, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LAFFERTY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD (at 5 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until Tuesday, June 18, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 18, 1912.

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Rev. John Van Schaick, jr., of the Church of Our Father, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who has brought us to the beginning of this day, defend us in the same by Thy almighty power. Give to these Thy servants strength to bear their burdens, and wherever our citizens come together to think for the common good that there may be given to them increased devotion to our institutions and greater love for this Government of our fathers, that they and all of us, in the high places and in the humble places, may think and plan together for the increased good of this great Republic. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WILLIAM Z. NORMAN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill H. R. 16493, an act to correct the military record of William Z. Norman, with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

RIGHT OF WAY ACROSS FORT MASON RESERVATION, CAL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill H. R. 22204, an act granting the right of way to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. across the Fort Mason Reservation, in California, with a Senate amendment.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill as it passed the House gave to the Panama-Pacific Exposition Co. the right to construct a railroad and a tunnel across the Fort Mason Military Reservation. The matter was discussed in the House and the bill was amended in the absence of the gentleman from California, who was then away for his health. The bill as amended by the Senate proposes to give that right not only to the exposition company, but to any of its assigns or successors. I desire to ask the gentleman from California, people would be much interested in the proposition, whether he thinks the bill is in such shape which fully safeguards the interest of the Government in the granting of what is a permanent right of way across a military reservation?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I think that the language of the bill fully safeguards the rights of the people. The bill provides for the construction of this tunnel by the exposition company. I may say that a similar right was granted to the Southern Pacific Railroad by Congress several years ago, but the railroad company refused to build the tunnel. The legislation was asked for by Army officials. The Army transport docks are on the western boundary of Fort Mason. At the present time a belt line owned, I believe, by the State of California runs to the eastern border of Fort Mason. This belt railroad carries supplies that are destined for the Philippine Islands and Hawaii to the eastern boundary of the fort. Those supplies are removed from the cars, placed upon drays and trucks, and are carted around the Fort Mason Reservation to the transport docks. The Army officers were very anxious to have this tunnel built because it would enable the supplies to be carried direct in the cars through the tunnel to the transport docks. The saving to the Government will be considerable in the matter of cartage. The cost of constructing the tunnel will not cost the Government a single dollar. The section in the bill which gives the Congress the right to amend, alter, or repeal the act safeguards, in my judgment, the right of the Government. The reason for the Senate amendment seems to be this: The life of the exposition company is limited to a number of years. This tunnel will be useful to the Government as long as the transport docks continue at their present location; and for that reason, before the exposition company shall have expired, the company ought to be allowed to turn over the tunnel to its successor, and such successor, under the terms of the Senate amendment, must be approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. FOSTER. Does this give the railroad company the use of this tunnel after the exposition is over, or give it to anyone to whom they may assign their right?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; anybody to whom the exposition company would assign their right.

Mr. FOSTER. In other words, they are enabled possibly to sell out their rights to the railroad company after the exposition company is through with the use of the tunnel?

Mr. KAHN. It is possible, but that part of the railroad which would connect with the tunnel, as I understand it, is owned by the State of California.

Mr. GARNER. The principal objection suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], as I understand it, is the difference between the bill now and what it was when it passed the House. When it passed the House it granted a temporary license to a company that was going out of existence. As it came back from the Senate it gives a permanent indefinite right to use this property. That is the essential difference.

Mr. KAHN. True, but it seems to me the Government will save considerable money by allowing the tunnel to be transferred to a permanent company after the exposition is over, because that company will continue to haul supplies to the transport docks direct, whereas now they are hauled only part of the way, and then the Government must cart them, at considerable expense, about a third of a mile to the docks.

Mr. GARNER. This is one more spike to drive into the State of California the grip that the Southern Pacific now has upon it.

Mr. KAHN. I have told the House several times that the Southern Pacific refused positively to build the tunnel, and the Southern Pacific does not run the railroad up to the eastern boundary of the tunnel. The railroad that runs to the proposed entrance of this proposed tunnel is known as the belt line and is owned by the State of California.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman will not tell the House he will guarantee the Southern Pacific will not become possessor of this property after the exposition company is through with it?

Mr. KAHN. I will say this to the gentleman, and will say this to the House, that in my opinion I do not think it will ever become the property of the Southern Pacific, and I do not see how it can.

Mr. GARNER. What railroad company is likely to own this property?

Mr. KAHN. The State of California owns the belt line, which runs from a point near the ferry at the foot of Market Street around the bay shore of San Francisco to the Fort Mason Reservation.

Mr. FOSTER. But there is nothing to prevent the exposition company from assigning their rights to the Southern Pacific Co.?

Mr. KAHN. I suppose they could assign it to any company that would be satisfactory to the Secretary of War.

Mr. MANN. I will say that the Senate amendment requires the Secretary of War to approve the assignor.

Mr. FOSTER. But the exposition has the right with the approval of the Secretary of War?

Mr. MANN. With the approval of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SISSON. I want to ask the gentleman from California this question: In the event this exposition company should sell its property—and, of course, they will do that—does this bill, in the opinion of the gentleman, give them any right tantamount or equal to a charter right?

Mr. KAHN. Well, whatever right they acquire will be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War under such regulations as he may make.

Now, as I have said to the House, the legislation is desired by the officials of the Army because it will enable them not alone to save money for the Government, but also to get their supplies onto the transport docks and onto the transports much more expeditiously than they do now.

Mr. SISSON. Would it not be better for this matter to be submitted back to Congress for its approval rather than to the Secretary of War?

Mr. KAHN. Well, I think the Secretary of War would safeguard the rights of the Government in the matter, and there is a special reservation in the bill which gives Congress the right at any time to amend, alter, or repeal the act.

Mr. SISSON. I do not think that amounts to anything, so far as that is concerned, in a matter of that kind. I think you might just as well give them a perpetual charter. My most serious objection to the bill is that it is not limited. You ought to limit it for 50 years. I would not grant anybody a charter for longer than 50 years. You give them a perpetual right.

Mr. KAHN. There is on the statute books now a law which gives the Southern Pacific Co. the right absolute for unlimited time to build this tunnel. The railroad has refused to do it.

Mr. SISSON. Was there no limitation?

Mr. KAHN. None whatever.

Mr. SISSON. It just shows the folly of the Congress which granted that legislation.

Mr. KAHN. The railroad company never asked for the legislation, I will say to my friend from Mississippi. The Army officers were the men who asked for the legislation in order to get direct railroad communication to the transports.

Mr. SISSON. If the Secretary of War safeguards the rights of the people in giving the Southern Pacific Co. its perpetual rights the Secretary of War will take little interest in this matter.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, we often give the right to a railroad for the company to lay a track across a reservation, very much in the language of this bill; and I have never thought of the limitation of time, but always of the right to alter, amend, or repeal. That last matter was submitted in the House when it was up for consideration——

Mr. SISSON. I recollect the bill when it came up here, but at that time nobody was granted any right except the exposition company.

Mr. MANN. The bill as presented to the House from the committee did grant rights to the exposition company.

Mr. SISSON. And they were stricken out of the bill, were they not?

Mr. MANN. And without any explanation from the gentleman from California, or any other person giving any sufficient reason, we thought in the House it was sufficient to grant the right to the exposition company.

Mr. BUCHANAN. With the right of appeal, but without any right of action against the company for damages?

Mr. KAHN. There was nothing of that kind in the bill.

Mr. MANN. That is a question, I will say to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], that never has been settled.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Has there been any such case in the courts? There seems to have been about everything else.

Mr. MANN. I think there has. Whether we can repeal the statute and take away the property is another proposition, and I think that has not been disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SISSON. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 6.

So the motion to concur was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 25069) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 25069, with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 25069, the sundry civil appropriation bill. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Spearfish (S. Dak.) Station: Superintendent, $1,500; fish-culturist, $900; two laborers, at $600 each; in all, $3,600.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. I notice, in line 7, that two laborers are provided for at the station at Spearfish, S. Dak. Has the gentleman the number that was estimated for? My understanding is that the superintendent had asked for three laborers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Commissioner of Fisheries asked for an additional laborer at a number of these fish hatcheries, but in view of the fact that there is an appropriation of $325,000 out of which temporary labor can be employed and assigned to these places, we did not believe it desirable to grant any of the requests.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman if that is the same number of laborers that they had last year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the same as they had.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And there is a fund from which they can pay temporary labor?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. On page 143 there is an item—

Propagation of food fishes: For maintenance, equipment, and operations of the fish-cultural stations of the bureau, the general propagation of food fishes and their distribution, including the movement, maintenance, and repairs of cars, purchase of equipment and apparatus, contingent expenses, and temporary labor, $325,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Boothbay Harbor (Me.) Station: Superintendent, $1,500; fish-culturist, $900; engineer, $1,100; skilled laborer, $780; 3 firemen, at $600 each; custodian of lobster pounds, $720; 2 laborers, at $600 each; in all, $8,000.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I would like the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to tell us, if he can, just how many fish hatcheries there are in the State of Maine.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that there are three.

Mr. GARNER. What other State has more than two? Does the gentleman know?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know.

Mr. GARNER. Has the gentleman ever investigated as to the necessity of these three hatcheries in the State of Maine?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, the Boothbay Harbor Station in Maine is one of the most important in the country. That is the station where lobsters are propagated. That is a very important matter along the Maine coast.

Mr. GARNER. There seems to be one at Greene Lake and one at Craigs Brook.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Those are trout hatcheries.

Mr. GARNER. There seem to be two in the State of Washington. I simply call attention to this matter to show the difference in the service given throughout the country. In the great State of Texas, which has an area, as the gentleman knows, many times that of the State of Maine, there is only one fish hatchery, that at San Marcos, and there is not one application in ten coming to that hatchery from the people of the State of Texas that can be granted and the applicants supplied with fish.

Mr. FITZGERALD. These hatcheries in Maine are the oldest hatcheries in the country, because they are the places where the great supply of brook trout originated.

Mr. GARNER. I am not criticizing it; but so far as my observation goes the $5,400 that is spent at San Marcos, Tex., affords more benefit to the people of the State of Texas than any $50,000 spent elsewhere in that State for any other purpose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think that is true with respect to all the hatcheries.

Mr. GARNER. Having in mind the fact that only 1 application out of 10 can be complied with in Texas, and seeing that there are 3 hatcheries in the State of Maine, I wondered whether it would not be possible, when the Treasury gets in better condition, to have provision made whereby the State of Texas could be better taken care of.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say to the gentleman that the committee does not originate these fish hatcheries.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that I have several counties in my district in northwestern Texas, 500 miles away from San Marcos, that can not get any fish from that station. It is found to be impossible to supply my constituents with fish from that station. My district alone is as large as the State of Maine. I am very desirous to see a fish hatchery established on the Red River, and I have introduced a bill to that end. I have not heretofore been able to get a favorable report on it, but I shall insist upon it hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fish-cultural station, South Carolina: Superintendent, $1,500; fish culturist, $900; 2 laborers, at $600 each; in all, $3,600.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This fish-cultural station at South Carolina, point unnamed, is new in the bill. The preceding item, a fish-cultural station at Jefferson County, Ky., is new in the bill. The succeeding item, fish-cultural station at Wyoming, at a point unnamed, is new in the bill. They are all authorized by the last sundry civil appropriation bill. Kentucky is represented on the Commttee on Appropriations by a very able and distinguished gentleman. South Carolina is represented on the Committee on Appropriations by an able and distinguished gentleman. Both of these gentlemen are members of the Committee on Appropriations of the House. The State of Wyoming is represented by a gentleman on the Appropriations Committee in the Senate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken. South Carolina did not have a member at the time this was authorized.

Mr. GARNER. That is indicated in the bill, that South Carolina did not have a member at that time.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I want to submit some observations, if I may be permitted.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor, of course, at all times.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman should not be angry because I want to take a little of my own time.

Mr. GARNER. Of course not.

Mr. MANN. It is a very valuable thing at times to be represented on the Committee on Appropriations. The gentleman from Texas a few moments ago called attention to the fact that in certain States there were several fish-cultural stations while in the State of Texas there was but one. There are no fish-cultural stations in Ohio, in Indiana, in Illinois, or in Wisconsin—four great States bordering upon the Lakes, where there are great opportunities for the cultivation of fish.

Mr. GARNER. There ought to be some there.

Mr. FOSTER. And Illinois, let me say, ships as many fresh-water fish as any State in the Union.

Mr. MANN. We have maintained one or two fish-cultural stations at the expense of the State, and they are doing great good. The trouble has been heretofore that the committee of the House, when it desires to report bills for fish-cultural stations, reports all the bills pending before the committee on the subject—and there are usually 40 or 50—and the House has to pass the 40 or 50 bills or not any. The House usually has not passed any. Then some enterprising gentleman who is or expects to be a member of the Committee on Appropriations goes over to another portion of the Capitol, has an item inserted in the sundry civil bill in the Senate, which comes back to the House, and is agreed to in conference; whereas the Members of the House not intimately connected with the Committee on Appropriations has no opportunity of getting anything in or getting anything out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. As the gentleman from Illinois states, these three hatcheries were authorized in the last sundry civil appropriation bill. They were put on as amendments in the other body and were agreed to over my protest. I take no responsibility for their existence.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Steamer Gannet: Master, $1,200; engineer, $1,100; fireman, $720; two seamen, at $600 each; in all, $4,220.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask whether or not these vessels are located at some particular point by virtue of a statute, or are they under the direction of the Bureau of Fisheries?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My impression is that they are located at various places under the discretion of the commissioner.

Mr. GARNER. I never heard of any of them drifting down to the Gulf waters.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; they do not ordinarily get as far South. Boothbay Harbor, Me., and Woods Hole, Mass., are two of the most important places from which the vessels are operated.

The Clerk read as follows:

Propagation of food fishes: For maintenance, equipment, and operations of the fish-cultural stations of the bureau, the general propagation of food fishes and their distribution, including the movement, maintenance, and repairs of cars, purchase of equipment and apparatus, contingent expenses, and temporary labor, $325,000.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 11, page 143, strike out the figures "325," and insert in lieu thereof the figures "320," so that it will read "three hundred and twenty thousand."

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I have introduced this amendment to call attention to what seems to me to be a peculiar situation in the work of this bureau. The paragraph just read provides for the propagation of food fishes and their distribution, including the movement, maintenance, and repairs of cars, purchase of equipment and apparatus, $325,000. I propose to strike out the figures "325,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "320,000." If this amendment shall prevail, when we come to the paragraph relating to the item:

Inquiry respecting food fishes: For expenses of the inquiry into the causes of the decrease of food fishes in the waters of the United States, and for investigations and experiments in respect to the aquatic animals, plants, and waters, in the interests of fish culture and the fishery industries, including expenses of travel and preparation of reports, and for all other necessary expenses in connection therewith, $40,000.

I shall offer another amendment to increase the sum provided there from $40,000 to $45,000. I am doing that to call attention to the peculiar situation. It seems to me that it is almost a waste of public money to spend this large sum for the propagation of food fishes when there is so little done to protect the fish that we have. I notice in the estimate in the hearings that the commissioner wanted an appropriation of $340,000 for the purpose of propagating food fishes.

Under all the circumstances I think the committee very wisely held it down to the item of the current year—$325,000. Only just recently the President of the United States has sent a message to Congress on the subject of the high cost of living, and very properly has the Chief Executive called attention to that important subject. We learn from the press that at least one of the great political parties is going to dignify that subject by making it a point of issue in the coming campaign. It certainly is an important question.

In that connection, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the very unusual condition that exists in the greatest fisheries this country possesses, namely, the fisheries of Alaska. In the year 1889 the Alaska Oil & Guano Co. was organized with a capital of $75,000. That company has for its business not the preserving or salting or pickling of fish for food, but at this time, when the country is interested in the conservation of its natural resources and in keeping down the high cost of living, I invite the attention of the committee to the fact that this Alaska Oil & Guano Co. last year took out of the waters of Alaska more than 11,000,000 pounds of good fish and manufactured them into oil and guano or fertilizer. It was stated in the hearings before the Committee on the Territories, a portion of which hearings I now ask permission to insert as a part of my remarks because I think it is very much in point, that these fish were not edible fish. The statement referred to is as follows:

Mr. WILLIS. As I understand it, you want us to strike out all of the section after the word "Alaska"?

Mr. SNOW. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. The question is this: A number of men have stated to the committee that enormous quantities of important food fishes are used in the manufacture of fertilizers and the manufacture of fish oil every year to the detriment of the supply of that particular kind of fish in these waters. Do you think that the catching of many tons of herring, which are food fishes, and the manufacture of them into oil and fertilizer is not waste?

Mr. SNOW. No, sir; I don't think it is.

Mr. WILLIS. What is your argument on that? I should like to hear it, because it has been emphasized in hearings before this committee that it was.

Mr. SNOW. The limitations on the fish industry in Alaska—the natural limitations—which limit in large part the territory over which any fish industry can be conducted, is one reason. Alaska has a seacoast of approximately 3,000 miles. Now, we are operating over a small part of the region known generally as southeastern Alaska, which comprises the territory from Dixon entrance on the south to, say, approximately Yakutat Bay on the north. If you will examine your map, you will see that this territory takes only about 350 miles out of 3,000 miles of coast. Our operations have been confined entirely to this part of Alaska [indicating on map], say, for 100 miles of this 350-mile region, while herring is found in all the waters of Alaska and along the entire 3,000 miles of coast. Now, the natural inquiry comes, "What is to prevent your going farther along the coast and catching your herring and bringing them back to your plant?" The answer is that the time spent by a boat in going from Killisnoo, where our factory is located, to the fishing grounds and back makes it unprofitable.

Mr. WILLIS. Where is that on the map?

Mr. SNOW. In southeastern Alaska. Down here [indicating on map]. Our fishing industry is within a short radius from Killisnoo, 50 or 60 miles in either direction. And we can't possibly get any farther than that territory, because we waste all of our time in going and coming. There is a natural limitation to fishing anywhere in Alaska, and you can't go outside of a territory of 50 or 60 miles?

The CHAIRMAN. Herring is found all along that coast, you say?

Mr. SNOW. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not what some other gentlemen have stated to the committee.

Mr. SNOW. That is the fact, nevertheless, and the record of the Bureau of Fisheries verifies this. The herring also feeds upon something at certain seasons of the year that is found in a tightly inclosed sack in the stomach, and no salt solution can reach this substance. The result is this poisonous substance causes the fish to decay very rapidly, so that there is not more than 20 per cent of the catch that can be packed. Moreover, if you could pack the entire catch you would not have a demand on the Pacific coast for more than approximately 1,000 barrels, so that no matter how much food fish you catch you have no market for more than 1,000 barrels. We find that about 20 per cent of the catch is good to pack. I was asked the other day how we knew what fish were good to pack and what were not. I can not answer that question. I have no data with me that will enable me to tell that, but I can very soon lodge with you the details of how we can know that; how when we send out our vessels to catch fish it can be told what part of the catch can be packed and what part can not.

Mr. WILLIS. You can see how this thing appears to the committee at this time, when we hear so much about the high cost of living, and it looks like a peculiar thing for us to countenance the catching of good food fishes and making them into fertilizer.

Mr. SNOW. Fertilizer is a food product in a way.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes; but its value for that use is relatively small. That would be like making beefsteak into fertilizer. Sirloin steak would undoubtedly make good fertilizer, but it would be much more useful as a food product.

Mr. BOOHER. Your argument is something like that which was used in regard to the buffalo. Thirty or forty years ago there were thousands of buffalo on our western prairies, and the argument was made that they would not become extinct, but they have become extinct, nevertheless.

Mr. SNOW. Well, take our factory: Our catch for the past 11 years has not averaged approximately much over 40,000 barrels of fish, which, at 200 pounds each, is, say, 9,000,000 pounds of fish.

Mr. YOUNG. You are referring now to the Alaska Oil & Guano Co.?

Mr. SNOW. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG. What did it catch in 1910?

Mr. SNOW. In 1910 its catch was 11,783,800 fish.

Mr. YOUNG. In document 746 of the Bureau of Fisheries it is given as 59,000 barrels, or 11,800,000 pounds of herring.

Mr. SNOW. Well, I don't know what the Bureau of Fisheries report.

Mr. YOUNG. Besides that there was only 30,000 barrels of that herring pickled for food.

Mr. SNOW. That is probably an error.

Mr. YOUNG. No; not for food, but for bait.

Mr. SNOW. Well, I don't know; they were probably giving the entire catch of the Alaskan waters.

Mr. YOUNG. I want to correct that so as to say 130,000 barrels were pickled for use as bait for halibut.

Mr. WILLIS. Doesn't it show that any part of the amount pickled was used for food?

Mr. YOUNG. No.

Mr. WILLIS. Do the natives there use this fish as food? Does anybody up in that country use this fish as food?

Mr. SNOW. I couldn't say whether the natives do or not. There is a small quantity used fresh.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I can answer that. The report of the Bureau of Fisheries for the year 1911 shows that there was $65,209 worth of herring put up for food. That included fresh herring, pickled herring, dried herring, salted herring, and egg-dried.

Mr. WILLIS. That indicates unquestionably, then, that this fish can be used as food and is so used.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not suppose there is any question about the fact that the fish can be used for food and is so used.

It is clearly demonstrable that the statement that these are not food fish is absolutely without foundation in fact. It was stated that only about 20 per cent of the fish were in condition to be packed when they are brought to this guano plant, and in this connection the following statement from the hearings is of interest:

Mr. WILLIS. Did you ever attempt to put up this 20 per cent for food purposes?

Mr. SNOW. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIS. What did you do with the other 80 per cent?

Mr. SNOW. We made it into guano and oil.

Mr. WILLIS. Are you doing that now?

Mr. SNOW. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. This report that Judge Young read does not indicate that you put up any food fish at all.

Mr. SNOW. We do put up a little herring for selling purposes.

Mr. WILLIS. But you haven't put up 20 per cent, have you?

Mr. SNOW. No.

Mr. WILLIS. What per cent have you put up?

Mr. SNOW. I am not able to answer that. It is a negligible quantity.

The CHAIRMAN. You haven't undertaken to put up 20 per cent for food and to make 80 per cent into oil and guano?

Mr. SNOW. No, sir.

Mr. WILLIS. When your fleet goes out and comes in with a load of fish suppose there should be other fish with them. Do you sort them out and throw out the others or work it all up into fertilizer?

Mr. SNOW. When the fishing fleet goes out it fishes exclusively for herring. Undoubtedly there will be some fish get in that are not herring, but generally they are a negligible quantity. We do put up, for instance, a few salt cod and a few salt salmon bellies. The king salmon runs in these waters, too, but in the main the catch is herring.

It was established clearly that while it is true that less than 20 per cent of the catch is used as food, it is because there are not sufficient facilities for handling the fish. In other words, there is not any doubt that if the business is carried on as it is carried on in Holland and Norway and Sweden, and wherever else these fish are caught, practically all of them are valuable as food fish. I invite attention in that connection to a table which I have here:

Comparative statement of herring catches.

Year.	Scotland.	Holland.	Norway.	Alaska.
	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.
1900	441,575,900	109,554,000	.....	9,898,800
1901	544,238,352	138,282,200	.....	9,820,800
1902	596,334,704	187,452,500	.....	6,320,200
1903	536,818,576	213,778,250	.....	7,786,600
1904	681,452,016	198,855,000	49,053,086	11,717,600
1905	670,197,920	151,677,000	61,014,066	9,748,200
1906	624,672,048	187,820,500	79,681,338	6,719,400
1907	784,418,992	211,514,000	105,101,246	4,959,200
1908	713,767,824	171,415,500	86,611,752	7,512,000
1909	569,660,224	201,030,000	.....	10,403,600
1910	650,436,528	.....	.....	11,783,800

This table shows that in 1908 in Norway 86,000,000 pounds of these herring, which in Alaska are being taken from the waters by this company and manufactured into fertilizer, are preserved as food fish. We are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars to put fish in these waters, and this company, without paying the Government practically anything, last year took out of the waters 11,000,000 pounds, as I have said, on the claim that the fish are not good food fish. Yet it is shown that in Norway last year 86,000,000 pounds of this same kind of fish were preserved and used by the people. In Holland last year 201,000,000 of pounds were caught and preserved and in Scotland the year before last 509,000,000 pounds and in the past year 650,000,000 of pounds, and these fish were used as food. It is perfectly apparent and demonstrable from a scientific standpoint that the fish that are being used by this company, to be converted into oil and fertilizer, are perfectly edible and are excellent food fish. It is also stated in this connection that the Government is realizing something from the use of these fish. Last year this company took from those waters 59,000 barrels of fish and paid in taxes to the Government of the United States $851. Dividing that up, we find that this Government is realizing from the Alaska Oil & Guano Co. for the fish that it is paying hundreds of thousands of dollars to get into the waters to stock the streams the munificent sum of 1.2 cents per barrel of 200 pounds, or, putting it on the basis of pounds, the Government of the United States is realizing about one two-hundredths of 1 cent per pound for these food fish which are being worked up into fertilizer. It may be said that these fish, being converted into guano, in turn will increase food supply, but it must be apparent that it is a wicked and willful waste of this natural resource to allow this company to use these food fishes, that are used on the Pacific coast, by the natives of Alaska and by everybody else, simply for the purpose of making sordid gain.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman has investigated this subject. Is the oil that is extracted from these fish used for food?

Mr. WILLIS. I think not.

Mr. KAHN. I think it is the basis of the liquid soap that is being used so largely in this country at this time.

Mr. WILLIS. I so understand.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, the point I had in mind is whether these fish that are caught, especially in Alaska, are not a saving after all, because they would not be caught and used for food and could not very well be shipped from there for that purpose, could they?

Mr. WILLIS. There is no reason why they could not be. They are the same fish that are caught by fishermen of Holland, Norway, Denmark, and Scotland, and hundreds of millions of pounds are used every year for food. There is no reason why they could not be so used, and the economy that the gentleman has in mind that if they were not used for guano they would not be used at all is the same kind of economy that men had in mind when they said, "Let us slaughter the buffalo and we will take the tallow and the hide and let the carcass go." It is a very false economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting brief statements from the hearings on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for one minute in order that I may ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. Are the fish that are being slaughtered by this company the same variety with which we are restocking the waters at Government expense?

Mr. WILLIS. While the Government is spending a good deal more for other varieties of fish, this fact was developed in the hearings. When they go out to catch these fish for the purpose of manufacturing fertilizer they do not make any particular selection of the fish. They go where they expect to get fish, but if they get salmon or any other kind of fish they bring it in with the rest and manufacture it into fertilizer, and to me that is a very wicked waste.

Mr. SIMS. Incidentally they do catch and use fish that we are paying money to stock the waters with?

Mr. WILLIS. Without any question.

Mr. GARNER. Is there any law to prohibit this wicked destruction of fish to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. WILLIS. I will say to the gentleman that I do not know of any. I think there will be. There ought to be.

Mr. GARNER. It seems to me that the matter ought to be submitted to some committee that has jurisdiction over a bill of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for one minute more in order that I may answer the question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that in the Committee on Territories a bill is pending which seeks to relieve this situation. I am in hopes that it will be reported out.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. What kind of fish are these?

Mr. WILLIS. They go fishing for herring, but when they let down their nets obviously there is no way of getting out an injunction to keep other fish from getting in the nets, and whatever kind of fish they get, and they may get salmon, they use in the same way. I think it is true that most of the fish they get are these herring.

Mr. KAHN. What waters of Alaska are these?

Mr. WILLIS. The southeastern section of Alaska. The company has its headquarters at Killisnoo, on Admiralty Island, and its operations are limited by a radius of 50 or 60 miles from that point.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I desire to make a suggestion in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS]. The gentleman from Ohio, as I understand, has stated that this company is catching and destroying fish of the kind that we pay money to stock the waters with.

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I did not know that. I understood that we were spending money to stock the waters with salmon more particularly.

Mr. WILLIS. As I just stated, undoubtedly it is the purpose of the company to catch herring, but when they go out and let down their nets they take whatever they get. As was shown in the hearings, they get large numbers of other kinds of fish, and whatever they get they make into guano.

Mr. KAHN. In other words, all is herring that comes to their nets.

Mr. WILLIS. All is herring that comes to their nets.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not prevail. The bureau reports that it requires this appropriation. Out of it is furnished the equipment of the various fish-cultural stations of the country. Six additional ones require equipment during the next fiscal year. The committee went into the matter with sufficient thoroughness to be convinced that it would be a mistake to reduce this appropriation. The gentleman states that he intends to ask that the item further on, "inquiry respecting food fishes" be increased $5,000. The committee has increased that appropriation $5,000 over the amount available for the current year, and gave the commissioner all he requested. It would be a great mistake either to reduce this item or to increase the other. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment for the purpose of calling attention again to the custom of Congress—or at least in this bill—to make lump appropriations. Now, we have here a contingent fund, you might term it, of $325,000, and the next item a contingent fund for the maintenance and support of vessels of $60,000, whereas on the preceding pages, 141–142, the committee undertakes to provide, so far as we have any knowledge, for all the vessels that belong to the Bureau of Fisheries, which has an entire expense of less than $25,000. Here in these lump appropriations are where enormous salaries are provided and where, if you might term it, the extravagance comes in in the different bureaus of the Government.

I want to say in this connection that I have the honor of acquaintance with the present commissioner, and I do not mean by this statement any reflection on him, but he may not always be at the head of that department. So far as I know, he has made a most excellent commissioner, but I think the Congress is to be criticized that these lump-sum appropriations afford an opportunity of extravagance and high salaries on the part of these different heads of bureaus that the Committee on Appropriations and the Congress ought to remedy by making specific appropriations, and it has attracted my attention that $60,000 was appropriated in the next item for the maintenance of vessels, whereas at the same time the entire expense of the fish fleet, if you may term it such, is less than $25,000, but it costs $60,000 to repair and maintain that fleet.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has not read the entire paragraph. Boats are hired out of this item. Boats are hired at a number of the stations. They do not need them all the time, but they hire them from time to time as they need them. In the maintenance and repair of vessels no committee of this House is able to write specifically the sum that may be needed. I might call the attention of the gentleman to the naval appropriation bill, where $6,000,000 is appropriated for repair of vessels under the Bureau of Construction and Repair and nearly the same sum under the Bureau of Steam Engineering. If there be any place where such items should have some consideration, I think it should be upon a bill such as that.

Mr. GARNER. Well, Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from New York that these items ought to be, if it is possible, segregated and specific appropriations made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. You can not do so on repairs of vessels; nobody can tell what they will be.

Mr. GARNER. It appears, however, from this item as compared with the maintenance of the entire fleet it would be better if we bought our vessels rather to hire them. It costs more to hire a few vessels, if we do not need them continually during the year, than to maintain the entire fleet. If you will take the vessel service, lines 21, 22, 23, 24, and lines 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, and add the totals together you will ascertain they do not amount to $25,000, and that covers the entire fleet of fish vessels, and yet we have for hire of vessels and little repairs to vessels the sum of $60,000. It looks like it is out of proportion to me, and I simply wanted to ask the chairman of the committee, if he had made an investigation as to the item for which it is to be paid, whether he has an estimate from the department on this subject?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman must understand that one of these vessels is the Albatross, a very large vessel, and a request was made for $40,000 to overhaul that vessel alone this year. In addition, there are 5 other small steamers, 31 or more power launches. The cost of maintaining these vessels and hiring others in this work is paid out of this item. In my opinion this item is not at all excessive, and I do not know of any possible way for any committee of Congress to segregate it in any way to make the administration more effective.

Mr. GARNER. I would like to ask the gentleman, in these three different paragraphs on page 143, if he construes them to admit of such salaries as the Commissioner of the Bureau of Fisheries may suggest?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does; yes.

Mr. GARNER. In other words, the Congress is simply making this lump appropriation and turning over the question of salaries to the head of the bureau?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does it in the case of the Geological Survey, for instance, and it does it in pretty nearly every department of the Government.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, it does it in the very bill which the gentleman brings into this House coming from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. There is an item of $471,000 for contingent expenses in connection with the United States consulates in the diplomatic and consular bill. Now, I agree with the gentleman as to the lack of wisdom in having large lump-sum appropriations where it is possible to segregate them, but to simply make a condemnation wherever you find one is frequently condemning what must be, as it is impossible always to segregate the items.

Mr. GARNER. In connection with the Consular Service it may be observed that an itemized statement of expenses under that item was reported to this House in the report of the committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will read he will find a statement.

Mr. GARNER. An itemized statement?

Mr. SHERLEY. The law requires an itemized statement.

Mr. GARNER. In the Consular Service there is a law fixing the salary, and the result is that we have had in this House at this session of Congress a splendid effort on the part of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] to hold down the salaries of the different officials; but we have in this lump appropriation an opportunity for them to continue these enormous and, I think and I believe, entirely unjustifiable salaries.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that some of these items it is impossible to segregate. The committee is trying to work out a scheme improving the present methods, which we hope to accomplish if we have time. It can not be done at once. I know of an instance that has just come to my attention where, I think, there has been great abuse.

Mr. SHERLEY. I call the gentleman's attention to an item coming out of his bill where there is discretion given. I refer to the Chinese writers and messengers, and so forth. The item is five times as big as this one.

Mr. GARNER. But as a usual thing the statute governs all the employees connected with the Consular Service.

Mr. PAGE. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the item just ahead of this one, namely, "Maintenance of vessels," and to the fact that in the testimony it is contemplated to purchase this year from this fund two additional vessels for the fleet. It is not only for the maintenance of vessels that are now in the fishing fleets, and it is not only for the hiring of vessels for stations, where they are not needed continuously. This year it is contemplated to purchase, and one was purchased last year.

Mr. GARNER. I agree with the gentleman from North Carolina, but I wanted to know if the committee could not designate so much for the purchase, so much for the hire, so much for maintenance, and so much for clerical help, if it is needed.

Mr. PAGE. I agree with the gentleman from Texas in his purpose, but it is not altogether practical.

Mr. GARNER. I agree with you.

Mr. MANN. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] a question. The gentleman made the statement that the maintenance of the fleet of vessels which we have is only $25,000. There is an item of $60,000.

Mr. GARNER. I meant in this territory, and not the Alaskan service.

Mr. MANN. I mean the one named in the bill. The gentleman will notice on the principal vessel, the steamer Albatross, the item in the bill is $5,200, but that does not include the maintenance of the vessel as far as seamen are concerned. That does not include the maintenance of the vessel as to subsistence. The whole item as to the steamer Albatross, which is the largest vessel carried in the bill, is for the experts on the vessel; the maintenance of the vessel, as I understand, the sailing master, the seamen, and all the regular force running the vessel not carried in the bill under the head of "steamer Albatross" are carried in the bill under the head of the "maintenance of vessels." And I suppose it is not possible to state how much the maintenance of that vessel will be.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. Can the gentleman account for the fact that under the "steamer Albatross," which is the largest vessel, there is nothing provided for first mate or second mate, where, in the next item, the "schooner Grampus," they provide for officers and seamen?

Mr. MANN. I think it is because the Albatross is so much larger that it is impossible to tell what the number of persons on the vessels will be. Some are not employed the year around, whereas the other is a permanent force employed all the year around. Whether they increase the force during the active season, I do not know. And probably that is the reason why the Albatross had an expenditure of $60,000 under the head of maintenance.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to strike out "325,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "320,000."

Mr. FAISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I hope this amendment will not pass, and I hope the appropriation will stay just as it is. If any change, it should be larger.

I am a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and as I see none of the other members of the committee on the floor to speak in behalf of the committee, I may, therefore, say that we have already passed on eight bills for additional fish hatcheries. The Bureau of Fisheries, through Dr. Smith, the assistant commissioner, was before our committee a short time ago, and he said he could take care of 10 or 12 new fish hatcheries a year. There are more than 100 bills pending asking for additional fish hatcheries.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] spoke a little while ago about the high price of food and care of the food fish, and in that connection I wish to say that these food fishes should be well cared for and properly protected. I think it is proper that they should be, and that more hatcheries and culture stations should be established. On account of the splendid work of the large hatcheries for shad on the Chesapeake Bay and in the Potomac shad are now being sold, or were sold, as cheap as 25 cents a piece—shad of 7 or 8 pounds weight—on the wharves of Washington City. In my own State of North Carolina we hatched out a great many shad in the last few years, amounting this present year to 100,000,000 shad fry, and the cost of shad there has been reduced in the markets from $1 to 50 cents. Gentlemen from Georgia and from Texas and other sections have been asking for the establishment of like fish hatcheries, because of the fact that the price of shad in their State ranges from $1.50 to $2, whereas shad are sold in the vicinity of Washington for 25 cents to 50 cents apiece during much of the shad season. In reply to what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] has said, I would say that we have had the question of beam and other trawler fishing before our committee some time ago, and the evidence obtained showed that they destroyed 25 to 35 per cent of the small edible fish, which should not be allowed. We have referred the matter to the Bureau of Fisheries for their consideration, and will report the matter soon.

Upon the present conditions and the high price of food, especially meats, there is nothing that can so relieve this situation as a good, large appropriation for fish hatcheries and fish culture; and I want to see the number of fish hatcheries increased, so that more fish may be used for food purposes. These fish are hatched at a very small cost. I believe it costs only $4 per million of shad eggs, while they are gathered by experts, as the fishermen catch the parent fish in their nets, and the extraction of the eggs does not destroy the sale of the fish, but are sold along with the others at a little smaller price.

With the establishment of a number of additional fish hatcheries we can get a supply of cheaper fish for food, and I want to say, as a physician as well as a Representative, that fish is the best and most wholesome food of all the meat products in the market. The gentleman should gladly be willing to vote for more instead of for less appropriation in order to supply the deficiency that now exists and keep up a supply of such wholesome food for years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes. There are some of us who would like to ask him some questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request? The Chair hears none. The gentleman's time will be extended five minutes.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I simply wanted to make a statement to the gentleman. I do not want him to get the idea that I am opposed to these hatcheries. I am entirely in sympathy with what the gentleman has said. What I want to do is to stop these people who are destroying the fish. I want to ask the gentleman this question: Whether his committee has in contemplation legislation applicable to this situation in Alaska? Have they investigated the work of this particular company?

Mr. FAISON. I would say to the gentleman that we are now investigating it. Our attention has been called to it, and we have referred the matter to the Bureau of Fish and Fisheries and trust to receive a report soon as to the damage to the food supply of fish, and so forth.

In the State of North Carolina we have a number of guano, or fish-scrap, factories, but in those factories only nonedible fish (the menhaden) are used. We have a large supply of these fish off our coast and the men engaged in that business are using them for guano purposes instead of for food.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is there not a Federal law now that prohibits these men from fishing with nets within the 3-mile limit? Is there not a Federal law that prohibits what is known as menhaden fishing within the 3-mile limit?

Mr. FAISON. Yes; I understand there is a law to that effect, but I am not sure.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is familiar with the proceedings of the menhaden fishermen on the Atlantic coast by which they drag within the 3-mile limit?

Mr. FAISON. No; I am not, but will investigate it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Have any measures been taken by the committee to investigate that situation?

Mr. FAISON. Not yet. We are now investigating the whole matter of the steam beam and other trawlers which now destroy 25 to 35 per cent of the small fish, edible fish, on the North Sea and soon to be used off the coast of Maine and Massachusetts.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is familiar with the fact that there is a law of that kind prohibiting such fishing within the 3-mile limit?

Mr. FAISON. Yes; I think there is, but I do not know much about the national fishing laws; but the States are protecting the fish within their limits, and properly so, I think, so that they shall be caught for food; but no method should be used that would destroy 25 to 35 per cent of the small fish. Should that be allowed, then there is no use for the establishment of fish hatcheries and culture stations which, under the wise management of the Bureau of Fisheries, will soon be an important factor in supplying cheaper and more wholesome food. [Applause.]

Mr. BATHRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAISON. I will.

Mr. BATHRICK. Did your committee investigate the character of the fish that you say they take from which they manufacture guano; you say they are nonedible fish?

Mr. FAISON. They use the nonedible fish for the manufacture of guano, because they can sell the edible fish for so much more as food than fertilizers. They could not afford to use the edible fish, and different fishermen fish for either kind, and when caught together they are separated.

I hope the amendment to cut the amount of this appropriation will be voted down.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Maintenance of vessels: For maintenance of the vessels and launches, including the purchase and repair of boats, apparatus, machinery, and other facilities required for use with the same, hire of vessels, and all other necessary expenses in connection therewith, $60,000.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 138 of the bill, line 19, the Edenton (N. C.) fish station. My reason for that request is that I did not know that the House met at 10 o'clock this morning. I thought it met at the usual hour of 11, and I was here at that time with the expectation of offering the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the amendment?

Mr. SMALL. I want to increase the two laborers for that station to three, and I ask unanimous consent to return to that item.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, page 158, line 20, to strike out the word "two" and insert the word "three." Mr. Chairman, the Commissioner of the Bureau of Fisheries made an urgent recommendation that the number of laborers at Edenton Station be increased by one. The reasons are that this is one of, if not the, most important fish stations in the country, and by all odds is the most important in the propagation of shad. This fish station is situated on an estuary of Albemarle Sound, a very large body of fresh water, the largest body on the Atlantic seaboard, and the largest in the United States outside of the Great Lakes. It is one of the greatest sources of the supply of shad in any waters of the United States.

For some years after this station was established there was difficulty in obtaining a supply of roe from which to hatch a sufficient quantity of shad. These difficulties have been removed, and the commissioner in his statement before the committee at the hearings said that they had something like 70,000,000 eggs at that time, and before the end of the season they hoped to have ready for planting at least 100,000,000 from that station alone.

Prior to the work of this station there had been a falling off in the catch of shad in these waters, but for the last four or five years at least the catch has been restored almost to its normal quantity. Now, great quantities are caught and shipped north; they come next to the Florida shad in the shipment to the northern market. Most of the shad in this market early in February comes from the North Carolina waters, and particularly from Albemarle Sound and these tributaries. In fact the necessity for this additional laborer, involving only the sum of $600, is urgent, and I hope the committee will grant it. I can only say that I am familiar with the work of this station; I investigated it last season, and to some extent this season, and I know that they are handicapped by reason of the limited supply of labor, and in view of the importance of this station I hope the committee will vote for the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I stated, in response to the gentleman from South Dakota, that the commissioner asked for increased laborers in a number of stations. These laborers are needed particularly during the distribution period, but it does not require them for the entire year, and out of the sum appropriated of $325,000 for the propagation of food fishes the temporary labor required is obtained and assigned to the various stations.

Mr. SMALL. If the gentleman will pardon me, I failed to state the necessity for this laborer during the entire year. In addition to the propagation of shad they are engaged in propagating other varieties of fish, fishes adapted to the upper stream, and the work of propagation of these varieties takes place at other seasons than the early spring. That is the main reason for the need of this laborer for the entire year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee did not think that this station was on any different basis from any others. The committee believed that no inconvenience would be suffered if these laborers were not increased and that there would be no loss of efficiency to the service.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Did the committee take into consideration that this was the most important fish hatchery station in the United States and located upon the largest body of fresh water in the United States outside of the Great Lakes?

Mr. SMALL. I fear that they did not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee made ample provision for all stations and saw no reason why this station should be increased and not the others. I think it would be unjust to the others to increase this.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SMALL) there were—ayes 10, nays 24.

So the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alaska Fisheries Service: For protecting the seal fisheries of Alaska, including the furnishing of food, fuel, and clothing and other necessities of life to the natives of the Pribilof Islands, Alaska, transportation of supplies to and from the islands, expenses of travel of agents and other employees and subsistence while on the Pribilof Islands, purchase, hire, and maintenance of vessels, including crews for same, and for all other expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of the act of April 21, 1910, entitled "An act to protect the seal fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes"; and for the protection of the salmon fisheries of Alaska, including travel, hire of boats, employment of temporary labor, and all other necessary expenses connected therewith, $100,000.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$75,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 145, line 2, by striking out "$100,000" and inserting "$75,000."

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I do this for the reason that after three weeks' hearings before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, with reference to the killing of seals, it developed that in case no seals were killed the reduction in the cost of maintaining and protecting the seals could be reduced. The members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, or a number of them, gained the impression that by stopping the killing of seals for the year it would reduce the expenditure of this appropriation by $50,000, but in order to be within the confines of what I am certain will be the reduction in the necessary expenditure, by reason of stopping the killing of seals, I make my amendment $75,000 in place of $50,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Make it $60,000.

Mr. GARNER. Very well. Mr. Chairman, at the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations I ask unanimous consent to so modify my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by making it $60,000 instead of $75,000. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I have no interest in this matter except to give the House the information that I obtained as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in investigating the matter. We have now before Congress a bill that prohibits the killing of seals for 10 years, as the bill is now before the Congress. I myself do not concur in that.

Mr. MANN. Is that correct?

Mr. GARNER. Yes; the Senate amended the House bill and fixed a close season of 10 years.

Mr. MANN. That is the Senate amendment, and the House has not concurred in it.

Mr. GARNER. No; but under the present treaty and the law there is at present a close season, and unless there is a law permitting the killing of the seals the season will remain closed indefinitely as long as the treaty is in existence.

Mr. MANN. The bill as it passed the House provided for the killing of a certain number of seals.

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If that bill should become a law, then could this reduction be properly made?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I am not certain that you could make $40,000 of reduction, but I believe you could make a reduction of $25,000. There is no question in my mind but that there has been a good deal of extravagance in the way of maintaining those seal herds in the Pribilof Islands. For instance, instead of having the Revenue Service take up supplies, which it occurred to us could be done, they having to patrol those waters and to protect the fisheries anyway, a vessel is hired at a cost of $18,000 to make the trip to the Pribilof Islands and return to carry up a small provision for the inhabitants of those islands. It occurred to me—and I think to others of the committee—that where you have a Government vessel going from the Pacific coast to the Pribilof Islands in patrolling those waters and protecting the seals from those who would kill them on the high seas the Government provisions could be carried by that revenue cutter or by a naval vessel.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman made any investigation of that subject?

Mr. GARNER. I have not, except that we know that these vessels go from one point to the other.

Mr. MANN. My information is that the revenue cutters have always carried all of the supplies up there that could be profitably done in that way. Of course it would cost a great deal more to send a naval vessel there than the hiring the vessel and the supplies combined.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that. I suggest to the gentleman that after this bill is passed and is pending in the Senate, if the Congress should see proper to pass the seal bill, which I fear it will not do at this session, for there is a difference in the House as to what the policy should be, and there seems to be a difference of opinion in the House and Senate with respect to it, whether we should have a close or an open season, but if there should be a bill passed authorizing the killing of seals this matter could be arranged in the Senate. Evidently, without the killing of seals, this is a much larger appropriation than is necessary.

Mr. MANN. That may be. I do not think we ought to hamper that service up there. A large part of this money is used for feeding the natives, is it not?

Mr. GARNER. A good portion of it is; yes.

Mr. MANN. How many employees do we have up there? Not very many outside of the natives?

Mr. GARNER. Very few. They are appropriated for in another paragraph of the bill. There are two physicians and two school-teachers and outside of them there is the superintendent.

Mr. MANN. Is not this fund used in the main for the subsistence and care of the natives up there who are utilized as far as necessary in the protection and the killing of the seals, when they do kill the seals?

Mr. GARNER. A good portion of it is, but the gentleman will realize, I am sure, that if there is to be no killing season, no expense for killing the seals and taking care of the meat, there will be a necessary reduction in the appropriation. For instance, they put up several hundred barrels of seal meat for the Alaskan people and for others.

Mr. MANN. But that is for use?

Mr. GARNER. That is for use, but I will say to the gentleman that all that is necessary for the inhabitants of the Pribilof Islands is the meat of from twelve to thirteen hundred seals per year, whereas they have been killing some 12,000. That food is used for people living in Alaska, and is said to be very acceptable and desirable.

Mr. MANN. Do they preserve all of the meat of all of the seals that are killed?

Mr. GARNER. They have, with the exception of a small per cent.

Mr. MANN. Is that meat sold or given away?

Mr. GARNER. Given away to the people living along the Alaskan coast is my understanding, though I am not certain.

Mr. MANN. Of course, we have to provide for those people up there in some way. We do not permit them to kill the seals and we have to support them.

Mr. GARNER. I am inclined to believe that under the treaty they would be permitted to kill sufficient seal for their own subsistence. That was the general impression of the committee, and they can do that themselves.

Mr. MANN. But they have to have something besides seal meat.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, yes; they have to have sustenance. I believe $75,000 will be sufficient.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the Commissioner of Fisheries was before the committee, and he insisted that this money was required for the subsistence of about 300 natives of the islands of Alaska, estimated at about $233 per capita each. That seems a very large sum to subsist the natives. It is also used for the hire of the vessel. It appeared as if about $80,000 might be sufficient. The commissioner stated that the agent in charge of this work had requested $125,000, but he believed that they could get along with $100,000, and he rested upon that estimate. The committee was in grave doubt as to the amount that should be given. It had before it the detailed statement of the expenditures under this appropriation, which showed that there was an unexpended balance of $51,554.46 in the last year. The commissioner pointed out, however, that they had taken over the property of the North American Commercial Co., a very large property, for which $60,568.17 had been paid. He stated that that property could not be duplicated for $150,000. The committee was in considerable doubt as to what to do, and gave the amount requested. It is unfortunate that the Committee on Foreign Affairs did not communicate to the Committee on Appropriations the information that it had acquired during its investigation of this matter, because had it done so it might have removed the doubt that existed in the minds of the committee, and have been of considerable service to it in arriving at a proper conclusion as to what could be done.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. GARNER. The Committee on Foreign Affairs was investigating the question of the policy of the Government with reference to the killing of seals, as to whether there should be a close or an open season, so called. The Committee on Foreign Affairs ascertained this information incidentally to reporting a bill to this House as to the policy of the Government with reference to certain commercial relations to the seal herd, and if the Committee on Appropriations had sought from the same sources the information I imagine they could have obtained the same information that the Committee on Foreign Affairs did.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the committee had that information as early as the 2d of December. The committee has the statement of the Commissioner of Fisheries that the man in charge of the work believes it will require $125,000. He insisted that $100,000 would be necessary in order to subsist the natives and do the other work necessary. I referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs for this reason. Early in the session of Congress I addressed a communication to the chairmen of the various committees on expenditures of the House and requested that any information obtained by them in the conduct of various investigations that might be of service to the Committee on Appropriations in the preparation of the various appropriation bills be furnished to the committee, and I did not receive a single response.

Mr. GARNER. If I understood the chairman, that was addressed to the chairmen of the various expenditures committees. The Committee on Foreign Affairs is not a committee on expenditures, but a committee of the House that makes up one of the appropriation bills and reports various legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that. I say it was unfortunate that it did not occur to some member of that committee to furnish this information, because with the information that it had and the information which the Committee on Appropriations had, the members might have been in a better position to have acted on this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from New York a moment ago to say that the cost of this subsistence would be $80,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Seventy thousand dollars or eighty thousand dollars. I think perhaps, after refreshing my memory from what was said, the gentleman might better modify his amendment to $75,000.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, as I stated before, I have no interest in this matter other than to appropriate the proper sum necessary for the proper conduct of this work for the next fiscal year, so I ask unanimous consent to change the amendment, making it $75,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] No objection is heard, and the amendment will be changed accordingly. The proposed amendment is to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$75,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

IMMIGRATION STATIONS.

Immigrant station, Ellis Island, New York Harbor: Toward the construction, at a total cost not to exceed $350,000, of an additional story on baggage and dormitory building, and metal and masonry projection on northerly side of said building, $150,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 14, page 145, by striking out the first word "toward" and inserting the word "for."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 145, line 14, by striking out the word "toward" and inserting the word "for" in lieu thereof.

Mr. CANNON. And an accompanying amendment, in line 17, strike out "$150,000" and insert "$350,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 145, line 15, by striking out "$150,000" and inserting "$350,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, these two amendments are twin amendments. If the last amendment fails, the first amendment ought to fail. I will read the proviso as it is contained in the bill:

Immigrant station, Ellis Island, New York Harbor: Toward the construction, at a total cost not to exceed $350,000, of an additional story on baggage and dormitory building, and metal and masonry projection on northerly side of said building, $150,000.

Now, there is no authority in this provision given to contract for this work, but it authorizes its construction at a limit of cost of $350,000. If my first amendment prevails to strike out the word "toward" and insert "for" it would authorize the construction at $350,000 and appropriate the full amount to pay therefor. I shall not take up further time. Amongst many other urgent items to which I will call attention touching the Ellis Island Immigration Station immediately following the disposition of this, this was of such importance that the Committee on Appropriations authorized its construction. Now, one of two things, it seems to me, ought to be done—either the appropriation ought to be $350,000 or, in the absence of that, if only $150,000 can be expended the first year, there ought to be authority to contract for the remainder of the cost, in my judgment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the committee believe that this additional story to this building is necessary. Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars could not possibly be expended between the time this bill will become a law and the next bill will become a law. The committee treated this matter just as it treated every other public building in the bill. It gave such money as it believed could be utilized until the next bill became a law. I know of no reason whatever for appropriating the full amount at this time. It is not customary to do so.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. As this is a repair or an addition to the building, it seems to me—I do not recollect the investigation which was had touching the necessary expenditure for the coming year—but it seems to me that the appropriation ought to be for the full repair of the building or authority to contract for the remainder. It is immaterial to me. I am frank to say I was not present when the hearing was had upon this particular item. The gentleman. I am satisfied, desires that this work should proceed as rapidly as possible.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was not believed it was necessary to put in the provision relative to the contract, but I have no objection to an amendment which I shall offer if it is thought desirable for the contract to be made for the full amount.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman offer the amendment with authority to contract for the remainder?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will. After the word "cost," on line 14, insert the words:

Under a contract, which is hereby authorized, not to exceed $350,000.

Mr. CANNON. That is satisfactory. I will withdraw my amendments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I offer that amendment, Mr. Chairman, namely, after the word "cost," on line 14, page 145, insert:

Under a contract, which is hereby authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 145, line 14, by inserting after the word "cost" the words "under a contract, which is hereby authorized."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The effect of this amendment is that now, instead of going ahead with $150,000 worth of improvements at the New York station, they are authorized to make a contract for the entire $350,000?

Mr. CANNON. An appropriation of $150,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the estimate as to what this improvement will cost, and it is believed to be a very imperative matter. There is no doubt about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand the gentleman withdrew his amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendments offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will be withdrawn. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The question now is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, as a separate paragraph, following line 17, page 145, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 145, after line 17, insert "For the complete construction of a steel-hull ferry steamer, $125,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I purpose to offer a series of amendments that are submitted in the estimates, including this one, for the proper care of the Ellis Island Immigrant Station, in construction and repairs and otherwise, aggregating in round numbers $500,000. I do not propose to take great time in discussing these amendments, but it is proper for me to read as follows touching this estimate:

NOTE.—The average number of passengers carried annually by the Ellis Island ferryboat is over 2,000,000. She is over 7 years old, and during this period has been in constant service, including much night work, except during the short intervals when hauled out for repairs. It is extremely difficult to secure a substitute boat even when there is ample time to advertise therefor. Recently it took five weeks to find such a boat while our ferryboat went into dry dock. It is becoming more and more difficult to find boats that will meet our requirements. A second ferryboat is required, not only because the present boat is overworked, but because common prudence requires that there should be a substitute in the event of a breakdown or accident to which the ferry service at Ellis Island is always exposed, the route being a very dangerous one, crossing heavy traffic at all seasons, with much ice and fog in winter, and the entrance to the Ellis Island slip being via a channel having rocky shoals on the north. Nearly 18 months will elapse after the appropriation has been made before a new boat can be constructed.

That is all I want to say about this particular amendment. But I do want to say, as a foundation for saying less on the various amendments which I shall offer and to which I referred a few moments ago, that in round numbers there are about 1,000,000 immigrants, sometimes more, sometimes a little less, that come into this country, substantially all of them at Ellis Island. Many gentlemen here, I presume, have been at Ellis Island. I never have been there, but I know something of it in a general way. With this great number of immigrants there is a head tax of $4 to each immigrant. If a million come here that means $4,000,000. So that this Immigration Service is substantially paid for by the head tax.

Now, it is strongly urged, as gentlemen will discover, not only touching this ferryboat, but touching various affairs from the standpoint of life and of health and of proper care for these, to a certain extent, helpless people when they land at Ellis Island, that they should have at least ordinary consideration and care, especially as the head tax pays for it. But even if the head tax did not pay for it, humanity requires that Ellis Island, as well as other stations, but particularly Ellis Island, inasmuch as it is a great station, should be amply safe to accommodate that service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, until eight years ago the immigration service in New York hired a boat to provide means for transporting immigrants from Ellis Island to the city. Eight years ago Congress authorized the purchase or construction of a steel ferryboat to cost $110,000. As soon as the service had acquired that ferryboat it started an agitation for a reserve boat, and is now asking $125,000 for a boat to act as a reserve to this vessel that cost $110,000. The Pennsylvania Railroad discontinued a ferry service between Jersey City and New York and Brooklyn with the opening of the tubes under the North River. They had three boats in that service. One of them was offered to the officials of the immigration service at a cost of about $30,000, including the fitting and equipment of it and putting it in thorough repair. It is estimated that such a boat would last about 15 years.

This was called to the attention of the officials. They did not seem to think very highly of it, because they did not believe that the boat would meet their requirements, and yet two of these boats have been put into service on new ferries crossing the Sound at points where up to that time there had been no ferry service. The runs are much longer and more difficult than the run from Ellis Island to the Battery.

In view of all these facts, the committee thought that there was absolutely no excuse for expending $125,000 merely to take the place of this steamboat, 8 years old, whenever it might be necessary to suspend its operations for repairs.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In one moment. The boat makes a trip from the Battery on the even hours, and from Ellis Island, as I recollect, on the half hours. The trip each way takes about 15 minutes; so that the service is not of such a character as to require two boats, or an additional boat to replace this one in case of any disability.

Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the boat now in use belong to the United States Government?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; it was purchased eight years ago for $110,000. It is a modern steel-constructed boat.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it used solely for the purpose of transporting immigrants back and forth?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Immigrants and employees at the immigrant station.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The 2,000,000 passengers referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who use this boat every year, would not be solely immigrants, would they? There are other passengers in addition to the immigrants.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Even if there were 2,000,000 passengers, it would not crowd the boat excessively, because it makes 15 or 16 trips a day; 16 trips, I suppose. They have two shifts of men, each working eight hours a day.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman explain, so that the House can understand, whether the immigrants are landed at Ellis Island or the Battery?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The immigrants are landed at Ellis Island from the steamers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The ships stop there on the way in?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The passengers are taken there on barges, and after they are passed they are taken from Ellis Island to the Battery on this ferryboat. Then all the persons who have business at Ellis Island go to and fro on this boat. It is a regular ferry service. It makes a trip every hour from the city, and on the half hours to the Battery from Ellis Island, and the trip from the Battery to Ellis Island takes about 15 minutes.

There is no question of the lack of facilities; they do not intend to operate two boats at one time. The desire is to expend $125,000 to obtain a boat that can be utilized when the boat that is now in commission must be laid up for repairs. It seemed to the committee that there was no excuse for the expenditure. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization I have been obliged to discuss the question of the transportation of immigrants from time to time. I agree with the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and I intend to support his amendment. The question has arisen in California because of the transportation of immigrants back and forth, and it will arise on the Atlantic coast very soon, notably at Philadelphia, which has now taken second place as an immigrant receiving station.

Mr. PAGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. PAGE. Does the gentleman understand that there is no lack of facility between Ellis Island and the Battery; that the statement that went into the RECORD, by all the people in charge of the station, was that there was absolutely no lack of facilities? They requested this appropriation in order that they might purchase a vessel for the purpose of taking the place of the vessel now in commission when that vessel was laid up for repairs for a few weeks in the year. That is the only pretense put before this committee for this appropriation. There is no question but that the present vessel has ample facilities to take care of the passengers between the two points.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The argument of the gentleman from Illinois was that the vessel is 8 years old, is frequently crowded, and that if the vessel should break down there should be some relief in a great station like that of New York.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will pardon me, it was not my argument nor my statement, but it was the statement submitted with the estimate which I read, a statement from the authorities in charge at Ellis Island and forwarded by the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understood the gentleman to say that the appropriation for this boat was recommended by the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. CANNON. Absolutely. I did not make much of the talk; most of it was in reading a statement submitted with the estimate by the department for the new vessel.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is desired as a relief vessel to take the place of the other if the other should be laid aside for repairs.

Mr. CANNON. It says:

A second ferryboat is required not only because the present boat is overworked but because common prudence requires that there should be a substitute in the event of breakdown, to which the service at Ellis Island is always exposed.

And then he states that it is always difficult to get a substitute; that they advertised for five weeks before they got a substitute when the ferryboat had to go in for repairs. Then it speaks of the dangerous passage there from the freight traffic and the situation of navigation in the neighborhood of Ellis Island.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, just one word. In the hearings Mr. Williams, who is in charge of the service, before the committee stated in answer to questions that I asked him:

Mr. PAGE. Would the securing of this boat necessitate an additional crew for its manning?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, sir. The crew would be shifted from one boat to the other.

Mr. PAGE. This boat is not to take the place of the other boat; at least you do not propose to operate both of them; one is to relieve the other?

Mr. WILLIAMS. We do not propose to operate both boats. We are up against it at times. Sometimes we have from three to five thousand people coming in one day, and we have to do the best we can.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think it is apparent that all that is to be expended is the cost of this boat, because the crew will be transferred from boat to boat.

Mr. PAGE. But it requires only $3,000 or $4,000 a year to hire a boat to do the service while the present boat in commission is laid up for repairs, whereas if the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois should prevail we would expend $125,000 for a boat to be used three or four weeks in the year.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Might it not be possible to put the boat in service at some other port where it is needed when not needed in New York? Why should the boat be tied up exclusively for Ellis Island in view of the needs of immigration at other ports?

Mr. PAGE. I do not know as the purchase of this boat would help any other place.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If there was great necessity in Boston or Baltimore or Philadelphia, it should not be held up at the port of New York when it was in a running condition.

Mr. PAGE. But no such condition is shown to exist at Boston or Philadelphia or Baltimore.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There will be such a necessity at Boston and Philadelphia and Baltimore.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If this boat is authorized, it will not go to Philadelphia to take care of the immigration there, and the gentleman need not vote for it on such a misapprehension.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will do the best I can for Philadelphia, and when I want to be liberal——

Mr. PAGE. I heard the gentleman say that he was in favor of reciprocity.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In matters of this kind I am, and I am in favor of giving New York a square deal.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I am not personally familiar with Ellis Island or the necessity for the boat, except as the estimate is officially submitted, and I have read that to the House. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] represents a district near to Ellis Island. I do not know whether Ellis Island is situated in his district or not. I shall vote for this amendment upon the recommendation of the department, believing that it is a proper amendment, although the gentleman representing a district near by, knowing the necessities of the service, aliunde the recommendations of the department, does not favor it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to state these facts: This same estimate was presented to the Committee on Appropriations in two sessions of the last Congress. No one could justify it. It costs about $3,000 or $4,000 a year at the outside to engage a relief boat for the times when this boat is laid up. A few years ago a pipe line for water was built from New Jersey to Ellis Island, and immediately an estimate was submitted for a duplicate line upon the theory that because of an earthquake or some other unforeseen contingency this pipeline supply might be destroyed. The argument for this boat is that because of the large amount of traffic in the river and the danger of crossing the water about the lower part of New York there is great danger of collision and of propellers being broken and the boat being put out of commission. I am familiar with the situation there. I do not believe it would be justifiable to purchase this boat. If it be necessary to have a relief boat, the Government can obtain a boat that would do adequately for anything that is required at an expenditure of $30,000. I do not believe we would be justified in expending $125,000 to purchase a boat that would not be utilized over 30 or 40 days in a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer as a separate paragraph the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 145, after line 17, insert "For additional story to restaurant building, $80,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I will read the statement by the department on the submission of this estimate, and that is all I desire to say about it. The committee will note that I am reading rather than talking. The following note accompanied this estimate:

This will be largely used as quarters for cabin aliens. There are still none such, though we have to detain a great many cabin passengers. Most of them must sleep in rooms attached to the immigrant quarters in three-tier beds. As a result the Government receives from time to time serious complaints, some of them well founded. We are treating such passengers as best we can. It will continue to be necessary to detain considerable numbers of them, and they should have quarters corresponding to those which they have enjoyed on board ship. I made, in substance, the same comment last year.

A portion of the new space will also be used as a dormitory for the employees of the commissary contractor when they are obliged to spend the night here, as often they are. They now sleep on such occasions in the cellar, an insanitary and entirely inappropriate place.

That is all I have to say.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, the committee, in the consideration of this estimate sent in by the department for an additional story on this building, took into consideration two things—first, that if we allowed the estimate and the request for an additional story on the other building for additional quarters at Ellis Island, and when we took into consideration the fact that this building to which they propose to add an additional story, built in 1900, costing only $47,000, and they estimate for $80,000 to put on the additional story, it seemed to us that it was making the building just a little bit top-heavy. In addition to that, they did not insist upon this appropriation as they had on other requests that were made. Mr. Williams merely stated this additional room would be an advantage to the station in that it would give them a space in which they could temporarily keep first-cabin passengers, the idea being that they did not have at the present time sufficient room to give each one of these passengers a room with a bath, but particularly in view of the fact that here is a building that cost $47,000 12 years ago, upon which they propose to put an additional story to cost $80,000, the committee did not think it was wise to allow the estimate. We do not think now that it ought to be done, and I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk reads as follows:

Page 145, after line 17, insert:
"For enlargement of boiler plant in main power house, $40,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, all I desire to say touching this amendment is the note made by the department when it was forwarded to Congress. It is as follows:

NOTE.—This implies substitution of larger boilers for boilers now located in power house on south side of chimney and the removal of four 125-horsepower units that were installed in the power house in 1899, and the replacing of said 125-horsepower units by three 500-horsepower units of a type that has proved economical and efficient since power house was in part reconstructed two years ago. This will give us a steam plant of 1,000 additional horsepower, which is required by proposed increase in size of the buildings on main island, the increased demands for steam heating, lighting, pumping, and power incident to the growing business of this station.

I have said all I desire to say when I have read the note; but on my own motion I will suggest to the committee that in these days of increasing necessities for heating and lighting, in these days of invention, especially electrical invention, a plant in whole or in part soon becomes uneconomical. I am not acquainted with this plant and I only read what is officially submitted, and am content, so far as I am concerned, to let the committee pass upon the amendment.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, in regard to this item, it developed in the hearings before the committee that there has been authorized and provided on Ellis Island a reserve power plant of very considerable horsepower and capacity that has never been called into service. Mr. Williams testified they had never had occasion to use this reserve plant, and yet the department asked that we install and build an entirely new boiler plant when the evidence developed the fact that they already have a plant that is merely for reserve, and that up to this time it has not been called into service. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 145, after line 17, insert:
"For new story on southeast wing of main building, $70,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I read the following note explaining this estimate:

NOTE.—What was said last year about the inadequacy of the medical and statistical quarters in the main building remains substantially true except that new electrical devices recently installed in the statistical division will lessen its requirements, so that the statistical division could be accommodated in the proposed new story. The space vacated on lower floor can be advantageously added to the recently installed quarters of the medical division on that floor and give this division much needed additional space in which to detain for observation certain classes of immigrants whom it is not desirable to send to the hospital.

Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, I am ready for a vote.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, this is one other item submitted by this department for new service at Ellis Island which embraces not only the items that have been covered by amendments offered by the gentleman from Illinois, but practically an addition to a half dozen or possibly 10 new projects on this island. The committee held very extensive hearings and went very thoroughly into the necessity for this additional space at this immigration station, and after going carefully into it we reached the conclusion that the only necessity existing at this time was to have the item written into the bill for an additional story upon one of these buildings, and this we did. Now, the evidence before the committee shows that this additional story on this building was to provide for office space. There is no evidence that every single officer on the island now has not sufficient office space. There is some evidence to the effect that they need some storage room, but the committee did not believe this was the proper place to provide storage room for the various things that had to be stored by these people on the island, and the committee did not believe that the necessity exists at this time for this appropriation and this expenditure.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, every once in awhile I receive a letter from some gentleman who has visited Ellis Island and who complains somewhat bitterly against the accommodations which we provide there for the immigrants. How just those complaints may be, of course, I do not know. I presume they are usually exaggerated. We levy a tax on every immigrant who comes in, and the theory of levying that tax was that the money collected would be expended for the purpose of securing the comfort, the safety, the health, and the convenience of the immigrants who come to our shores. If a condition exists at Ellis Island to which just complaint can be made as to accommodations furnished there, certainly it would be only fair for the Government to use a little more money, which otherwise would be covered into the Treasury, and which is paid by the incoming immigrants, to provide suitable accommodations there. I am inclined to think that the authorities at Ellis Island who have recommended a large number of these items ought to have some of them provided for. I am inclined to think that the authorities there are probably better acquainted with the needs than even the committee or the House, though I would not have the committee provide everything that is asked merely because it is asked. But here these items come along one after another, and the gentleman gives specious or probable logical reasons for not providing the accommodations. It is submitted generally, I think, that the accommodations are not complete at Ellis Island, and I think we can afford to use something from time to time out of the money which the immigrants contribute——

Mr. SHERLEY. We are proposing to add a building that costs $350,000 in this bill.

Mr. MANN. That is true. The bill carries an additional story on the baggage and dormitory building, and I am extremely glad of it. That is one of nine or ten items which were submitted, I believe. Well, I would go a little further and provide a little more accommodations for the convenience, the comfort, the safety, and the health of those immigrants.

Mr. PAGE. Will the gentleman permit? This particular item and amendment that is pending will not affect in the slightest degree the health, comfort, or convenience of any immigrant who comes into Ellis Island. It is merely for the accommodation of office and storage space for the officers on the island.

Mr. MANN. I think it is not merely for the accommodation of the officers on the island. I think the gentleman is in error in that. For the accommodation of officers and storage space, and the purpose, I think, was to move the officers from some other place to this place.

Mr. PAGE. Yes; to use the place from which they moved for storage purposes.

Mr. MANN. Yes; and that is for the accommodations of the immigrants.

Mr. PAGE. Oh, incidentally.

Mr. MANN. Incidentally, directly, that is what it is for. It gives more space somewhere else. The storage is not for the benefit of the officers of the island.

Mr. PAGE. This storage is the storage of the records of the office.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman makes that statement——

Mr. PAGE. Of the records running back until 1871.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman makes that statement I accept it as true.

Mr. PAGE. That is the statement made.

Mr. MANN. If it is necessary for the storage of records, there ought to be provided a place for the storage of records.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. The question raised by the gentleman from Illinois is an exceedingly important one, and it throws a new light upon the immigration question. We have been providing very largely for the reception of immigrants at the port of New York. It is a question whether we should concentrate all of the immigration business at any one port. We have other immigrant stations along the Atlantic seaboard and along the Pacific coast. We have long frontier lines along the border of Canada and the border of Mexico, and there is great difficulty with regard to the tracing of immigrants along the border lines.

Sometimes, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, it would be a good thing for this Congress to take up the question of the distribution of the immigration as it comes into the ports of the country. The vast amount of it, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] said a moment ago, comes into the port of New York. That is the undisputed fact. When we received a million immigrants a year the great proportion of them came into that port. They centralize there largely and take their departure from that point to points of destination throughout the country. But the congestion of population in the large centers, in the great municipalities, arises largely from the tendency to not properly distribute the business.

A bill is now pending before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization which proposes to abandon even the bureau of distribution we now have, and this I am opposed to. The concentration of the foreign element in the great cities is a problem with which the best thinkers upon the subject of immigration have been endeavoring to deal. They generally believe that a proper distribution and assimilation of these immigrants would be a good thing, not only for the commercial but for the agricultural interests of the country; that it would be a good thing in the way of opening up certain undeveloped sections of the country, of improving the natural resources, and doing that heavy work which usually falls upon the backs of the newcomers to this country.

I am glad the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has raised this question. It is broader than that of the amendment which is now before the House. It is a question as to what Congress ought to do to properly distribute the immigrants who come here. Immigrants and commerce come together, and we ought to provide for their distribution so that they will not be concentrated at one or two points in the country to the great disadvantage of all other points.

Mr. BUTLER. Will my colleague permit me to ask a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Does not he think it quite important that Congress should pass an immigration law to provide places for landing immigrants?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If I can get 15 minutes before these paragraphs are passed, I am prepared to discuss that question. I am not in favor of certain restrictive laws that are now pending in Congress. I am in favor of every law that tends to restrict undesirable immigration—that immigration which is cunning, vicious, or criminal, and that immigration which does not want to work in the United States. I am going to ask at the proper time that I may have 10 or 15 minutes in which to discuss this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 145, after line 17, by inserting:
"For renovating interior of old hospital on No. 2 Island, including new plumbing, and sanitary fittings, and new floors, $40,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I will read the comment of the Department of Commerce and Labor in transmitting this estimate, as follows:

NOTE.—Existing plumbing, fittings, and floors were installed some 11 years ago, were of comparatively inexpensive character, and have been subjected to very hard use by immigrants. This plumbing, if it existed to-day in a New York hospital, would be condemned by the board of health. It does not comply with the present building code requirements.

That is all of the comment I desire to read that comes from the department. I want to say one additional word. This plumbing is 11 years old. I have had experience with plumbing in a house. I built a house in 1876, and it was plumbed then, and it has been plumbed five times since then, and I do not know but that it may have to be plumbed again. You may take this Capitol, and the plumbing is going on in it constantly. It is a great matter to properly plumb buildings. All the time plumbing is being perfected. Now, if this man who makes this estimate that is approved by the department tells the truth, this item ought to be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. PAGE. I want to say in regard to this particular appropriation that the gentleman appearing before the committee in relation to it said in reply to questions that this item had been recommended by the physician in charge of the hospital, and he personally knew nothing of the particular needs for this item in this appropriation. The gentleman speaks of the continual necessity of plumbing in the building. I suppose most of us who have buildings have had plumbing to do in connection with them every year. But the plumbing in that building has been repaired in this way all these years. It is, as is explained in the report, the same as the plumbing in this Capitol, or any other Government building. The representation made to the committee was not of that character and force as made us feel warranted in making an appropriation at this time for the renovation of the building.

And I want to say further, Mr. Chairman, being reminded of it by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], that in the minds of the committee, touching all these items respecting Ellis Island and the vast improvements that they are requesting, this station has reached partly, if not entirely, the zenith of its growth, and it is not going to handle in the years to come the same number of immigrants that it has handled in recent years. The Government has established immigration stations at other ports of the country. Steamship lines have been established between European ports and other ports in America besides New York, and the immigrants coming into this country are being more widely scattered than they have been in the past history of immigration. The committee, therefore, does not believe, in view of these facts and this tendency, and in view of the pressure that is being brought to bear by gentlemen representing other localities than New York City and Ellis Island, that for any considerable length of time there is going to be the necessity for room and accommodation at Ellis Island that now exists; and in view of these facts I do not believe that these estimates are warranted or that the appropriations asked for should be granted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 145, after line 17, insert the following: "For construction of covered way connecting No. 2 and No. 3 Islands, $60,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I read the recommendation of the department touching this amendment:

Both these islands are occupied by hospitals. They are connected by a pile gangway. It will be necessary frequently to carry sick people from one to the other, and in wintertime this can not be done without danger to life. It is earnestly recommended that proposed covered way be of fireproof construction, including its piles and foundations. The present covered way, connecting the various buildings on No. 1 Island and No. 2 Island, is of wood with slate roof. It is more or less of a fire risk and in time should be replaced. Moreover, the piles constituting foundation are beginning to deteriorate near the heads thereof and probably within five years at least the flooring system of said wooden covered way will have to be replaced. It would seem undesirable to use wood in the new construction.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

A few days ago the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BERGER] introduced a resolution on the floor of the House charging Judge Cornelius H. Hanford, of the western district of the State of Washington, with corruption, drunkenness, and immorality. I am in receipt of resolutions passed by the board of trustees of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce in relation to these charges, with the request that they be read on the floor of the House.

I send them to the Speaker's desk, and ask that the Clerk read them in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Would not the gentleman be willing to have them printed? This is entirely foreign to the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Let them be read in my time.

Mr. SHERLEY. I know; but the gentleman is talking about a matter entirely foreign to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. I shall not object this time, but I will object to any other foreign matter that is brought in.

The CHAIRMAN. No objection is heard, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW SEATTLE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Seattle, Wash.

In view of the unfounded charges made in Congress against the character of our neighbor, Judge Cornelius H. Hanford, it becomes our duty, in the interests of truth and justice, to speak out in his defense.

He has lived in this community for 58 years. He has been known to us for many years—to some of us for more than 30 years.

We know that he is an honest, moral, sober, and fearless man; that he is patriotic and public spirited, and that since his early manhood, now more than 40 years, he has taken an active and prominent part in every worthy movement for the good of the community. Always a hard worker, he has never been sparing of himself when the public interest called for his help.

If he had given to his private affairs the time, energy, and faithful attention so freely given to the public he would not be, as he is now, a poor man in his old age. The State has never had a better, more upright, or more patriotic citizen.

Presented by Mr. E. F. Sweeney.

Adopted by board of trustees June 11, 1912.

[SEAL.] C. B. YANDELL, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The qusetion was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 145, line 17, insert "for inclosing in glass the two-story corridor of contagious-disease hospital, with incidental work, $28,000."

Mr. CANNON. I will read the note submitted by the department in the estimate:

NOTE.—The present corridor connects the entire group of buildings on No. 3 Island, except the isolation wards and the office building. In a rainstorm and in winter weather it will obviously be difficult to afford patients, nurses, and attendants proceeding from one building to another proper protection and to keep food warm, hence the recommendation for this inclosure.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON) there were 14 ayes and 34 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 145, after line 17, insert "For dredging channels about Ellis Island, $25,000."

Mr. CANNON. The note in the estimates for this appropriation is as follows:

NOTE.—The conditions prevailing in New York Harbor, where the bottom is largely soft mud and silt, coupled with great quantities of solid matter deposited by the sewers and by the flow of the Hudson River, necessitates our dredging with growing frequency in order to insure proper access to the three islands and maintain our channels and slips.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, to save time, seeing that all of these amendments are being voted down, and I presume these will, I ask unanimous consent to offer the four following amendments and have them considered as one amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 145, after line 17, insert:

"For improvements to power house and laundry of contagious-disease hospital, including rearrangement of machinery and equipments therein, $5,000."

Page 145, after line 17, insert:

"For enlarging central kitchen building of contagious-disease hospital, including changes in construction and equipment incidental thereto, $30,000."

Page 145, after line 17, insert:

"For disinfecting plant for contagious-disease hospital, including necessary building and concrete dock appertaining thereto, $17,500."

Page 145, after line 17, insert:

"For garbage crematory and concrete dock appurtenant thereto for contagious-disease hospital, $17,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the improvements provided for in these amendments offered by my colleague relate to the contagious-disease hospital. The treatment of contagious diseases in recent years has progressed to a very remarkable extent. We take better care of contagious diseases than we used to everywhere in the United States, except possibly at Ellis Island. They take better care of them there. Only a few years ago a man who had some form of contagious disease was stuck out in a building not fit to live in, and nobody permitted to go near him, except some one to leave food and then hustle away. Now, if these people coming in here, paying this head tax, have a contagious disease when they land they ought to be properly taken care of. If they need additional facilities at Ellis Island, as they say they do, to provide proper care for these people who have contagious diseases, both for the benefit of the person who has the disease and those who do not want it, they ought to have additional facilities. I wish gentlemen could see their way clear, having voted down all the other amendments, to permit these propositions in behalf of the people afflicted with contagious diseases to be properly provided for.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman from Illinois were acquainted with the facts, he would not urge these amendments.

Mr. MANN. Is that the case with the authorities? They are familiar with the facts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can draw his own conclusions when I state the facts. The contagious hospital and facilities connected therewith providing for the care of immigrants who may be afflicted with contagious diseases was completed over two years ago. There were erected on what is known as Island No. 3, a group of buildings at Ellis Island. They were not utilized until the 1st of last July. The buildings and arrangements were constructed upon plans agreed upon after many conferences between the physician in the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service and the Supervising Architect.

After they have been utilizing this plant about six months the doctor desires some of the building torn down and many things done that were gone into thoroughly, and thoroughly considered and decided against. Part of these improvements contemplate the destruction of buildings that have not been in use for six months and which are considered adequate and ample by everybody except one man in the service. Under all of the circumstances the committee was convinced that not only were the facilities sufficient and ample, but that there was no justification whatever for the requests made in these items. Therefore they did not recommend them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the four amendments offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendments were rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offered this further amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 145, after line 17, insert:

"For a building on the westerly side of main island for use as a carpenter shop, general storeroom, and bakery, $60,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I merely state that this is a specially submitted item, and I shall not take the time to read the note of the department accompanying it, because it seems to me that the steam roller is operating in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

IMMIGRATION SERVICE.

Expenses of regulating immigration: For all expenses of the enforcement of the laws regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States, including the contract-labor laws; for the costs of the reports of decisions of the Federal courts, and digests thereof, for the use of the Commissioner General of Immigration; for salaries and expenses of all officers, clerks, and employees appointed to enforce said laws; for the enforcement of the provisions of the act of February 20, 1907, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States" and acts amendatory thereof; for expenses of necessary supplies, including exchange of typewriting machines, alterations, and repairs, and for all other expenses authorized by said act; also for preventing the unlawful entry of Chinese into the United States, by the appointment of suitable officers to enforce the laws in relation thereto, and the expenses of returning to China all Chinese persons found to be unlawfully in the United States, including the cost of imprisonment and actual expense of conveyance of Chinese persons to the frontier or seaboard for deportation, and for the refunding of head tax upon presentation of evidence showing conclusively that collection was made through error of Government officers; all to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, $2,500,000: Provided, That all charges for maintenance or return of Chinese persons applying for admission to the United States shall hereafter be paid or reimbursed to the United States by the person, company, partnership, or corporation bringing such Chinese to a port of the United States as applicants for admission.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to amend, on page 147, line 10, by striking out "$2,500,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,575,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 147, line 10, strike out the figures "$2,500,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$2,575,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire the especial attention of the committee to this amendment. The appropriations for expenses regulating immigration, this item, for the current year are $2,525,000. The estimate is $2,575,000 for the coming year.

The recommendation carried by this bill is $2,500,000, $25,000 less than for the current year and $75,000 less than the estimate. It will be noticed that this provision is a very important one, covering much for the enforcement of the law and for the prevention of violations of it in connection with immigration, including the return of Chinese, including the cost of imprisonment and actual expenses of conveyance of Chinese to the frontier or seaport for deportation. It is very broad, and the appropriation is a very important one. In my judgment, instead of skimping the appropriation, instead of decreasing the amount recommended, not only $75,000 below the estimate but $25,000 below the appropriation for the current year, we should be more liberal, and the course of the committee is not defendable. If I had my way, I would like to make this appropriation ample. I would provide for the enforcement of the law against extraordinary possibilities. I believe the appropriation ought to be amply sufficient for the ordinary enforcement of the law and, if necessary, for the extraordinary conditions that might arise in its enforcement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois might have called attention to the fact that for the current year the estimate is $2,600,000 instead of $2,575,000, and the appropriation granted by Congress for the current year was $75,000 less than the estimate, so that in that respect the committee this year has not taken any different route from the one followed heretofore.

Mr. CANNON. It is stated in the report that the $2,525,000——

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the estimate was $2,600,000.

Mr. CANNON. And $2,525,000 appropriated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; $75,000 less than the estimate. The reduction was due partly to two reasons: One was that a provision was made by which about $50,000 is reimbursed to the immigration service for expenses of detained aliens, paid for from the appropriation for the expense of regulating aliens and afterwards collected from the steamship companies. In 1910 786,094 immigrants came to this country. In 1911 the number was 637,003, over 100,000 less; and the immigration this year will probably be less than the immigration of 1910. Yet, regardless of the extent of the decrease of the immigration, the cost of the service apparently never changes. The committee believed, in view of all of the circumstances, that the department could very readily conduct the service with $2,500,000, with the additional $50,000 which will be reimbursed to the appropriation under the law enacted last year. Believing that much would be sufficient, the committee recommended that amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the Appropriations Committee is entitled to our acknowledgments for having inserted in this bill the item of $105,000 to complete the Philadelphia immigration station at Gloucester, N. J. This item, added to the $250,000 originally appropriated from the "immigrant fund" before it was absorbed by the General Treasury, will admit of the completion of a first-class immigration station at the port of Philadelphia, where it has been long and urgently needed. The new station is eligibly located on the Delaware River, opposite Philadelphia, and will be equipped in such manner as give a favorable impression to the newcomer to our shores—a matter of much civic importance, since the quality of citizenship arising from immigration is frequently influenced by first impressions, which, in the instance of the old Philadelphia immigrant shambles, were certainly not calculated to inspire confidence or hope in the breast of the immigrant seeking a haven here.

Just now there is reawakened interest in the Delaware River, due to channel improvement. Shippers are coming to regard the river at its true worth as a carrier of commerce, and the port of Philadelphia has induced a number of large steamship companies to avail themselves of its facilities. An increased number of immigrants arriving at Philadelphia has been a feature of this development. In this respect the city has taken second place in the number of immigrants received, being exceeded this year only by the great port of New York. Five years ago it held fourth place, being behind New York, Boston, and Baltimore.

ALIENS WHO ARE EXCLUDED.

And so long as we have been discussing items relating to the reception and treatment of immigrants, I desire as a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to say a word about the immigrant himself. We will be called upon shortly to pass upon bills which are designed to restrict immigration even beyond the limitations fixed by existing law. As the law now stands we are fairly well safeguarded in this country against unfair immigration. Precautions already taken by Congress are noted in the immigration act of February 20, 1907. A careful reading of section 2 of this act is illuminating and ought to correct many misrepresentations with regard to the alleged insufficiency of existing law.

The section quoted reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons, and persons who have been insane within five years previous; persons who have had two or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; paupers; persons likely to become a public charge; professional beggars; persons afflicted with tuberculosis or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease; persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living; persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; polygamists, or persons who admit their belief in the practice of polygamy; anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all government, or of all forms of law, or the assassination of public officials; prostitutes, or women or girls coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who procure or attempt to bring in prostitutes or women or girls for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons, hereinafter called contract laborers, who have been induced or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment or in consequence of agreements, oral, written or printed, express or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled; those who have been, within one year from the date of application for admission to the United States, deported as having been induced or solicited to migrate as above described; any person whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another, or who is assisted by others to come, unless it is affirmatively and satisfactorily shown that such person does not belong to one of the foregoing excluded classes, and that said ticket or passage was not paid for by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign government, either directly or indirectly; all children under 16 years of age unaccompanied by one or both of their parents, at the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor or under such regulations as he may from time to time prescribe: Provided, That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted of an offense purely political, not involving moral turpitude: Provided further, That the provisions of this section relating to the payments for tickets or passage by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign government shall not apply to the tickets or passage of aliens in immediate and continuous transit through the United States to foreign contiguous territory: And provided further, That skilled labor may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country: And provided further, That the provisions of this law applicable to contract labor shall not be held to exclude professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, persons belonging to any recognized learned profession, or persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants.

This provision would seem to justify the statement that if the United States is to be regarded as a free country to which the downtrodden and oppressed may come, we have already excluded about as many of the so-called undesirable classes as may be reasonably excepted from that hospitality which the spirit of our institutions dictates. We have provided for the exclusion of the vicious, the helpless, the criminal, the contract laborer, and the otherwise undesirable.

THE LABORER OR THE LECTURER: WHICH?

But it is contended by some of the patriotic societies and by some of the leaders of labor unions that existing law does not go far enough; that we should take one more step and bar the man or woman who can not read or write—not the actor nor the lecturer nor the minister, mark you; but the man who can not read or write.

Apart from certain other exactions, this barrier, known as the "illiteracy test," is the essence of both the Burnett and the Dillingham bills. Favoring the illiteracy test are those who believe it necessary to preserve American traditions from what they conceive to be a baneful assimilation, and on behalf of certain labor unions it has been said that an increase in immigration will tend to lower wages, reduce the opportunities for employment, and thus lessen the power of the unions. At the same time we have been confronted not only by a demand for labor, which the unlettered immigrant is supposed to supply, but by the broader and more important factor of humanity itself. The hearings have developed hundreds of opinions from intelligent men ranged upon either side of the question, and although in some instances passion and prejudice have been manifested, it is evident that trained and serious-minded men have been working upon this subject. But the outcome of it all, notwithstanding the great variety of views expressed and the tremendous volume of statistics produced, has, up to the present time, failed to carry us beyond this one plain, all-pervading, and all-significant question:

Shall those of us whose citizenship in the United States was acquired by birth or naturalization deny the right of admission to those who knock at our doors even as our forefathers did merely because they can not read or write?

That is the whole problem. It is not a question of goods made more cheaply in foreign countries than under American conditions; it is not a question of money at all nor of any inanimate article of merchandise; it is a question of flesh and blood, of men and women and children with human impulses, seeking release from the bondage of ignorance and oppression.

DRAWING THE LINE TIGHT.

By some we have been told that the labor unions will suffer from the immigration of the unlettered immigrant. This is not orthodox labor doctrine. Organized labor is supposed to sympathize with the downtrodden masses. Are we now to understand that it has arrayed itself with the man who plots and works with his wits against the man who works with his hands? It is inconceivable that organized labor has so far drifted from its moorings as to thus impose the brand of despair upon the hopes of the pleading poor. Section 2 of the act of 1907 specifically bars the contract laborer. In this the unions have a legitimate shield. It is unlawful now for any workman, skilled or unskilled, to come into the United States under agreement, promise, or contract. He can not thus unfairly compete with American labor. In this respect the law is effective. It applies to a commercial rather than to a humane transaction. But the law does more than that. It forbids the anarchist; it forbids admission to the pauper or to the prostitute; it forbids admission to the criminal or the diseased or to those who are unable to support themselves. All these and more are barred now. If any of them come into the country they come in violation of existing law and are subject to deportation. What, then, is the purpose of these restrictive measures? In the last analysis it is this: To tighten the legal net which is already drawn around the borders of our country, to enmesh and turn back the man or woman who is neither an anarchist nor a criminal nor a prostitute nor a pauper nor a contract laborer, but who is so unfortunate as to be unable to read or write.

Regardless of his adaptability for labor or other worthy service in the United States, the immigrant who seeks a residence here intending to study our language and our customs, to obey our laws, and to do menial toil which is essential to our progress is to be confronted with this blunt and startling admonition: You are not wanted in the United States; only the educated and the clever need apply.

I do not believe the spirit of our institutions warrants any such treatment of the unfortunate alien of to-day, for he is merely following in the footsteps of the alien of yesterday and of the day before, and so on back to the scholarly vagabonds of the earliest settlements against whose deviltry and worthlessness no such line was drawn.

A MATTER OF ADMINISTRATION.

Much of the agitation in favor of these restrictive bills arises from the fact that many of the classes already proscribed by law do manage by hook or crook to enter the United States in violation of existing law. We have long coast lines on the Atlantic and the Pacific and along the Gulf, and thousands of miles of border separating us from Canada and Mexico. It is sometimes charged that Asiatics have been smuggled over these borders. Doubtless there is some truth in the assertion, but will a law prohibiting the admission of a well-intentioned alien who can not read or write prevent the designing smuggler from finding his way in? It is not the fault of existing law that a forbidden alien stealthily crosses the Frazer River in the Northwest or hides along the Rio Grande for a favorable opportunity of crossing over from Mexico. This is a problem of administration, and we have met that problem by existing law. No law is sufficient to prevent a crime. We may enact laws defining murder and providing a punishment for it, but murder will be committed in spite of any law. We can punish the murderer; that is all. So with the undesirable immigrant. If he sneaks in in violation of law, we can detect and punish him. We may enact drastic laws against criminals or anarchists, and yet they will evade the law in spite of every effort to properly enforce it. We may arrest them after they have evaded the law and we may deport them. This is purely a matter of administration.

On arriving at any one of the ports of this country an educated alien may respond to every requirement of the law to the satisfaction of the most relentless restrictionist, and yet he may have it in his heart to commit murder or to secretly conspire against the constitution and the laws of the United States. To impose upon all immigrants an educational test would seem to offer a loophole of escape for the scholarly but dangerous and undesirable alien, while it would bar the worthy and law-abiding, but unlettered immigrant whose honest labor in this country is not to be despised. And it is safe to say that the unlettered immigrant is the least likely to attempt a violation of the law by tricks of which the educated immigrant is capable.

PUTTING EDUCATION ABOVE LABOR.

It is one of the phenomena of the industrial and social evolution through which we are passing in the United States that manual or physical labor, such as is necessary for the construction of public works and for the promotion of our domestic comfort, is growing less available as popular education advances. The educated American boy, whether he is native or of foreign birth, is looking over and above the drudgery of manual labor and is growing more and more inclined to enter the professions or to seek the occupations which do not soil the hands. And yet if we are to till the soil and make it productive; if we are to dig the trenches and lay the bricks and mortar; if we are to rear the edifice from cellar walls to the highest pinnacles, we must have the burden-bearing laborer, as we must have the mechanic or the architect. It is no stretch of the imagination to say that in large measure we have depended for the roughest and the lowliest work in connection with our great enterprises upon those who have come from other shores; those who have been seeking through long years of rugged toil the right to obtain a livelihood for themselves and their families, and to give their children a fairer start in life's competition than they enjoyed themselves. Nor is it any more a stretch of the imagination to say that our great architects and builders of to-day, the managers and directors of our great industrial enterprises, and the owners of our farms are perplexed even now by the problem of labor, in that those who are willing to accept emolument as teachers, and preachers, and professors of labor are ever in the ascendant, while the actual laborer is gradually disappearing from the scene of action.

THE PLODDING WORKER AND THE AGITATOR.

If, then, we have work to do, if the efficiency of our industrial establishments, the supremacy of our farms, and the integrity of our American traditions are to be preserved, why should we bar from the country those who come in good faith seeking the same opportunities our forefathers sought and who are willing to take their turn at the foot of the ladder of fate? We are proud of our educational institutions, proud of the freedom of educational facilities to the masses, but surely we have not forgotten the value of labor, whether it is crude or refined. The restrictive bills, which we are soon to discuss, are questionable in this respect: They seek to improve the standard of immigration by increasing the number of nonlaboring professionals and by reducing the number of laboring nonprofessionals. Not only do they give us those that we have, but they also take away from us those that we have not. If the immigrant belongs to the tribe of teachers and propagandists who hold themselves above labor, these bills permit him to join the increasing army of the intellectually restless and discontented; but if he is only a plodding workman, who has not the power to preach anarchy or to write sedition, he can take himself hence. It is neither a wise nor a humane proposition.

We could better afford to repeal that paragraph of section 2 of the act above quoted, which excepts "professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, persons belonging to any recognized learned profession," than to exclude the unlettered laborer. The honest and serviceable toil of the latter is of equal, if not of greater value to the country, than the vocal or artistic services of the former. Moreover, it has already been demonstrated that the United States is capable of supplying about as many actors, artists, lecturers, and others of the professional classes as the demand in this country reasonably warrants.

ENCOURAGING FALSE DOCTRINES.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, the scholarly foreigner who is coming to this country for reasons of his own, who will comply with every educational test, is not going into the trenches and the sewers to obtain his daily bread. If obliged to do this, it will not be long before we may expect to see him preaching on the street corners the doctrines of disloyalty that are becoming all too frequent in the United States. To turn aside the willing worker because he can not read or write, and to admit the unscrupulous nonworker who can read and write and who can agitate and can preach discontent and who will do nothing else, seems like an invitation to the restless and disorderly, to make sport of the Nation's beneficence, and to degrade that worthy, wealth-creating, and most desirable labor which has been the basis of our national prosperity. Indeed, a careful study of the social conditions which now prevail seem to justify the conclusion that the unrest and discontent of the people is not due so much to ignorance as it is to half-baked and misdirected education.

The stories of the early attempts at settlement in the Colonies are rife with incidents of failure, due to the incompetence of the sprigs of foreign aristocracy and to the "remittance men," who neither understood the art of earning their own living nor cared to be involved in the attempt. We owe nothing to these useless but generously educated mendicants. The growth of this country to a population exceeding 92,000,000 and to a position of eminence throughout the world was in spite of them. Their experience was valuable to us only in that it taught us the lesson that labor is honorable and that it was absolutely essential to the perpetuity of a nation as it is to the maintenance of human life.

NOTHING TO BE GAINED BY OPPRESSION.

I do not see that anything is to be gained by driving back from our shores deserving men and women who are anxious and willing to work. It will not increase our patriotism nor advance the interests of our labor unions. In many avenues of employment we are sadly in need of their services now. They come to us seeking freedom from conditions abroad which many of them hold to be intolerable. They know the terms upon which they can come. They must be law abiding; they must be industrious; they must be free from disease; they must be willing to assimilate and to conform to the laws of our country; and they must bear their share of the burdens which we have assumed. Will an educational test sift out those who are unworthy and admit only those who are desirable? The propagandist will come in; the trouble maker will not be barred by an educational test: but the peaceful, willing laborer can not be admitted if he falls short of the literary requirement. To enforce this test against the unlettered poor is plainly giving the palm to the educated rascal. The latter can enter and work out his will, for he is clever and alert; but the desirable worker who will be useful will be returned to the wretched and benighted surroundings from which, with the same hopes and aspirations that actuated our forefathers, he was induced to flee.

I shall not vote for the illiteracy test because I believe it to be contrary to American principles. It will be ineffectual as a means of restricting undesirable immigration, and bears down unnecessarily upon the lowly and deserving suppliant for American citizenship. Moreover, it will render hopeless tens of thousands of God's humble creatures who appeal to us as a favored people, believing us to be liberty loving and humane.

OUR NATION STRONG AND GENEROUS.

We have been strong enough as a nation to receive all those who came from foreign shores who were willing and anxious to assimilate with us. In our treatment of Cuba and the Philippines we have crossed the very threshold of international philanthropy. In the construction of the Panama Canal we have proven that we can be as generous in commerce as we have been in our treatment of individuals. No one questions our ability to enact laws that will protect the sacred institutions of our country, nor our courage to administer them. Why should we now turn from the pathway of freedom and opportunity which we have justly and proudly maintained for more than a century? Is it because some vicious person forced his way into our country in violation of our laws? Is it because some preacher of social unrest, some wild-eyed malcontent, has made a futile assault upon our social fabric? Is it because some lowly sojourner, teased and tantalized by heartless hoodlums, has turned in anger and smitten his tormentors; or is it because some moral leper has violated the sanctity of the home or rendered fatherless dependent children? Suppose it be for one or all of these offenses, we are still 92,000,000 of people, descendants of all the nations of the earth, with courts and officers of law a plenty, with forums and tribunals. Are we not able to cope with these excrescences? To say we are not is such an indictment of our administrative officers as few of us would care to confess.

I would not ask nor tolerate the admission to the United States of any person morally unfit to come, but this is not a question of morals; it is a question of humanity. If we are to practice the uplift; if we are not to deny that brotherhood of man which we so devoutly preach we can not turn aside the innocent and the worthy, though illiterate, upon the pretense that we are holier than they are. We may guard our ports and border lines against the foreign malefactor. That is a duty we owe to our country and to our firesides, but we can not place the seal of American condemnation upon the law-abiding poor without doing violence to our own traditions.

In my judgment the illiteracy test ought not to be enacted into law.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that while the committee has under consideration matters affecting the Immigration Service, which has to do with our new citizens or our citizens-to-be, we might properly pause for a moment and consider the standards and ethics of life, political and otherwise, followed by our present citizens.

I hold in my hand a report of the debate which took place in this House on the 15th of March, 1910. A few days prior to that the Hon. Wade Ellis had resigned as an official in the Department of Justice. A day or two before March 15, 1910, he had been appointed chairman of the Republican committee in the great State of Ohio, a relation which was characterized in this debate by Mr. CLARK, now Speaker of this House, as the receiver for the Republican Party in our State, a title which seems to have been borne out by events. It was charged that day on this floor that Mr. Ellis gave up a position paying him $7,000 per year with the full knowledge that he would be employed by the Government and paid out of the Treasury a sum equal to, if not in excess of, his $7,000 per year. The debate brought some champions of Mr. Ellis from the other side of the House, who insisted that he was on that day off the pay roll, and that he would not go back on the pay roll. Some one had inquired while the debate was in progress whether a pay roll had ensued following his resignation, and it developed that there had been none. Attention was then called to this circumstance, that it was in contemplation that Mr. Ellis would be employed ostensibly to take care of certain trust proceedings, against certain great combinations, and that while he was giving his time to the affairs of the Republican Party in the State of Ohio he would be compensated out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. LONGWORTH, our colleague from Ohio, had something to say, and I want to say now that I hesitate to make this reference in his absence. In fact, any discussion of this phase of the bill, which carries $200,000 for trust prosecutions, has been delayed by me entirely from a sense of propriety, because I would prefer our colleague from Ohio to be here. However, I notice in the public print that he is entered in a fiddling tournament at Chicago, and it is not the first time in history when a great statesman has followed his musical impulses, which tied him to a fiddle, while affairs of state were going to the devil generally. So I am sorry that our colleague is away. He gave us the assurance that day that Mr. Ellis was not only not on the pay roll, but would not be employed by the Government in the conduct of these trust prosecutions. I quote him literally in these words:

Mr. LONGWORTH. The fact is, I presume, Mr. Ellis has had experience in the trial of these Beef Trust cases, and he for some time will give the benefit of his information to his successor, possibly, and I say my only statement is that he is not and will not be paid out of the funds of the department or any other department.

Now, it developed in the recent hearings held by the subcommittee of the general Committee on Appropriations that Mr. Ellis was employed subsequent to March, 1910, in the prosecution of certain trust cases, and there is this marked coincidence, that in two years' time he has drawn in compensation for this service $14,500, almost to the dollar the same amount of money he would have drawn had he remained in the Department of Justice and claimed his original salary of $7,000 per year. Our colleague from Ohio is not a man of loose information. He felt that he knew what he was talking about. There is no one in this presence who would make the charge that he was acting in bad faith with the House, so that the only logical conclusion is that he was imposed upon by the administration. I recall that the debate went on, and Mr. JAMES, of Kentucky, and myself asked him whether he had the means of knowing the inside secrets of the administration. In fact, some one made the observation that he attended the pink teas at the White House, and our misgivings and doubts were cleared away entirely when our colleague from Ohio made the positive statement that public money would not be paid out in compensating a State political manager.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COX of Ohio. May I have just one minute more?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Take five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Ohio will be permitted to proceed for one minute. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Now, in the name of the great Commonwealth of Ohio, I want to protest against the Federal administration doing such violence to the credulity of one of her honored sons. I think the record should be thoroughly and well rounded out, however, and that this committee should understand that this appointment in the State of Ohio of a purely partisan relation was made and the money of the people was taken to pay the appointee for his services. I have no fault to find with Mr. Ellis. He is an honored resident of our State; he is eminent as a lawyer and stands high as a citizen. The cases, it develops, were prosecuted to no successful end, and I imagine Mr. Ellis was following the policy of the administration, which never seriously had in mind a successful issue. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman takes his seat, I would like to have his time extended for the purpose of asking him a question, or I will take the floor in my own right. Is it contended that Mr. Ellis did not render able and efficient service to the Government of the United States for the amount of money that he received?

Mr. COX of Ohio. Has the gentleman finished his question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is the question; is it contended that he did not render able and efficient service?

Mr. COX of Ohio. That is not the thing at issue. This House was imposed upon that day.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is the issue now. It will not be charged and has not been, I think, against this administration that it has been very partial to partisan Republicans in making appointments, either to the Supreme Court Bench or in the appointment of attorneys in the prosecution of special cases or Cabinet officials nor in the appointment of an able advocate on the Supreme Court.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was because it was necessary to go outside of the Republican Party to get a good man.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not at all. Does the gentleman from Ohio——

Mr. COX of Ohio. Let me answer your other question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understood the gentleman stated there was no question but very able service was rendered.

Mr. COX of Ohio. No; I did not say that; I said that was not the thing at issue. Now, the gentleman has asked a question, and if you will give me time I will reply.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then answer the question.

Mr. COX of Ohio. On that day, when this matter was up——

Mr. MANN. What matter was up?

Mr. COX of Ohio. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was under consideration. The assurance was given to the House that Mr. Ellis would doubtless give some of his time to his successor because of his familiarity with the Beef Trust cases, but that he would not be paid out of the funds of the Treasury or any other department. It was clearly inferred that he was passing on to some dignified station, and that he would give his services to the country for nothing, and the Republican organization, or some individual or individuals, would pay for such services as he rendered here.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] complain because that was not done? Does he complain because Mr. Wade Ellis did not give his services to the Government for nothing in his prosecution of this case?

Mr. COX of Ohio. The gentleman misunderstands the tenor of the debate entirely. I rose here in my place and voiced my protest in behalf of a great State against the administration imposing upon a representative from our State [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Of course, I hold no brief for the genial gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. COX of Ohio. As a matter of fact, I am not sure but we are discussing a great episode in history. It may be that out of this circumstance grows the great feud in the Republican Party.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has expired.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the possibly next governor of Ohio [applause] what the incident was that he referred to that occurred in the House? What was the occasion of that debate in the House?

Mr. COX of Ohio. We had under consideration the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and at that time the appropriation for the conduct of these trust prosecutions was carried in that bill, as I understand it. Subsequently it was transferred to the sundry civil bill, because it was a miscellaneous expense of the Department of Justice.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there were several debates in the House which brought in the name of Mr. Ellis—one, I think, on that bill; one on another appropriation bill; and one on a bill providing for an additional Federal judge in Ohio. I took part in the debate. I think I was not credited at the time with being an ardent defender of Mr. Ellis. It may be that my distinguished friend was imposed upon, but I do not believe that anybody else in the House had his credulity imposed upon. I think the House very well understood the situation. There were several statements made, not for the purpose of imposing upon the House. Some of the statements were erroneous, and therefore corrected by gentlemen who made them; and I submit to my genial friend from Ohio [Mr. Cox] that under existing conditions, with the responsibilities which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] has resting on his shoulders just now, that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox], candidate for governor, ought not to be attacking the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], his colleague from this side of the House.

Mr. COX of Ohio. On the contrary, I am defending a man that your administration or your side of the House flimflammed. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. No; I do not think this side of the House flimflammed anybody. The support of the bill, which was the real subject of controversy, came largely from that side of the House. I was opposing it from this side of the House.

Mr. COX of Ohio. You were a sporadic instance in your opposition. You had no support over there.

Mr. MANN. I am glad to know that the gentleman considers my opposition sporadic. Some people consider it perennial.

Mr. COX of Ohio. I simply want to assure my colleague that I arise purely in a patriotic spirit to defend one of our fellow Members here who has been violently and unkindly imposed upon.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope he will do as much for the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] in a short time.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNDER LEGISLATIVE.

Statement of appropriations: For preparation, under the direction of the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives, of the statements showing appropriations made, new offices created, offices the salaries of which have been omitted, increased, or reduced, indefinite appropriations, and contracts authorized, together with a chronological history of the regular appropriation bills passed during the first and second sessions of the Sixty-second Congress, as required by the act approved October 19, 1888, $4,000, to be paid to the persons designated by the chairmen of said committees to do said work.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a question with reference to this item. I see here reference is made to "new offices created." Has the committee made any investigation into the facilities and abilities of the several district attorneys of the United States to conduct prosecutions, or the business that falls upon them, and to perform the functions of their offices, such as the prosecution of the trust cases and other cases which it is their duty to conduct?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was inquired into when the committee looked into the question of making a special appropriation for the conduct of suits under the Sherman antitrust law, and also in connection with the appropriations for assistants to the United States district attorneys. The limit upon the compensation to assistants to United States district attorneys, according to my recollection, is $2,500, and the belief was expressed that there are a great many of these cases that can not very easily and properly be handled in the offices of the United States district attorneys.

Mr. CULLOP. What I wanted to ascertain was whether the gentleman or his committee has made any investigation whereby, if the district attorneys were unable to perform the functions of their offices, as seems to have been the practice in the last several years, and some steps could be taken regarding their appointment, so that competent men would be appointed to conduct such public litigation, instead of permitting the raids that have been made on the Treasury in the last 9 or 10 years, notably the one that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] has just mentioned.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The appropriations that have been made for that purpose have been made to enable the Attorney General to carry on the litigation. The special counsel that have been employed were employed to work under the direction of the Attorney General, and not under the direction of any district attorney.

Mr. CULLOP. It is the duty of the office of the district attorneys not only to prosecute these cases arising in their districts and within the jurisdiction of their courts, but also to prosecute the indictments under the criminal clause of that law, such as the cases of the American Sugar Refining Co., of New York, in which the present Secretary of War was allowed a princely sum for his conduct of that litigation. The indictments having been returned under him as district attorney, as soon as they were returned he resigned his office, and in a day or two was appointed as special counsel to conduct the suits. Has the committee found, or can it find, some way by which that reprehensible practice or habit may be rebuked and stopped?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I believe it is a very difficult thing to control. It depends entirely upon the administration of the Department of Justice. In the prosecution of certain crimes and in the conduct of certain litigation it is necessary to place a certain amount of discretion in the department.

Mr. CULLOP. Does not the gentleman think that it would be advisable for his committee to make some investigation along that line to see if that practice, which has been so liberally indulged in by the present administration and the previous one, could not in some way be broken up?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee did go into the matter quite extensively.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Attorney General stated——

Mr. CULLOP. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] be allowed five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Attorney General stated that these special assistants to the Attorney General were necessary properly to conduct the law business of the Government, and the committee was not in a position to controvert the contention of the Attorney General. The committee endeavored to give him such sums as would enable him properly to conduct the Government's law business. Whether some of these suits that have been brought in recent years could properly be handled by the respective district attorneys, I am not sufficiently informed to say, because I do not know their capacity. The Attorney General called attention to the fact that in many of these prosecutions he appointed a person to take control of them as an assistant to the Attorney General, because it was possible for such an employee of the Government to appear before the Federal grand jury in any district, whereas an assistant to a district attorney in some particular district could not present the cases to a Federal grand jury in any other district. The Attorney General pointed out the fact that it is more economical to have one man who is familiar with the work and able to go before a number of grand juries, than to have a man in every district familiarize himself with the same work and be confined to one district only.

Mr. CULLOP. In other words, it seems as if the man as a district attorney, holding a commission under the Government, was unable to conduct the prosecution in a suit, but as soon as he was appointed special counsel, whereby he could get a very liberal allowance, he was abundantly able to conduct the prosecution. For instance, take the case of the present Secretary of War. The work was too great, while he was district attorney, to conduct the prosecutions as district attorney; he resigned his office, was appointed special counsel, and then he could conduct the work, but not with very great success, as all must admit, as none of the great violators were ever convicted; only a few hired men connected with the company were convicted. Now, if the man was not able as district attorney to conduct the business, he ought to have resigned and somebody appointed who was able to do it, and save the people the expense of hiring the same man to do as an individual what he was unable to do as a public officer.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I think, in order to have the facts in the RECORD, I shall call attention to a few statements made by the Attorney General. In making inquiry as to the special assistant attorneys general, the Attorney General illustrated the necessity by this case:

The CHAIRMAN. Is there necessity for these special assistants?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Oh, yes; there is constant necessity for them. These are cases which are constantly arising. Perhaps I could best illustrate it by this group of bleached-flour cases, in which Mr. Pierce Butler, of Minneapolis, was retained. A question arose of whether the bleaching of flour by electricity produced a deterioration which amounted to an adulteration of the flour, and whether it was misbranding to ship that flour and sell it in the market as No. 1 flour, or whatever it was; there was some ordinary label which they used on that sort of flour. The Bureau of Chemistry, in the Department of Agriculture, reached the conclusion that bleaching flour in that way did produce adulteration, and that it would be misbranded unless labeled "bleached flour." The millers, who had taken what is called monkey wheat, and by this process made it look exactly like No. 1 northern wheat, protested against that, and the Government determined to test the question. We did not know just where the best place would be to test it or right where we would have to test it, and therefore I retained Mr. Pierce Butler, and he made a study of the subject. There were three or four cases brought, and we finally picked out of them a case that embraced all of the questions, and Mr. Butler tried that case before Judge McPherson in Iowa. It was a long trial, and there was a voluminous amount of evidence. The Government won both on the facts and on the law, and an appeal is now pending in the circuit court of appeals in the eighth circuit. Now, that was a case that really could not be attended to by one of the district attorneys. It required a comprehensive study of the whole situation; it required having control over all the cases that might arise in different districts; and it involved coming here to Washington a number of times and taking up the matter with the bureau and arranging for the expert testimony, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. SHERLEY. And you had no assistants here at Washington who could have performed that work?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; I had not, because every assistant I have in Washington is loaded to the gunwales with work. The counsel of the defendants were lawyers of very marked ability, and it required the services of the very best man we could get. That is a case that I have taken haphazard, but there are a number of just such cases.

Then he cited other cases. It was apparent that in the case suggested one district attorney could not devote himself exclusively to such a case to the neglect of the regular routine work of the district attorney's office. If he attended to the routine work of his office he could not devote himself, as was necessary, exclusively to this case. If he devoted himself exclusively to this case the routine work of the United States would be neglected. From the investigation I have made I do not see how it would be possible to avoid in a great many instances having men specially designated to look after particular cases or groups of cases.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the remarks made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] seem to me so unfair and so unjustifiable that I rise for the purpose of saying a word on the subject. Certainly the Government requires the services of special counsel in these important cases. A few years ago gentlemen on that side of the aisle were complaining because they said the Republican administration was not commencing prosecutions under the antitrust law. As soon as the prosecutions are commenced then they find fault with the method of employing counsel. If the Government employs outside counsel entirely, they say we pay too much for counsel fees. If the Government employs counsel in its service on a regular salary and puts them upon special fees, then they complain against that method. If the Government keeps its persons in regular employ specially devoted to this work, then they complain in regard to that method.

The truth is that many men belonging to the Democratic Party hope in this campaign to secure the blessings and the comforts and the benefits that may arise from helping out to defend the trusts. They cut off in this House the appropriation the other day in part needed for the prosecution of the trusts and then adopted an amendment which absolutely paralyzes, if it becomes a law, the arm of the Department of Justice in enforcing the law and prosecuting the suits.

When the committee the other day adopted the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL], which was apparently agreed to by gentlemen on that side of the House and voted into the bill over the protests of Members on this side of the House, I asked the Department of Justice in regard to the effect of this amendment. I have a letter from the Attorney General, which I propose to read, because it demonstrates the purpose of the Democrats in the House in endeavoring to paralyze the efforts of this Republican administration in the prosecution of the so-called trusts under the antitrust law. The Attorney General says:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 17, 1912.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MANN: My attention was called to-day to the amendment added to the sundry civil bill in the Committee of the Whole Saturday, June 15, printed on page 8782 of the RECORD.

The amendment might fitly be called "An act to destroy the efficiency of the Department of Justice." It is certainly a measure in aid of defendants now under prosecution by this department. As I read it, it would legislate out of office on July 1 every attorney engaged on behalf of the Government in any of the suits brought under the antitrust law, the interstate-commerce act, or any of the other laws referred to in the amendment who, two years before his present employment, had held any position or employment of any kind under the Government or had been retained in any other lawsuit. It would wipe out at once all the counsel engaged in prosecuting the suit against the United States Steel Corporation, who have been at work for months past and are in the midst now of taking testimony in that suit. The representatives of that corporation could ask nothing better from the Government. It would wipe out counsel for the Government in the suit to set aside the Oregon and California land grant, who has for years past been engaged in that arduous suit, who has been successful in sustaining the bill on demurrer and is now engaged in taking testimony. It would dismiss a dozen fine young lawyers who have been trained in the department and are now employed in the prosecution, as special assistants, of important litigation for the Government in different parts of the country. I am having made up a list of the cases affected by this amendment, but I may say, in general, that it interferes with the successful prosecution of almost every important case the Government has pending. Its language is so broad that apparently it punishes everybody who is engaged as counsel for the Government in one case by preventing his retainer in another case for two years. It would do more for the defendants in these actions than their own counsel could accomplish for them, for you know what it means to change attorneys in the midst of a lawsuit. I do not know whether even the framer of the amendment understood how far-reaching it is in its effect. I am sure few who voted for it did. It not only operates to deprive the Government in the future of the assistance in its litigation of men who have been trained in its service when they leave salaried positions and go into private practice, but it interferes with pending prosecutions to a degree that can only be sustained upon the theory that it is the deliberate purpose of Congress to hamper the prosecution of most of the pending litigation.

I do not think this language is too extreme, and I write it to call your attention sharply to the question, so that, if it be possible when the bill is reported to the House, some change may be suggested in its language.

The idea that, in order to punish a few men who, having done good service for the Government in salaried positions, have afterwards been retained and paid reasonable fees for doing magnificent work as special counsel, the Government itself should be hampered by being deprived of the service of a large body of trained, efficient men in the conduct of its litigation, and that no attorney shall be employed in more than one case for the Government unless two years have elapsed since the termination of the work under his present retainer, is a novel conception of efficient government.

Faithfully, yours, GEO. WICKERSHAM,
Attorney General.

Mr. Chairman, there is not a large concern in the country employing its own counsel on a salary by the year which does not employ special counsel from the outside when it becomes involved in important litigation. Yet here is a proposition which, as I said, will practically paralyze the arm of justice of the United States. I do not know whether or not the gentleman who offered the amendment wanted to prevent the prosecution of the antitrust cases, but I believe that the Democratic side of the House in voting in the amendment did it with the deliberate intent of showing themselves friends in need of the people who are being prosecuted and for the purpose of hampering the present administration in the prosecution both of the civil and the criminal cases now pending. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], in the last sentence, might impress a person unacquainted with him with the idea that he was in earnest. But there is slight probability that anyone who is familiar with the peculiar antics of the gentleman from Illinois will for a moment misunderstand the situation and think that the gentleman from Illinois is not playing a part. The gentleman from Illinois said that he believed that it was the purpose of the majority, in adopting that amendment, to throw out an anchor to these combinations that are being prosecuted. The gentleman from Illinois can hardly believe that, because the history of this country has shown that the party upon this side of the aisle has never been a friend of these violators of the law. Whenever they have come to Congress looking for friends, Mr. Chairman, they have known exactly where to go. If they have looked to either side of this Chamber, they have looked to that side which the gentleman from Illinois so signally graces.

I heard only a part of the letter of the Attorney General. He arraigned the innocent little amendment that I offered and talked about its paralyzing the arm of the Government in the prosecution of these suits. It is more unfortunate, Mr. Chairman, that long before this amendment was adopted the arm of the Federal Government to a great extent had already been paralyzed in the prosecution of these trusts. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Whatever may befall such prosecutions in the future, I am confident that no more disastrous ending to any of the balance of them will occur than the ending of the prosecution against the Beef Trust that has its domicile in the gentleman's own town.

Mr. Chairman, that amendment, or some such amendment as that, was made necessary by what I consider a grave abuse by the Department of Justice, an abuse that had become scandalous, an abuse that even the gentleman from Illinois will not defend upon this floor. The only purpose of it was to prevent abuses that have been practiced by the Department of Justice. Have we reached the point where, in order to prosecute the trusts of this country, we have to witness a spectacle such as we witnessed when Mr. Stimson resigned—resigned, if not for the purpose of accepting employment at a very largely increased salary, at least, resigned with the knowledge that he would be immediately reemployed in order to conduct this prosecution in behalf of the Government? Why did he resign? Not for the good of the Government, but in order that by legerdemain of that kind he could receive a much larger compensation for doing the very character of work that it was his duty to do as the district attorney in the southern district of New York.

Why did Mr. Denison resign? He was receiving $4,000 as assistant district attorney in New York. Why did he resign? Because he knew that he would be reemployed by the Government and paid an extravagant salary to do the very work that he would have been expected to do had he retained his position as assistant to the district attorney in New York. I do not believe that the country has reached the point where the only men who can prosecute these suits against these combinations are the men who, holding one position, find it necessary to give it up in order to secure additional compensation.

There were two purposes in that amendment. One was to prevent the Department of Justice taking some district attorney or some assistant district attorney out of his district, taking him away from his duties, and assigning him duties in connection with the prosecution of cases in behalf of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, where is the gentleman who will say that that is a good practice? Where is the man upon that side of the House who will defend it and say that it is a proper practice, or that such a practice as that which occurred in the case of Mr. Erwin is proper, wherein he was taken out of his district for a large part of the time for as much as 10 or 11 years and still received a salary of $5,000 and expenses and very large commissions for conducting other prosecutions in behalf of the Government? I am not criticizing the character of the service that was rendered by Mr. Erwin. So far as I have been able to ascertain he rendered efficient service as special assistant to the Attorney General. There were conditions that probably made him the most available man and the most efficient man that could have been selected to do this work because of his intimate knowledge of the case. If he had resigned and accepted that service and devoted his energies to the prosecution of that work and let somebody else be appointed district attorney in Georgia, I would have had no criticism.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. Would it not have been on all fours and exactly of the kind, so far as the principle is concerned, if the Attorney General himself had resigned and then had been employed immediately to prosecute the Steel Trust?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I do not see any difference. Everybody will recognize it is not the right practice; it is not treating the Government of the United States properly or decently for that sort of practice to prevail in the Department of Justice. If it was just one isolated case it would not be so bad, but it has developed into a practice down there, and it is a practice that deserves to be condemned, to be reprobated by Congress, and I therefore offered that amendment. I do not want to interfere with any proper prosecution of the Steel Trust or any other trust, but I do believe that the time has been reached when Congress should give expression to its views upon this question. I do not desire to reflect upon the Attorney General or the Department of Justice. I want to give that department all the credit it deserves, and it does deserve some credit. I think, though, it has continued a practice that is bad. It is a matter that should be corrected. If there had not been an abuse of this discretion that has been vested in the Attorney General by Congress, there would have been no necessity for the amendment which I offered. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, certainly the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in defending a bad case is a past master. He is both artful and resourceful, and especially so in a very bad case. He can always find a very plausible excuse or defense for his position. The trust is not looking to the Democratic Party for any favors. The trusts know they can hope for no favors from it, and hence their efforts in every campaign are expended to defeat it. It has no reason, no just cause, to complain of the Republican Party at this time, and I do say that the practice that has been in vogue in the Department of Justice for district attorneys, after they begin suits, to resign as district attorneys for the purpose of being appointed special counsel to conduct the suits is reprehensible and ought not to be permitted. It deserves censure, and reflects on those who have been guilty of such methods. It is in violation of the ethics of the profession to which they belong. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, let me call attention to another trust prosecution, with all of the able counsel they have had at the command of the Government, and that is the prosecution of the Beef Trust. In 1902 they secured an injunction in the Federal court at Chicago. That case was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the decree of the lower court was affirmed in 1904.

Yet there was not a single one of those able counsel who ever attempted to have the defendants cited for contempt of court for violating that injunction. They violated it every day in the week from that time to this. Instead of enforcing the injunction they began new prosecutions. They all failed. They obtained new indictments, and the defendants were acquitted time after time. The case in some form or other dragged its weary way through that court, under the conduct of these able counsel, for nearly 10 years without success, and how much it cost the people we are not informed, but it was a large sum. The Government pursued unsuccessfully this litigation until February, 1912, when it ended in failure, except two pleas of guilty of two clerks for receiving rebates from the railroads, and impositions of fines as a punishment. The Beef Trust went on plundering the people, and all the high-up fellows escaped punishment. I say this, that whenever one of these district attorneys resigns the Government ought to appoint some one in his stead who would be able to conduct these prosecutions. Eighty-three thousand dollars as a fee in the Sugar Trust case, paid to Mr. Stimson, the present Secretary of War, was a very unreasonable fee, as everyone knows. Now, a fee in a lawsuit is to be measused largely by the result obtained. What was the result in this case?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULLOP. A few clerks in the office were convicted and soon afterwards pardoned. The result did not reflect great ability and success on the part of those in charge of the litigation.

Not a single man high up in that criminal organization has ever felt the weight of the law, and yet the Government paid him the sum of $83,000 for his services and his assistant $27,500. It was their duty as men, patriotic men, a duty which they took upon themselves when they were sworn into office to prosecute these cases and not dodge their responsibility in that way, to be rewarded as political henchmen; and so in the other cases that the gentleman from Texas has mentioned. Oh, no; the trusts of this country do not care for the power to go out of the hands of their friends, where it is now resting; and that is why they are continually fighting the Democratic Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

That is why their leading men are at this very hour struggling in the disgraceful battle going on at Chicago to name the national ticket which will permit them to continue to exploit the pockets of the American people in order that they may revel in their predatory wealth and dominate the policies of the Republican Party. Oh, no; the trusts resist all efforts of the Democratic Party to come into power. They prefer to continue the rule of the party now in power. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. NEELEY. Mr. Chairman, in the light of some of the disclosures revealed last week in New York by the committee investigating the Money Trust the charge that the Democratic Party and the trusts are working together is remarkable to say the least. No Democratic President ever opened the Treasury of the United States to the Money Trust and invited that plunderbund to take $42,000,000 of the people's money in three days and loan it to private individuals at 6 per cent, thereby yielding them $6,900 a day in interest; and the success of the prosecution against the Beef Trust is best evidenced by the fact that after it had been all concluded the price of beef advanced 2 cents per pound, and everybody connected with the trust seemed to be very happy. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Chairman, there is another matter in this bill. On page 146, where I find there is an appropriation of $2,500,000 made for the purpose of regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States, including the enforcement of the contract labor laws, with the other specifications. That matter is of peculiar interest to the people of my district. I have a district that has three transcontinental lines of railroad running through it, and those three lines of railroad have been violating the noncontract labor law for years. Last winter, when I was making my campaign, at the town of Syracuse, on the Colorado line, I went through a camp of over 300 Mexican laborers, and when I got up to Garden City I found another gang of over 100 there. The postmaster at Syracuse said that in one day he had sent over $1,600 in good American money back to Mexico, every dollar of which went back to the families of men who came into this country in violation of the contract labor law. Nor is that all. It is a notorious fact in my district that for years these lines of railroad have maintained immigration agents at El Paso and Juarez whose duty it is to go into Mexico and solicit immigrants to come to the United States under a specific contract of employment for six months, with an agreed rate to be paid. They violate that law every day. You say, Why is not the law enforced? The statute reads as follows:

SEC. 5. That for every violation of any of the provisions of section 4 of this act the persons, partnership, company, or corporation violating the same, by knowingly assisting, encouraging, or soliciting the migration or importation of any contract laborer into the United States shall forfeit and pay for every such offense the sum of $1,000, which may be sued for and recovered by the United States, or by any person who shall first bring his action therefor in his own name and for his own benefit, including any such alien thus promised labor or service of any kind as aforesaid, as debts of like amount are now recovered in the courts of the United States, and separate suits may be brought for each alien thus promised labor or service of any kind as aforesaid. And it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the proper district to prosecute every such suit when brought by the United States.

That is the penalty, and it is recovered by an action in the nature of an action for damages. No man wants to prosecute in his own name, and no man wants to go to Mexico to get evidence, and the result is that the law is violated every day in the year with impunity. I am told that over 22 Mexicans are in the Kansas Penitentiary, that some 14 or 15 are in the industrial reformatory in my town, that many of them are in the insane asylum, and that in every county through which a transcontinental——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NEELEY. I would like to have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] No objection is heard.

Mr. NEELEY (continuing). Line of railroad runs they have Mexicans in their jails. They do not pay a dollar of taxes; they do not work the roads; they contribute nothing to the upbuilding of our State; and sometimes as many as four families of them live in one two-room house. Even that is the exception, because they live in little shanties constructed of car doors and such other lumber of a similar kind as they have been able to get alongside the railroad tracks, or in shanties constructed of railroad ties set on end and covered over with dirt. They do not contribute a single dollar to the development of the country, and yet there is a provision in this bill made to enforce a law that has always been a nullity and which is absolutely a farce. Its only office is to make a place of political creditors. On the 10th day of February I introduced a bill, H. R. 19867, designed to correct that evil. If we want to enforce the law, if we want to vitalize this law so that it will be effective, you must have a penalty that fits the crime; and if you want to exclude these people who come into our country in violation of our country's laws, who take the places of many of our own people, we will have to do that by providing a punishment that is sufficient to give the result desired. I live in one of the richest counties in the State of Kansas, a county with a population of approximately 40,000 people. We have a bank total in that county of over $8,000,000, approximately $2,000 for every man, woman, and child in the county, and yet last winter our poor commissioner gave aid to 289 families during the month of December.

And in that county, up to the 14th day of January, he had given aid to 176 during that month. Who were these people, and why were they aided? What caused the citizens of our county to bear this added burden of taxation? Was it the residents? No. It was either for the Mexicans that had been brought in there in violation of the law and who, owing to the fact that the railroad lines were covered with snow and they were unable to work there, were made dependents upon our people, and the latter were obliged to support and feed and clothe those aliens who care nothing for us or our institutions, or else they were men who had been forced out of employment by those Mexicans who had been unlawfully brought in. Not only is that not right, but it is absolutely wrong. The people of my district and the people of the State of Kansas want this Congress to give them some relief from a condition that ought not to be longer tolerated and to stop this raid on the Treasury by political grafters.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I did not know how much personal trouble I was starting with certain gentlemen when I read a letter from the Attorney General a while ago. I believe the old method used to be that if you had a small case in a court, and it was not a very good one, to "cuss" the counsel on the other side. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL] refers to the peculiar antics of the "gentleman from Illinois," and by using personalities, of course, invites personalities. It is probably true that to gentlemen who have been practicing law where a thousand-dollar law fee seems larger than a cart wheel, that some of the fees paid by the Government seem excessive. But to lawyers who are accustomed to handling large litigation these fees seem very moderate.

The distinguished gentleman who is now gracing the Chair [Mr. CULLOP] a few moments ago asked what were the results over in New York when Mr. Stimson was prosecuting the case. My understanding is—and I am subject to correction—that the results were that the Government collected about $3,000,000 for which they paid a very moderate fee. If the same work had been done for a private party the fee would have been very much larger or else the attorney would have been very foolish.

Now, the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL] who offered an amendment, either knowing what was in it and knowing the effect it would have in paralyzing the Department of Justice, or else not knowing what was in it, has offered it absolutely and directly in the interest of the defendants in these trust prosecutions. Whether he meant it that way or not I do not know. We judge people by the results, by their acts, and not by what they say. And the gentleman who says that "if the trusts desire legislation they know which side of the aisle to go to and whom to go to," introduces an amendment in the interests of the trusts either knowingly or unwittingly. If knowingly, without any excuse; and if unwittingly, subject, of course, to forgiveness, because we all do things unwittingly.

I repeat the action of the Democratic side of the House in refusing to make a sufficient appropriation to prosecute the trusts in the first instance, and then endeavoring to tie it up so as to discharge the present counsel and attorneys engaged in the suits, is working in the interests of the trusts and a bid for financial and other support in the coming or present campaign.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Nobody who is familiar with the attendance at Chicago has any notion that Democrats have any hope, if they even desired it, to enlist the aid of the wealthy malefactors of this country who have been identified with the trusts that have been prosecuted under the Republican administration.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Do you think there is any necessity for the Steel Trust looking for help from over on this side of the House as long as it has its friends——

Mr. FITZGERALD. And its angel.

Mr. BEALL of Texas (continuing). And its good angel, who happens now to be in Chicago?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to ask if there is any necessity for enlarging our prisons on account of the successful prosecutions by the Republican administration of trust officials?

Mr. MANN. We are building two new penitentiaries to put them in and other gentlemen over there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If we have the administration after the 4th of March that we have had for the last few years, the Department of Justice will not be busy. There will be no necessity for lawyers. There will be necessity for practical men.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. The gentleman from Illinois talked about building the penitentiaries to which to send these men. Will not many of them go to the convention?

Mr. MANN. Many of them will be at Baltimore.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask the Clerk to read.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have been listening to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL] and my colleague from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] and that shining light which is all knowledge, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], and I have been somewhat amused. I am not going to discuss this matter, because it would be useless for me to try to inform anybody who has the amount of knowledge and wisdom that is possessed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP].

Really this whole matter does not legitimately belong to the consideration of this bill, which is being considered by about one-fourth of a quorum in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union by unanimous consent. I am not here to defend anybody or prosecute anybody touching the trusts. I am here, however, to say that there has been made and is being made an honest, persistent, able effort to enforce the laws of the United States, and more has been accomplished in their enforcement in the last three years than was accomplished during the whole time prior thereto, since their enactment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would not be safe for the gentleman to make that statement in Chicago to-day. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Oh, Chicago will take care of itself.

Mr. MANN. And the Democrats, too.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. And some Republicans, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. My friends are having a good time prophesying about this and that and the other event. You are going to meet down in your own convention next week. Wait and see how you get along. [Laughter on the Republican side.] In the meantime I would suggest to the gentleman that he proceed with his bill, if he desires to do so, for I do not believe that anything that has been done here to-day or may be said along the line of prophecy and criticism will be worth one vote to any party next November. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Office Building: For maintenance, including miscellaneous items, and for all necessary services, $35,932.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, just a word, to ask the chairman of the committee if he can give me information as to what the particular items in this sum of $35,000 are used for, and under whose direction is this money expended?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is expended under the direction of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, subject to the supervision of the commission in charge of the House Office Building.

Mr. GARNER. Who is in charge of the House Office Building?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The commission, consisting of the Speaker of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and myself.

Mr. GARNER. Could the gentleman tell us what it has cost in the last six months to repair and rearrange some of the offices over there? For instance, the office of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BARTLETT. That was carried on the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not have the figures in my mind at present, but six or seven thousand dollars of it was expended under the control of the commission, and some of the furnishings were supplied out of the contingent fund of the House. I do not remember exactly how much that was. A certain portion of it was considered as properly chargeable to the permanent addition to the building, and that was provided for in a deficiency bill, and the furnishings were provided by the Committee on Accounts out of the contingent fund.

Mr. GARNER. I must admit, Mr. Chairman, that I did not know that the furniture was paid for out of the contingent fund of the House. In fact, I have made some inquiry about it, and I understood the chairman of the Committee on Accounts to say that he did not know anything about it. That might have been before the bills came in.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the Chairman must have known about it, because in the last session of Congress the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] and myself conferred before anything was done, and an agreement was reached as to the parts of the expense that should be charged to the various funds. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FLOYD], I am inclined to think, was the chairman of the subcommittee that had charge of the matter.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARNER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] whether the character of the furniture and improvements in the Committee on the Judiciary over in the House Office Building is what he would characterize by the term "democratic simplicity"?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I am very candid to say it is not, and if it had been done under my supervision, speaking as one Member, it would not have been fixed up as expensively and luxuriously as it appears to the eye when one walks into that committee room. I believe that each committee of the House ought to have a convenient and proper place in which to perform its work and conduct its business, but I do believe, in justice to ourselves—and a majority of us, I am certain, want to inculcate it here into the minds of the balance of the minority, as it were—that the idea of democratic simplicity has not been adhered to in every instance, and I believe the case of the Committee on the Judiciary is one of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I have never been in the room of the Committee on the Judiciary in the House Office Building, and I do not know about it, but, after all is said and done, I think we might get along in Washington, in the House and Senate, with much less expensive furniture. For instance, I would rather have, so far as I am concerned, an old-fashioned split-bottom chair than these mahogany chairs, and instead of these expensive cuspidors, I would rather have one made of brown crockery, fashioned out of blue clay, which is not so apt to break. You might take out that elegant marble desk where the Speaker sits, and these expensive mahogany chairs. Remove the decorations about the Capitol Building. I have always been glad that the House Office Building was put up. I am responsible for that building, in part, because I got unanimous consent to put an item on the appropriation bill for its erection, but after all it might have been built of plain brick, and all the ornamentation and the pillars that delight the eyes of the people have been dispensed with. But, Mr. Chairman, I apprehend that the people of this country are glad to have the House Office Building and glad to have the furniture in the various buildings, and I know Members of Congress are glad to come and occupy them. But, Mr. Chairman, with the small number of Members here we are devoting a good deal of time trying to make capital to get back, and I suggest that the gentleman from New York go on with the bill.

Mr. GARNER. But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York has not furnished me yet with the information as to what most of this $35,000 goes for.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The principal item is for salaries.

Mr. GARNER. Are the salaries paid out of this sum?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. What salaries are paid out of this that are not provided for in the legislative bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. None of the salaries for that building are covered by the legislative bill except the elevator men and police.

Mr. GARNER. Is the superintendent paid out of this sum?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. What is his salary?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Two hundred dollars a month.

Mr. GARNER. All of these salaries are regulated by this commission?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. What amount is expended for salaries?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Twenty-nine thousand dollars and over.

Mr. GARNER. I do not know of employees enough over there to amount to $29,000, unless it is the charwomen——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The charwomen are paid out of this sum to the extent of $9,600.

Mr. GARNER. And the superintendent gets $2,400 a year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. I will read the list of salaries for the benefit of the gentleman:

Maintenance—House Office Building.

1 custodian, at $200 per month	$2,400
1 assistant, at $120 per month	1,440
1 clerk, at $100 per month	1,200
1 messenger, at $75 per month	900
1 clerk, at $100 per month	1,200
5 toilet men, at $50 per month each	3,000
5 laborers, including window washer, at $40 per month each	2,400
1 carpenter, at $80 per month	960
1 painter, at $80 per month	960
2 attendants to the heating system, at $75 per month each	1,800
1 electrician, at $120 per month	1,440
1 electrician's helper, at $60 per month	720
3 toilet women, at $40 per month each	1,440
1 forelady of char force, at $40 per month	480
40 charwomen, at $20 per month each	9,600
Total salaries	29,932
For maintenance and supplies, including personal services	6,000
Total	35,932

Mr. GARNER. All of these employees are under the direction or are employed by and under the direction of this commission?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are employed by the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds.

Mr. GARNER. But I suppose the superintendent appoints the people that are suggested by the commission and pays them the salary——

Mr. FITZGERALD. He does not. Nobody has ever been appointed by me, and I do not think by any other member of the commission.

Mr. GARNER. I am not contending that they have been; I am trying to get information.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The superintendent appoints them subject to the approval of the commission, and my experience is that the superintendent has been performing his duties along the lines that would result to the satisfaction of the commission and the efficiency of the service.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. Is there authority under this item in question whereby screens could be furnished for the restaurant in the House Office Building? Some of us take our meals there; and there are no screens to the windows, and it is quite unpleasant and insanitary; and I wondered whether this item would be sufficient to cover that object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would be, but we do not screen buildings; we use electric fans to keep the flies off.

Mr. WILLIS. But they do not keep the flies off. There are flies over there as big as English sparrows. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, the fans are better than screens.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fuel, oil, and cotton waste, and advertising for the power plant which furnishes heat and light for the Capitol and congressional buildings, $77,000. This and the three foregoing appropriations shall be expended by the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds under the supervision and direction of the commission in control of the House Office Building, appointed under the act approved March 4, 1907, and without reference to section 4 of the act approved June 17, 1910, concerning purchases for executive departments.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This item says—

This and the three foregoing appropriations shall be expended by the Superintendent of Capitol Building and Grounds under the supervision and direction of the commission in control of the House Office Building.

Is it designed to include in that the provision of the item under House Office Building, $35,000?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It should be included. In fact, it is included.

Mr. MANN. I see now that it is.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 16, page 154, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"Printing Investigation Commission, as provided for in the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, approved March 4, 1911, the sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated for the expense of said Printing Investigation Commission."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, a point of order does not lie.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves the point of order. The Chair will hear the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, this is provided for by law. The last sundry civil appropriation bill extended the life of this commission during the Sixty-second Congress. That would be until the 4th of March next. No point of order would lie against it.

Mr. MANN. Let us have a statement of the gentleman as to what the provisions are, so as to know what the law is.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, many gentlemen here are familiar with the work of this commission. Some expense is necessary in order to carry on the work of the commission. A great deal has been done, and I may say that the work is nearly completed, but not altogether. There are certain investigations being carried on now, and it will require about $5,000 to defray the expenses until the 4th of next March. Then the commission expires by operation of law. A great many matters in the Government Printing Office have been investigated. We are now investigating the matter of ink, the purchase of machinery, and a great many matters of that sort that I could mention. The work is being carried on. The commission has two clerks and one stenographer. That is the working force of the commission.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to give the provision of law creating the commission and the provision extending its life?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes. The last sundry civil appropriation bill extended the life of the commission. The commission itself was created several years ago.

Mr. FOCHT. Was not the appropriation then $10,000 a year?

Mr. FINLEY. The appropriation has been $10,000 annually. We are not spending all of the money this year. I believe there will be something like $1,500 that will lapse into the Treasury the 1st of July. The commission has been in operation for many years. It was hoped by the members of the commission that the bill revising the laws relative to printing and binding would pass Congress by the 1st of July, so that there would be no necessity for continuing this work. In other words, the work then would be taken over by the Joint Committee on Printing. The Joint Committee on Printing has no force whatever. It has no clerks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The two committees of the House and the Senate, which constitute the Joint Committee on Printing, have clerks.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand that, but the gentleman from New York must be aware that the clerks in the Committee on Printing in the House and the Committee on Printing in the Senate have not time to carry on this work.

Mr. MANN. What else do they have to do

Mr. FINLEY. They have a great deal to do. If the gentleman will investigate the work of the two committees he will ascertain that they are busy.

Mr. MANN. I have investigated, but I have not ascertained that they are busy.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman, then, has not investigated properly. If the gentleman will look into the matter he will find that there is work in both of those committees all the time Congress is in session, and each committee has a clerk, but these clerks are busy. They have as much as they can do to attend to the business of the committee.

Mr. MANN. Does not the joint committee have some one detailed from the Printing Office under its control?

Mr. FINLEY. It has not.

Mr. MANN. Nobody in the Printing Office?

Mr. FINLEY. Not in the work of the joint committee.

Mr. MANN. Does not the joint committee have control of somebody in the Printing Office, somebody who is subject to its order?

Mr. FINLEY. The joint committee designates an inspector of paper, and that is all; but no one else in the Government Printing Office.

Mr. MANN. It also has employed somebody getting up the Congressional Directory.

Mr. FINLEY. That is provided for by law.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but that is under the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that the Joint Committee on Printing has nobody employed under it.

Mr. FINLEY. I say the joint committee has no clerk employed. It has a compiler or editor of the Congressional Directory. That has been the law and the practice for years, as the gentleman knows, and it is provided for by law. The legislative bill which was passed some time ago carried, I believe, $1,600 for the salary of this official. There is no connection whatever between the compiler of the Directory and the other work of the joint committee.

Mr. MANN. The compiler of the Congressional Directory, of course, has very little work to perform. He has nothing to do most of the time. Why does not the joint committee make use of him?

Mr. FINLEY. It is only authorized to employ him for that work, and that is all he has ever done; and I will say to the gentleman that he must be aware of the fact that the compiler has almost invariably been some newspaper correspondent or editor.

Mr. MANN. I think that is true; and I heard that very bitterly denounced on the floor of this House by gentlemen on that side of the House—bitterly denounced. Thereupon the same practice was followed, only a little worse.

Mr. SIMS. Who denounced the practice?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not. The same practice was not followed.

Mr. MANN. I said only a little worse.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Upon the representations of the gentleman from South Carolina that a man had been employed who was to work all the year round, not only upon that, but upon other work, the legislative committee concluded to carry a compensation for the year.

Mr. FINLEY. Oh, I want to correct the gentleman from New York about that. I did not say on other matter. I said that was his work.

Mr. MANN. I think we used to pay $1,000; and that side of the House then said it was too much, and then they increased it to $1,600.

Mr. FINLEY. I made no statement to the gentleman from New York that would carry that impression.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman did not make the statement to me. One of the committee stated to me what the gentleman from South Carolina has said, and it was upon that ground that the committee acted. Otherwise it would not have been so carried.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not know what was said by some one else. I know I did not. I call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that there is no connection between the work of the joint committee and the Printing Investigation Commission.

Mr. MANN. We have a Printing Committee in the Senate.

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And a Printing Committee in the House.

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And a Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And a Joint Investigating Commission.

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. For the Lord's sake, how many committees do you want before you get at business?

Mr. FINLEY. We have been at work all of the time.

Mr. MANN. The Committee on Printing in the House is able to make any investigation and the Committee on Printing in the Senate is able to make the investigation, and the joint committee is entitled to make the investigation. Then you have a special provision with an appropriation of $10,000 for a Joint Investigating Commission.

Mr. FINLEY. I want to say this: A law was passed some six or seven years ago, and I think with the aid and assistance of the gentleman from Illinois, providing for a Joint Commission on Investigation. The gentleman's party was in power and framed the law, and I want to say that it was a wise thing to do. It has resulted in great saving at the Government Printing Office. The Printing Investigation Commission is one commission that has made good.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me ask the gentleman if the personnel of the Printing Committees in the House and in the Senate and the Joint Committee on Printing in the House and in the Senate and the Joint Commission on Printing are not identical?

Mr. FINLEY. So far as the House membership is concerned, that is true, but it is not true of the Senate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How does it differ in the Senate?

Mr. FINLEY. The Senate has more than three members on its Committee on Printing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, well, the other two do not do anything. It is what is known as a one-man committee.

Mr. FINLEY. I will say to the gentleman that the chairman of the joint committee is not chairman of the Senate Committee on Printing. So I do not think the gentleman has looked into it at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have looked into it. Thus far this commission has been in existence over six years and have spent $32,000, in addition to the expenditure upon the part of the two Houses when provision was made at the beginning of the commission. The gentleman has made no statement yet to justify the expenditure of $5,000. He says they have two clerks and a stenographer. How much do these clerks receive?

Mr. FINLEY. I think one gets—I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he can state?

Mr. FOCHT. There are two clerks——

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much do they get?

Mr. FOCHT. One $2,500 and one $3,500.

Mr. FINLEY. And a stenographer.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much does the stenographer get?

Mr. FINLEY. The stenographer, I think, only gets about $60 or $75 per month.

Mr. FOCHT. The chief clerk of this committee, as the gentleman has stated, has duties which require him to prepare an endless number of estimates in regard to great contracts for the letting of paper and supply contracts, and he gets $3,500. The duties he has to perform are of great importance. And while I am making these observations I would like to say, in connection with the Congressional Directory, that the only complaint I have ever heard from the Democratic side was when the editor was laboring under a misapprehension as to the politics of some Representative from New York State.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was not the complaint. The complaint was that he was employed and got $800 in addition and then hired somebody at the Government Printing Office and paid him $250 for doing the work and put the balance in his pocket.

Mr. FOCHT. I believe an investigation failed to disclose that statement to be the fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say this to the gentleman: There are several items I can mention. Since this joint commission has been in existence the printing of documents has been reduced annually by as much as 1,000,000 or more pages; something like that. The saving has been enormous. I will say another thing to the gentleman. Here last year it was ascertained that Members of the House and Senate were violating the law in that they were having more than one copy—we will say volume No. 1 or volume No. 10—of the same document bound at the Government Printing Office. That was called to the attention of the committee and that was stopped.

Mr. MANN. Everybody knew what the law was.

Mr. FINLEY. They did not. They violated the law at any rate, and I want to say the commission stopped that. Last year this overcost was more than $71,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why could it not have been done by the Joint Committee on Printing?

Mr. FINLEY. I have stated to the gentleman the Joint Committee on Printing have no clerks. In other words, they have nobody employed except this compiler and——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Joint Committee on Printing consists of members of the Committees on Printing of the two Houses, and those committees have clerks.

Mr. FINLEY. Yes; and I want to say, as far as the House committee is concerned, that clerk is busy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be; I have no doubt of it.

Mr. FINLEY. He has as much as he can do; and, besides, it is not his business to do the work of the Joint Investigating Commission. He has not the time to do it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why do not the members of the committees do some work, instead of insisting on having clerks to do it?

Mr. FINLEY. I will say this to the gentleman: That if the distinguished gentleman from New York did some work, why does not he do more?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do; I work until midnight in my committee from 9 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. FINLEY. I will say to the gentleman that I am in my committee room working as much as the gentleman is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be; but the gentleman can not make such a statement about me as that, because I do work. I have worked since the 4th of December as hard as any man of this House ever worked.

Mr. FINLEY. I believe I have spent two days at home this year—I think it is two—so the gentleman from New York can not say that I do not work. I will say another thing to the gentleman: That I happen to have a membership next to the chairman on the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know the gentleman is busy, and I was not reflecting on the gentleman at all.

I was not reflecting on the gentleman. I know the gentleman is a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and I know that he has done a very large amount of work as a Member of this House, and has ever since I have known him.

Mr. FINLEY. I think I have been as busy as anybody in the House, and I know I have not the time to do this work, nor do I propose to do that class of work. This is a work of clerks, and it is their business, and it is the business of Congress to provide clerks when the Senate and House provides an organization and puts extra work upon that organization; so, therefore, this appropriation is necessary.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Will this commission be as long-lived as the other commissions have been?

Mr. FINLEY. I just stated to the Members here that the committee expires on the 4th of March, 1913, by limitation of law, and I for one will not ask for new life to be given to it.

Mr. SISSON. How long has it been in existence?

Mr. FINLEY. I think some seven years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired. The Chair would say, since the point of order has been reserved and probably will be made, that he would like to invite discussion to the act just referred to by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] continuing this. This act says (U. S. Stat. L., vol. 36, p. 1444):

Printing Investigation Commission: The authority vested in the Printing Investigation Commission to examine into the the general subject of the public printing and binding of Congress and the various executive departments, as now existing under authority of an act making appropriations to supply deficiencies, approved March 4, 1909, is hereby continued during the term of the Sixty-second Congress; and the said commission shall consist of three Senators who are members of the Joint Committee on Printing and three Members of the House elected to the Sixty-second Congress to be appointed by the Speaker and to serve until the Sixty-second Congress convenes; and the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, to be immediately available and to continue available until July 1, 1912, for the expenses of said Printing Investigation Commission.

Under this act the commission is to serve only until the Sixty-second Congress convenes. But, in addition to that, there is another question that arises which the Chair would ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] to look up, if he does not already know, and that is, if the Speaker of the House has appointed the three Senators provided for in this act, and also the three Members provided for in the investigation act?

Mr. FINLEY. I will state, if the Chair will indulge me, it says, "to serve until the convening of the Sixty-second Congress." Now, if the Chair will go along with me, they were appointed during the Sixty-first Congress and they were to continue until the Sixty-second, and then the life of the commission was to continue during the term of the Sixty-second Congress.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but it does not provide that they shall continue during the Sixty-second Congress.

Mr. FINLEY. I will say to the gentleman they were regularly appointed during this Congress.

Mr. MANN. By whom?

Mr. FINLEY. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] named the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. FINLEY. Well, he designated him.

Mr. MANN. Yes; I know——

Mr. FINLEY. And he was elected by the House.

Mr. MANN. Yes; he was elected by the House a member of the Committee on Printing. This statute provided, and the other statute provided, and I call the attention of the House to the time, that the members of that committee were to be appointed by the Speaker. That never has been done, so far as I know.

Mr. FINLEY. They have been serving, and their acts have not been questioned.

Mr. MANN. They doubtless have been serving, and certified to the accounting officers that they were acting, although I think it was without authority of law. However, there is no provision in here for an appropriation, Mr. Chairman, except as the appropriation is made. I do not think there is any authority in any of the acts authorizing a further appropriation than the one carried in the bill. This is about the fifth time, I think, the matter has been up. The original act was passed in 1906, during the life of that Congress. An appropriation accompanied it. It was extended by a deficiency bill during the next Congress, and an appropriation accompanied it. It was then extended in the deficiency bill. Now, the gentleman proposes to make an additional appropriation. An appropriation has already been made under which this committee is entitled to act under this act of Congress.

Mr. FINLEY. I will call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that no one contends that any appropriation is carried in the law authorizing this commission. It is subject, of course, to appropriation by Congress annually. That has been done all the way through. I contend for nothing else now. But I contend Congress is authorized to make the appropriation if it sees fit to do so. I think the Speaker did appoint the members of the commission.

Mr. FOCHT. Certainly this commission on the part of the House was regularly appointed by Speaker CLARK at the opening of the Sixty-second Congress. There can not be any question about that.

Mr. MANN. Well, we would like to know under what authority he acted.

Mr. FOCHT. I have my commission or notification.

Mr. MANN. What authority did he have?

Mr. FOCHT. He is not here. I can not determine that.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman wants to know the authority?

Mr. MANN. Here is the authority for the Speaker to appoint them until Congress convenes, to serve until the Sixty-second Congress convenes, which occurred within 30 days after the act went into effect.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not think there is any question as to the regularity of the commission as constituted.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman does not think there is trouble, but the gentleman has not shown any authority as yet.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, in the light of the developments during this discussion, I shall insist upon the point of order.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, in order that this matter may be made entirely clear, I desire to read here from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 24.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman please speak a little louder?

Mr. FOCHT. Oh, yes. Here it is:

PRINTING INVESTIGATING COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following appointments to the Printing Investigating Commission: Mr. FINLEY, Mr. BARNHART, and Mr. FOCHT.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman if the Speaker also appointed the Senate portion of the committee?

Mr. FOCHT. Not the Speaker, but the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The law says:

And the commission shall consist of three Senators, who are members of the Joint Committee on Printing, and three Members of the House, elected to the Sixty-second Congress, to be appointed by the Speaker.

Now, that bears the construction that any three Senators from that committee may be selected by the Speaker here.

Mr. FOCHT. It has not been so as to the members for six years, at least.

Mr. FINLEY. The provision, as contained in the last sundry civil bill, speaks of "three Members of the House, elected to the Sixty-second Congress, to be appointed by the Speaker." This has no reference to the Speaker appointing the Senate members.

The CHAIRMAN. By whom are the Senate members to be appointed according to this act?

Mr. FINLEY. They are to be appointed under the original law, the law that passed in 1906. My recollection is that it provided that the House members of the Committee on Printing should be members of this joint commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has the act or joint resolution of March 30, 1906, before him, and it reads in this way:

That the Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized and directed to establish rules and regulations—

And so forth. Nowhere in the act is any provision made for any other appointments.

Mr. FINLEY. If the Chair will excuse me, that is provided in the act creating the Joint Investigation Commission on Printing, passed in 1905. I will send out and get it.

The CHAIRMAN. In the meantime the Chair will further invite the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina to the question as to whether the Speaker of the Sixty-first Congress, after the November election, when he could officially know what Members had been elected to the Sixty-second Congress, then appointed this commission to expire when the Sixty-second Congress met, which was on the 6th day of April, 1911.

Mr. FINLEY. My recollection is that ex-Speaker CANNON did so appoint the House members of the Printing Investigation Commission.

Mr. FOCHT. Here it is, on April 24, 1911, when he appointed them.

The CHAIRMAN. But Speaker CANNON was not Speaker of the House at that time.

Mr. FOCHT. No; Speaker CLARK made the appointments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is whether he had the right to do that.

Mr. FINLEY. My recollection is that Speaker CANNON, among the last things he did, appointed the House members.

Mr. FOCHT. Yes; and when the new session convened it was done by the present Speaker.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] seems not to have gotten the idea expressed by the Chair, or perhaps the Chair did not make himself quite clear. The act now in hand, which was passed during the Sixty-first Congress, provides that the Speaker shall appoint this commission and that this commission shall cease to exist when the Sixty-second Congress convenes; but that the House end of that commission shall be made up of Members elected to the House of the Sixty-second Congress. Now the question arises: After the then Speaker of the House, the Speaker of the Sixty-first Congress, was officially advised as to whom had been elected to the Sixty-second Congress, whether it was not his duty to appoint this commission, to expire when the Sixty-second Congress convened, so that this commission could have been at work from the time that the Speaker of the Sixty-first Congress may have appointed the commission until the Sixty-second Congress convened; and any appointment made by the present Speaker before that time would certainly not have been valid, because he was not then Speaker, and if the commission was to cease its existence at the commencement of the Sixty-second Congress, then the Speaker of the present Congress had no authority to appoint it. The Chair wishes the discussion to be confined along those lines in order that he may properly decide the point of order that has been raised.

Mr. FINLEY. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD states, as I recollect right, Mr. Chairman, that Speaker CANNON in the Sixty-first Congress appointed this commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has based his claim upon an appointment by the present Speaker of the House after this Congress convened.

Mr. FINLEY. I think Speaker CANNON appointed the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT], and myself.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will allow me to make the observation, if the commission was appointed under the act read by the chairman of the committee by the former Speaker of this House, it ceased to exist and went out of existence under the statute at the beginning of the Sixty-second Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to that opinion.

Mr. PAGE. And if the present Speaker made any appointment during the Sixty-second Congress it was in violation of law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is rather inclined to think so.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, an appropriation was made in the last Congress, and it continues up to the 1st of July next.

Mr. FOCHT. I concede, Mr. Chairman, that if no authority had been given for the continuation of the commission the appointment by the present Speaker would necessarily not be valid, but, as stated by the gentleman from South Carolina, I insist that the authority was given and that the appropriation was made for the commission and continues up to the 1st of July next. I would agree with the chairman that if the commission had expired and no further authority had been given the Chair would be right, but further authority was given.

Mr. FINLEY. The authority was continued and appropriation was made, and the appropriation is not exhausted, but goes on to the 1st of July of this year.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on the point of order?

Mr. PAGE. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is of the opinion that the burden is upon the gentleman from South Carolina to produce the authority authorizing the appropriation which he asks. An appropriation can not be made for a commission which is not in existence. The Chair, reading the statute before him, holds that there is no such commission in existence. It is quite plain that the commission would have died without the act approved March 4, 1911, but it was revived under that act to continue until the Sixty-second Congress convened.

That commission could have been appointed by the Speaker of the Sixty-first Congress at any time after the November election, when he had official knowledge as to what Members had been elected to the Sixty-second Congress. He could not have made an appointment from among Members of the House who had not been reelected; and, therefore, he was limited in his selection to those who had been elected to the Sixty-second Congress.

If the Speaker of the Sixty-first Congress did appoint that commission from eligible Members of the House, then that commission had authority and existence until the Sixty-second Congress convened. When the Sixty-second Congress convened, all power of the Speaker of the Sixty-first Congress to appoint that commission had expired. No authority is given to anybody to appoint this commission after the Sixty-second Congress did convene. The Sixty-second Congress convened on the 4th day of April, 1911, just 30 days after the power of the Speaker of the Sixty-first Congress had expired.

Mr. FINLEY. Is the Chair of the opinion that Speaker CANNON did not appoint the commission?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated that it is not material whether he did or not. If he did, the commission expired at the beginning of the Sixty-second Congress. If he did not appoint it before his time was out as Speaker, then nobody had the right to appoint, because the present Speaker did not become Speaker until the 4th day of April, 1911.

Mr. FINLEY. On March 4, 1911, the RECORD shows that Speaker CANNON announced as the Printing Commission Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio, Mr. FOCHT of Pennsylvania, and Mr. FINLEY.

The CHAIRMAN. That commission, under the act which the gentleman now asks the House to make an appropriation, went out of existence when the Sixty-second Congress convened. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

Office of the Public Printer: Public Printer, $5,500; purchasing agent, $3,600; chief clerk, $2,500; accountant, $2,500; assistant purchasing agent, $2,500; cashier and paymaster, $2,500; clerk in charge of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the Capitol, $2,500; assistant accountant, $2,250; chief timekeeper, $2,000; paying teller, $2,000; telegrapher and clerk, $1,800; clerks—1 at $2,000, 10 of class 4, 11 of class 3, 6 of class 2, 6 of class 1, 9 at $1,000 each, 4 at $900 each, 6 at $840 each, 12 at $720 each; paymaster's guard, $1,000; chief doorkeeper, $1,200; doorkeeper, $1,200; 6 assistant doorkeepers, at $1,000 each; 2 messengers, at $840 each; chief delivery man, $1,200; 5 delivery men, at $950 each; telephone switchboard operator, $720; 3 assistant telephone switchboard operators, at $600 each; 6 messenger boys, at $420 each; in all, $131,200.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "six," after the word "three," in line 1, page 35, and insert in lieu thereof the word "seven."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment. It is an increase of salary.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, there is no increase of salary at all. This is in accordance with the recommendation set forth in the Book of Estimates on page 375. The estimate is provided there for 7 clerks of class 2, and the statement is made that it is arranged to promote one clerk from class 1 to class 2 on account of long and faithful service and increased responsibility. That is the recommendation of the Public Printer. When the matter came before the committee in the hearings, at page 1858, the following colloquy occurred:

The CHAIRMAN. Then you ask for 7 clerks of class 2 instead of 6 clerks of class 2.

Mr. DONNELLY. The promotion of one clerk from class 1 to class 2 is recommended on account of long and faithful service and increased responsibilities.

The CHAIRMAN. How are these places fixed? Are these clerkships graded because of the work of the particular places, or is the compensation arranged so as to promote a man doing the same work after a certain period of time?

Mr. DONNELLY. These salaries are fixed in consideration of the nature of the employment and the capability of the clerk. The particular clerk whom it is proposed to promote under this recommendation is a clerk named Emerson, who has received $1,200 for some time. His position has become more important, and the volume of his work has increased in the past two or three years. He is in charge of the receipt of formal bids for open-market purchases; he receipts for and returns samples, keeps the index of forms, corrects addresses, and acts as assistant telegrapher. The efficiency of the individual has been considered in all these cases, and in no case have I recommended an increase in the salary of anyone receiving more than $2,000 a year.

Because of this long and efficient service the promotion indicated by the estimate is suggested by the Public Printer. It seems to me it is only fair and in the interest of the public service that this be done. I therefore hope that the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this is one of a great many recommendations made for increased compensation. Three years ago the committee picked up and placed on the statutory roll a number of employees who before that time had been paid out of lump appropriations. Ever since then requests have been made to rearrange and readjust and increase the compensation of various employees. There is no more excuse for increasing the compensation of one of these employees at this time than there would be for increasing the compensation of a great many others. The committee did not believe it would be justified in making the recommendation. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 154, at the end of line 19, strike out "$5,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$7,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to reserve the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, this is subject to the point of order, but at the same time, in my judgment, it will be conducive to economy. I want to say, in connection with that, that the salaries paid to the superintendents (not business managers) of the three largest publishing houses in New York City is $7,500 per annum.

The combined force of the mechanical departments in these three publishing houses is approximately one-half of the force employed in the Government Printing Office.

The charges for work performed in the Government Printing Office during the last fiscal year amounted to $6,307,762.74; the salary paid to the business manager of this institution, which has 4,000 employees and does a business of over $6,000,000 a year, is $5,500 per annum, out of which he is compelled to pay a premium of $150 per annum for his bond.

The foremen of the composing rooms of the New York and Chicago newspapers receive on an average $4,000 a year, and direct the work of an average force of 200 men.

Since the present Public Printer has been in that official position there has been a reorganization of the force there, showing the efficiency of this man to fill the position that he is occupying at the present time. I say that rewarding merit is conducive to economy, and in that connection I want to make the following statement to prove my contention.

The total appropriation for public printing and binding have been decreased annually since 1909, as will be seen by reference to the table on page 1913 of part 2 of the hearings before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations having charge of the sundry civil bill for the fiscal year 1913.

The Government Printing Office was operated during the fiscal year 1911 without a deficiency appropriation for the first time in 20 years, and with a balance of $272,000 remaining unexpended. A deficiency appropriation will not be necessary for the present fiscal year.

The work of Congress has been executed promptly and efficiently, and for a period of three years there has been no cause for complaint as to the service rendered by the Government Printing Office.

The execution of approximately 10 per cent greater volume of work at a less labor cost is the result of increased efficiency and improvement of equipment and of methods of handling the work.

It seems to me that this is a reward to which the Public Printer is entitled, and unless Congress shows that it is willing to reward efficient and capable service, it is probable that it will not be able to keep an efficient man in that position. I maintain that it is much more important to pay a salary sufficient to reward a man of that merit in that position than it is to pay the sums that are paid to many other employees in different departments of this Government. That is my reason for desiring the consideration and adoption of this amendment at this time.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. What becomes of the amount of money that is paid by Members of Congress for publication of speeches? Where does that money go?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations can tell that better than I.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is covered into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I know that it is covered into the Treasury, but the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations can explain that better than I can.

I have here a comparative table of the production and expenses of the Government Printing Office in recent years, and with the permission of the committee I will insert it at this point in my remarks. It is as follows:

Comparative statement of production and expense—Government Printing Office.

Fiscal year.	Salaries, wages, leave, and holiday.	Charges rendered.	Scale reduced first of fiscal year.	What charges would have amounted to had no reduction been made in scale of charges.	Remarks.
			Per cent.
1908	$4,470,754.63	$5,208,337.56			Scale of charges indefinite.
1909	4,452,489.11	6,242,443.13			Not enough definite information on hand to make change in scale.
1910	4,341,818.71	6,324,395.41	5	$6,657,258.33
1911	4,319,453.09	6,307,762.74	2½	6,811,938.81	The volume of work (represented by $6,811,939.81) is over 9 per cent in excess of 1909, while the salaries, wages, etc., are about 3½ per cent less than in 1908.
1912 (11 months)	[1]	[2]

[1] No greater than in 1911.

[2] $602,595.39 in excess of same period in 1911.

Mr. Chairman, I understand, of course, that this amendment is subject to the point of order, but under the circumstances the point of order ought to be withdrawn. The increase in the salary is just. The request is not made by the Public Printer himself. When I learned the efficiency and capability of his management of the business of the Printing Office, I volunteered to put in a bill which is now pending before the House increasing his salary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the present Public Printer is undoubtedly a very competent man, but in fixing Government salaries Congress has always taken into consideration the very great distinction that comes to a man through holding so important a public place. The committee would not be justified in consenting to any increase of compensation in a position like this, and I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made by the gentleman from New York. The gentleman from Illinois, who offers the amendment, admits the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 155, lines 2 and 3, strike out "6 at $840 each, 12 at $720 each," and insert in lieu thereof "18 at $840 each."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order this is an increase of compensation and I make the point of order against it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion this is one of the recommendations made by the Public Printer.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; the Public Printer has recommended a great many persons over there be increased, and if we followed the recommendations of all these officials we would be issuing bonds in a few months.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say I am satisfied the Public Printer made these recommendations due to the efficiency of these clerks, and I think I was justified in offering it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not criticizing the gentleman for offering this amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I know; I did not say the gentleman was.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the public printing, for the public binding, and for paper for the public printing and binding, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving, for both Houses of Congress, the Supreme Court of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the Court of Claims, the Library of Congress, the Smithsonian Institution, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the International Bureau of American Republics, the Executive Office, and the departments; for salaries, compensation, or wages, of all necessary employees additional to those herein specifically appropriated for, including the compensation of the foreman of binding, and the foreman of printing; rents, fuel, gas, electric current, gas and electric fixtures, and ice; bicycles, horses, wagons and harness, electrical vehicles, and the care, driving, and subsistence of the same, to be used only for official purposes, including the purchase, maintenance, and driving of horses and vehicles for official use of the officers of the Government Printing Office when in writing ordered by the Public Printer; freight, expressage, telegraph and telephone service; furniture, typewriters, and carpets; traveling expenses, stationery, postage, and advertising; directories, technical books, and books of reference, not exceeding $500; adding and numbering machines, time stamps, and other machines of similar character; machinery (not exceeding $100,000); equipment, and for repairs to machinery, implements, and buildings, and for minor alterations to buildings; necessary equipment, maintenance, and supplies for the emergency room for the use of all employees in the Government Printing Office who may be taken suddenly ill or receive injury while on duty; other necessary contingent and miscellaneous items authorized by the Public Printer; and for all the necessary materials and equipment needed in the prosecution and delivery of the work, $4,182,880.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I rise for the purpose of eliciting some information from the chairman of this committee. Our constituents throughout the country are under the impression that the speeches we send out through our districts are published free. That they are furnished free is a charge frequently made in the press of the country. Such publications have been made in my district. I have distributed some of my speeches and I am informed that the impression is general throughout the district that they cost me nothing. Now, I make the assertion, and I am prepared to verify it, that the speeches published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, printed by the Public Printer, cost the Members of this House more than it costs to print them in private printing offices in this city. Now, if we are to pay more for the speeches than private houses in this city charge, then I think the people ought to know that fact and this House should know what disposition is being made with money we pay for the printing of these speeches.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Why not make fewer speeches?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Well, possibly that might be better; but we are here to give expression to our views and by the exchange of thought enact wholesome legislation. When I distribute a speech and pay a big price for it I do not care to have it charged in my district that I am receiving these speeches from the Government press free of charge when, as a matter of truth, I pay more than is charged elsewhere.

Mr. FOCHT. I would like to ask the gentleman where could he get any printing done in this country at the prices he gets it done there?

Mr. TRIBBLE. If the gentleman will take his speeches and go down to a private printing office of this town and get the prices he will find out. I am speaking the truth, for I have personally secured prices in private establishments.

Mr. FOCHT. On the contrary, I feel ashamed to take work from the Government Printing Office and send it out at the prices we pay.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman can make his own investigation, I have made mine, and I assume my statement is worth as much as his.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman considered the difference in the cost of paper on which the speeches are printed? Is it the fact the difference in the cost of printing speeches in a private printing office and getting them at the Government Printing Office is the difference in the cost of paper?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I do not know, and I want to know now this difference and what is done with the money paid for them. That is the purpose of my rising to obtain that information, if I can. I do not object to paying for the publication of my speeches; indeed, I think the Members should pay for such publications. My point is, we pay the Public Printer more than a private office charges, and yet the public generally understands that speeches are free.

Mr. MANN. I think no private printing office would print speeches upon the paper which the Government Printing Office uses, and the fact is the speeches which we send out from there would cost considerably less if the Government Printing Office would print them upon less expensive paper; they are purely temporary speeches and are not supposed to last 50 years. [Laughter.] Well, they are presumably embalmed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on rag paper, and there is no occasion for using anything but the cheapest ground wood-pulp paper in sending speeches into a district, and I think the gentleman will find the difference is in the cost of the paper.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is accurate in his statement. My attention was called to the fact within a few weeks that such a statement had been printed in connection with a very excellent speech which I made myself. [Applause.] The statement was to the effect that the speech was being distributed in my district and that the printing was done by the Government, and that it was a very desirable thing that Members of Congress should be able to have speeches printed free by the Government, and circulated. I did not pay any attention to the statement because I had painfully realized that those speeches were not printed free, and I had been compelled to pay a very substantial sum to have copies printed in order to circulate them. Like the gentleman from Georgia, and other Members of the House, having prepared the speech myself and having delivered it, and knowing better than anybody else what a very excellent speech it was, I was willing to incur that expense and pay that money out of my own pocket in order to give the people of my district the benefit of the work I had put upon the speech. I believed it was a very illuminating speech. I think it is one of the best speeches that has been called to my attention in the course of a year. Its chief value was the fact that it was an accurate account of the failings and mistakes of the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I know it was a good speech.

Mr. MANN. A speech that was not even delivered here?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it was not.

Mr. MANN. And printed at Government expense?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was informed that a gentleman in the House thinking as highly of this speech as myself had had it inserted in the RECORD, so that Representatives might have an opportunity to see their shortcomings. The gentleman from Illinois asked some question about the speech at the time, and his colleague, my colleague on the committee, also. In reading the RECORD, as I did after it was called to my attention, I was inclined to believe they both were of the opinion that it was a very good thing to circulate that speech to enlighten the country. I know that they appreciate my patriotic enterprise in having printed, at my own expense, a number of copies of this speech so at least in one portion of the United States, that represented by myself, the people would not be under any delusions about the record of the Republican Party.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Now, these charges are covered into the Treasury.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The money that the Members of Congress pay to the Public Printer in return for these speeches is covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. Formerly the Public Printer got the benefit of these payments, by having the appropriation reimbursed, but he does not now.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I inquired about it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I want to know, if we are furnishing the printing press——

Mr. MANN. The printing of those speeches is not made at the expense of the appropriation. The fund is used over and over again.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken about that. That was the law at one time.

Mr. MANN. I only give my opinion on the subject. I am satisfied that when the gentleman finds out he will see that I am right.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Treasury gets the benefit of the payment made by the Members.

Mr. MANN. Then, under the theory of the gentleman, the more speeches printed by Members of Congress, the less can be used for real congressional printing. We make an appropriation of so much for congressional printing, and if the appropriation should be exhausted we could not print any. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I am not. The Public Printer is doing what never has been done before. He is doing more work all the time for less money. I am confirmed in the statement I made from a reliable source.

Mr. MANN. It is a wrong source this time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been stated that it costs more to print these speeches in the Government Printing Office than elsewhere. I have had some experience both ways. I had one speech printed more cheaply outside the Government Printing Office, but I never tried it a second time. The workmanship, paper, and everything about the speech was of such a character that I did not care to repeat the experiment. Whether it would cost more to have the work done in the same style, same grade of paper, same grade of ink, outside of the Government Printing Office I do not know.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield? It is also a fact that the workmanship of the Government Printing Office is superior to other work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The press work would be the same any place. I do not think there would be any difference in that. It is not like that of a skilled painter or something requiring the peculiar individual skill of an artistic character. The excellence of the work consists, first, in the style of setting type. That can be set in any way a person desires, and then the grade of paper and quality of ink will also enter into it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman will understand I am not complaining. I simply wanted to know if the money went into the Treasury.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The money goes into the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. It goes to the Public Printer.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I shall not enter into the controversy between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] as to where the money goes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no controversy between the gentleman from Illinois and myself as to where the money goes. The difference of opinion is where certain money comes from.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is a question I want to mention. I am in hearty sympathy with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE]. A newspaper having a very large circulation in this country, published in my district, advised its readers some months ago to write to their Members of Congress for anywhere from 300 to 500 copies of a certain speech that was delivered here, telling them that the Government printed these speeches for nothing, and all they had to do was to ask their Members for them. Thereupon I received many requests for numerous copies of this speech

Mr. MANN. Whose?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, it was the first speech of its kind ever delivered on the floor, by the only kind of a man that ever appeared on the floor.

Mr. FOCHT. May I ask you a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. You will recall in connection with Thomas H. Benton's Thirty Years in Congress, when his publishers asked him how many copies should be printed, he said, "Great heavens! Do you not know what the last census was?" I suppose this was the case with you?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Very much the same case. And the notion prevails generally throughout the country that Members of Congress have all the printing done they want done for nothing. I am very glad that the gentleman from Georgia has raised the question, and I would like every citizen of the Republic to know what the facts are with regard to the expense of printing speeches that are delivered by Members of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For printing and binding for Congress, including the proceedings and debates, $1,750,000. And printing and binding for Congress chargeable to this appropriation, when recommended to be done by the Committee on Printing of either House, shall be so recommended in a report containing an approximate estimate of the cost thereof, together with a statement from the Public Printer of estimated approximate cost of work previously ordered by Congress within the fiscal year for which this appropriation is made.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 157, in line 15, strike out "$1,750,000" and insert "$1,992,981.68."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this is the estimate. The amount recommended is over $200,000 less than the estimate. Of course this estimate was primarily prepared by the Public Printer.

Now, it seems to me that that is a very large difference between the appropriation for the next fiscal year and that for the current year. The appropriation for the current year is $1,846,850, and the estimate for the coming fiscal year is $1,992,981.68. This amendment, if adopted, will give the estimate. Everybody agrees that this Public Printer is a good official.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, if there is any item that I have ever discovered in my long service in Congress that I am sure ought not to be increased, it is the item providing for printing and binding for Congress. I hope to see the time come in America when the present inexcusable abuse that exists in regard to printing may be done away with. I hope to see the time in America when all documents will be sold at a nominal figure, as I am reliably informed is now done in England, in order to prevent the tremendous waste that now prevails.

We print a great deal of material, good, bad, and indifferent. Some of it, I believe, would be of value if it got into the hands of certain people; some of it would be of no value in the hands of anybody; and I should like to see the reform made along the line of less printing instead of more printing. Constantly some one gets hold of the ear of the Committee on Printing, or a certain demand is made because people in a particular section of the country desire temporarily certain things that they have heard of, through the press or otherwise, and we authorize the printing and circulation and distribution of a lot of matter. It is one of the great wastes of Congress. That waste could be stopped and a saving of money could be had, amounting to a good many thousand dollars, by a different system.

Mr. FOCHT. I would like to make a suggestion along that line, if the gentleman from Illinois will permit.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. FOCHT. I quite agree with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] that there has been a very serious abuse, but an effort has been made in the new printing bill very largely and extensively to reform that abuse.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, that effort is simply hitting at a few pronounced abuses and not hitting at the viciousness of the old system. The truth of the business is that the Members of Congress undertake, through the distribution of documents and seeds and a lot of other things to make themselves popular in their own districts in order that they may come back to Congress, and for my part I think that a man who is dependent on that sort of work for his coming back demonstrates that he ought not to be here in the first place. And I think, along with this free advertisement of ourselves, that we should do away with a lot of the messenger-boy work that now pertains to the work of a Member of Congress and deal with some of the great questions that are pending before the country, and if we did that we would be better off and the country would be much better off. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am not going to debate the proposition or to affirm or to deny the proposition that the gentleman from Kentucky makes, because it is not necessary. Here is the Government Printing Office and here is a provision for the printing and binding of Congress. All the printing and binding of Congress must necessarily be under existing law.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, we authorize every day, and will authorize probably out of part of this fund that this money is supposed to supply, the printing of a whole lot of things. Now, all we have to do is to cut off a lot of fool printing and come within this limit.

Mr. CANNON. But that is under existing law.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; the gentleman is mistaken again. We make the law from day to day.

Mr. CANNON. Under the law the Committee on Printing comes in with a resolution which we agree to. If the law did not authorize it, we could not have printing done.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is mistaken. If the law did authorize it they would not come to Congress for authorization.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman knows that by resolution of the House, or by resolution of the Senate, public printing is ordered, and that is permitted under existing law. It is true that if Congress did not sit there would be no CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. If the reports of the committees were not made there would be no printing from that standpoint. I have reason to suppose that in this year of our Lord 1912, with a presidential election approaching, with a session of Congress that is liable, I suppose, to run to the 1st of September, and God knows how much longer—and I know of nobody that can tell me—I see no reason to suppose that there will be any less printing done in the coming fiscal year than there has been in the current fiscal year.

Now, what is to happen? If we cut this estimate from $1,992,000 plus to $1,750,000, about a quarter of a million dollars or a little more, all there is about it is there will be a deficiency appropriation to make, or else the printing that we order will not be done. I believe there is a law that requires the Public Printer to divide this appropriation into four parts and spend so much each quarter. I am perfectly willing, if the majority desires, to cut off a quarter of a million dollars at one stroke for printing and binding for Congress. If the majority want it, so be it.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, something was said about the Committee on Printing. I am sure the gentleman from Kentucky will not charge the present committee with anything like extravagance; in fact, a comparatively small amount of printing has been done by authorization of this committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I am not charging the present committee with any extravagance, but it is the vicious system. I understand the pressure that is brought to bear on the committee, and my wonder is that they have not done more of it, considering the demands that are made on them under this vicious system.

Mr. FINLEY. If the Committee on Printing in the House made favorable reports on three-quarters of the resolutions that go to them, the printing would amount to more than a million dollars a year above what it does at present. There are very few Members of this House who do not at some time—the gentleman from Kentucky himself—call matters to the attention of the committee, which, if carried out, would call for large expenditures of money.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is right, and I repeat that the fault is with the system. In nine years' service in the House I have made one request, and that was for the printing of a public law—the bankrupt law—of universal interest to the country.

Mr. FINLEY. I will admit that there are abuses. I remember one instance in the last Congress where 100 copies of the laws of the District of Columbia were ordered by a committee. That meant the initial cost of that publication would come out of this appropriation. It cost $1,059. That was, in my opinion, an unnecessary expenditure of the public money. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky to the fact that very often Members will introduce resolutions not drawn by themselves, but suggested by some one outside, and they do not know what is in them or what they involve. I have one resolution, where I got an estimate, and it called for an expenditure of something like $250,000. So nothing can be charged to the present Committee on Printing in the House in the way of extravagance. The only criticism at present is that we are not liberal enough with the membership of the House. It is true that the joint committee, within the limit of $200, can order reprints, and do sometimes, and the House by special resolution can order prints or reprints to the extent of $500. If the cost exceeds $500, it must be by concurrent resolution, so that whatever waste there is the majority in the House or Senate, or both the House and the Senate, is responsible for it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the estimate for printing and binding of Congress for the current year was $2,272,036.88. The appropriation was $1,846,850. The Public Printer will do all the printing and binding for Congress for the fiscal year without any deficit. Congress has been in session seven months during this year. In the next fiscal year the ordinary session of Congress will be three months, and we will probably be in session at least during the month of July, making four months, but not much more than 50 per cent of the time that we are in session during the present fiscal year. The reduction in this item, although Congress will be in session three months shorter time in the next year, is only $96,850. The gentleman from Illinois proposes to give for public printing and binding next year, when Congress will be in session about half the time it is in session this year, $150,000 more than is required for that purpose during this fiscal year. The committee could not justify any such appropriation. There is no necessity for it. I believe the Public Printer will have ample money, unless there is an extra session of Congress next spring. In that case there probably would be more money required, but that is not anticipated.

Mr. MANN. What?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not anticipated at present, and I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] in reference to public printing. I believe now, and I always have believed, that where the Government spends very large sums of money in acquiring information it can afford to spend proportionately very small sums in disseminating information. Of course I know there are abuses under the system. I am going to give the gentleman from Kentucky a chance to explain something which perhaps has not been called to his attention. In the report of the Committee on Printing, recently submitted to the House on the 1st of this month, there is a quotation from a report made by the Printing Investigation Commission, from its preliminary report dated June 25, 1910, in which occurs this statement:

> Libraries also receive a great number of documents from private individuals who have been supplied with Government publications they do not desire by Members of Congress and the departments. A startling incident of the extent of this practice was reported to the commission by the librarian of the Louisville Free Public Library. The Louisville librarian stated that last fall he received 3,000 documents that had been franked to a citizen of Louisville. Nearly all of these publications bore the dates of 1900 to 1904, and many of them were duplicates. In the lot were 20 mail sacks of the 1904 Yearbooks of the Department of Agriculture, a total of about 750 copies of that publication alone. Out of the entire number the Louisville librarian says there were only about 300 volumes that his library desired, and he forwarded the remainder, about 2,700 volumes, to the superintendent of documents in Washington, the Government having to bear the expense of mailing this wagon load of publications from Washington to Louisville and from Louisville to Washington.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman that I know nothing of the matter except what he has read. Perhaps I can explain it from my knowledge of some of my predecessors. I was elected to Congress in 1902 and took my seat in December, 1903. There were no publications mentioned in the statement just read by the gentleman that were the result of any action of mine, but it so happens that there was a predecessor of mine who died, and when his estate was administered there were quite a number of documents to his credit. I do not know, but it is just possible that these documents were turned over by his administrator, the Fidelity Trust Co., to the public library, because I recall that the trust company at one time spoke to me touching some documents. If that be not the explanation, the only explanation of it that I can offer is that they are from some Senator of the State or from my immediate predecessor who represented the district during the time to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I had not conferred with the gentleman from Kentucky upon this subject, but, knowing the gentleman, I was very confident that he had not sent out 750 of those valuable books to one individual. I thought it was proper, as long as this matter came up, to have his attention called to it.

Mr. SHERLEY. And I am very glad the gentleman did.

Mr. MANN. So that he would have on record the fact that this does not refer to him.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I care nothing about that. The people of my district, I think, have sufficient confidence in me not to be concerned touching a statement that bears no more directly upon me than the statement just read.

Mr. MANN. But the statement here says that they were received last fall. This is 1910, and it might, without an explanation, have been supposed by anyone who saw this and knew the gentleman had been in Congress from Louisville for years that it referred to the gentleman from Kentucky. Of course I was confident it referred to some documents probably sent out in bulk at some time when some Member retired from Congress, in the hope that he might use them in his district.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that the suggestion which I offer is probably correct, but it is a good illustration of what does happen. We have here every year questions as to space for storing public documents.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is a good illustration of what happens. It is an illustration of what would happen or what might happen, but it is not an illustration of what ordinarily is done by any means, and that is just the point. Every day a Member of Congress receives a large number of printed papers, documents, magazines, newspapers in his mail. What does he do with them? I do not know what other gentlemen do, but I know they do not read them, because that would be impossible in 24 hours of the day. Yet out of those, every once in a while, if a Member examines them at all, he gets something of very great value to him and of great value to the country, which he will use. Oh, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] shakes his head. Perhaps he knows everything without acquiring the information. He has a good deal of information, and I do not know where he gets it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that out of the class of literature to which the gentleman refers anybody gets anything of any great value to the country, to the people, or to himself.

Mr. MANN. Oh, on the contrary, I think a Member who does not examine or glance at the things sent to him misses the opportunity of getting a great deal of very valuable information.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I know I waste a great deal of time in looking through everything.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I suppose the gentleman prefers to read daily newspapers which do not pretend to have information in them rather than to read papers that are from expert sources, and those are the ones that the gentleman ought to look at to get his information. I am in favor of publishing the information which we acquire. I was going to ask the chairman of the Committee on Printing, as a matter of information for the House, whether he expected to get before the House during the present session of Congress the printing bill which he has reported in the House?

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope to do so.

Mr. MANN. How?

Mr. FINLEY. In the usual way that such bills are gotten up, and as to the manner of which I do not think I could enlighten the distinguished gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I take it that we will spend every Calendar Wednesday of the next session of Congress, then, upon this bill?

Mr. FINLEY. Oh, I think the bill will be considered in this Congress.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I just want to add a word. I have listened to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN] with great interest, and also to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the chairman of the committee. I was especially interested in the statement respecting magazines and daily newspapers, and the essays therein, covering everything from the creation of the world to the end thereof, as it would seem, either in fact, assertion, or speculation. But I agree with my colleague that they are useful. You can take some of these publications that are sent here and for mere assertion and abuse nothing like them could be found anywhere else. I have in mind now one paper, a metropolitan paper, that I occasionally get, and not being a subscriber I suppose it comes to me as a sample copy. I turn it over and read it. I know what it is sent for, as it appears either on the front page or upon the inside—a great double column in large print, consisting of assertions and vituperation. If the man who writes those articles had lived back in the time of Job, and had been afflicted as was Job, or even without being afflicted, Job's wife, after reading one of his articles, would undoubtedly have advised him to curse God and die.

Well, we like to see what uses the English language now and then can be applied to. So much for that. The reform that will come from the public printing bill, if it is ever enacted, remains to be seen. The reform that will come from cutting down this appropriation and other appropriations that I will reach a little later by way of amendment, will be hoped for but will not be, I fear, ever materialized.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the State Department, $35,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 157, in line 23, strike out the figures "$35,000" and insert "$45,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, that is the estimate for 1913. The appropriation for the current year was $37,000. I do not desire to speak further, but merely move the amendment which will give the estimate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in investigating the items for these various departments of the Government it was ascertained that in 1911, in most of them or in many of them, a very large balance was unexpended, and the committee made up the items for these departments upon the information which it acquired from what had actually been expended. Instances were called to the attention of the committee where indefensible extravagance had been indulged in in having printing done. For the purpose of preventing a repetition we gave the Department of State the money actually required. For the State Department $35,000 was fixed. In the last two years the appropriation was $37,000 each year. I think the committee has information which justifies it in recommending no larger appropriations than we recommended. I hope the amendment will be disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Treasury Department, $340,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 157, line 24, strike out "$340,000" and insert "$360,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation for the current year is $360,000. The estimates for the coming year is $360,000. This, if adopted, will give the estimate. It is the same as the appropriation for the current year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in 1911 this department had $350,000 and an unexpended balance of $15,000. On the 1st of May of this year, out of an appropriation of $360,000, there was an unexpended balance of $71,000, and it is believed this amount will be sufficient.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; but my friend will allow me there. In 1910 there was appropriated $325,000 with a deficiency of $65,000, which would make $390,000 for that year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; but that was in a year of great extravagance, and since that time the Public Printer materially reduced the cost of public printing.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; but he recommends $360,000 this year, and he is a good man.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the War Department, $190,000: Provided, That the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the publication, from time to time, of bulletins prepared under the direction of the Surgeon General of the Army, for the instruction of medical officers, when approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 158, line 1, strike out "$190,000" and insert "$258,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this is the estimate made by the officers of the Government, while the appropriation for the current year is $263,000, $5,000 more than the estimate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in 1911, out of an appropriation of $275,000, the War Department was unable to expend $78,000, and on the 1st of May of this year it had a balance of $83,849. Apparently it obtained an appropriation very much in excess of what was actually required, and the committee cut the appropriation accordingly.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Navy Department, $140,000, including not exceeding $25,000 for the Hydrographic Office.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 158, line 7, strike out "$140,000" and insert "$153,000."

Mr. CANNON. That is the estimate for the coming year.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Interior Department, including not exceeding $40,000 for the Civil Service Commission, and not exceeding $25,000 for the publication of the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Education, $230,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 158, in line 12, strike out "$230,000" and insert "$273,500."

Mr. CANNON. Which is the estimate for the coming fiscal year, and is $22,000 less than the appropriation for the current year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In 1911 the appropriation was $285,500, and there was expended $227,089.31, making a balance in the neighborhood of $58,000, and on the 1st day of May of this year they had an unexpended balance of $50,000.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Why should it cost $25,000 to publish the annual report of the Commissioner of Education?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know.

Mr. GARNER. I do not suppose anybody else does.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They had expended $40,000 until they came down to $25,000.

Mr. MANN. I believe they print 25,000 copies of the report of the commissioner of education. That is one of the cases I do not know, but I am inclined to agree with my friend from Kentucky. I believe in printing the information. We get a congressional distribution of it, and I apprehend most of the copies are maintained in the folding room because the department has all of the books that the school-teachers want, and then some besides.

Mr. GARNER. And nobody seems to be particularly interested in it.

Mr. MANN. It was used primarily for getting an increased appropriation for the bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like the indulgence of the committee for just one moment, and to ask afterwards to return to the item relative to printing, and to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY]. The Chair finds the statute relative to the subject most ambiguous indeed. The statute is found in volume 36 of the United States Statutes at Large, page 1444. This statute says in so many words that this commission, authorized under the act of 1909, shall continue during the term of the Sixty-second Congress. A few lines further along the statute is just as emphatic in saying that that commission shall serve until the Sixty-second Congress convenes. Now, there is a contradiction and an ambiguity which is difficult to get over, but on mature reflection the Chair has arrived at the conclusion that it was the intention of the Sixty-first Congress to provide that this commission, which might be appointed by the Speaker of the Sixty-first Congress, should continue until the Sixty-second Congress convened, and then a new commission could be appointed by the Speaker of the Sixty-second Congress to run during the Sixty-second Congress. The Chair, therefore, reverses the ruling made a few moments ago.

He is not entirely clear, however, that he is right in it, but in the indicated reversal of opinion relative to it the Chair desires to construe the statute according to intention. While it is the accepted rule that all statutes should be construed against themselves, yet I take it that nobody knows exactly what this does mean, and I do not believe there is any Member on the floor who knows what it means. If there is objection to returning to it, then the Chair wishes to put it to the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we return to that paragraph and that the proceedings be vacated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that the committee return to the paragraph indicated, and that all the proceedings in regard thereto be vacated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Now, the question pending is the point of order.

As the Chair has just indicated, he is perfectly frank to admit he does not know what the section means, and, not knowing, the Chair prefers to have the sense of the House upon it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the Chairman is right in announcing his present ruling, because, after I looked up the matter myself, I concluded it was not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, at the time of rendering the ruling, was satisfied, but on more mature reflection became dissatisfied, because he did not know what it did mean, and does not know yet. But the Chair is inclined to give it the significance that the commission appointed by the Speaker of the Sixty-first Congress ran until the Sixty-second Congress convened, and then that the Speaker of the Sixty-second Congress had the right to appoint the commission to run during the Sixty-second Congress.

The Chair will now hold that that is the meaning of the section, reverses itself, and holds that the amendment is in order.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I renew my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] is now before the House, and the Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 17, page 154, insert: "Printing Investigation Commission, as provided for in an act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, approved March 4, 1911: The sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated for the expenses of said Printing Investigation Commission."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask for a division.

The committee proceeded to divide.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, before the decision is given, I trust that the Chair will permit the chairman of the Committee on Printing to state this case clearly and specifically so that the committee will understand.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. FOCHT. Then I call attention to the fact that there is no quorum in the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is time to quit, anyway.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is made that there is no quorum present.

Mr. FINLEY. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] that he withdraw his point of no quorum.

Mr. FOCHT. No; I will not. They will not allow the gentleman to explain the purpose of the bill. Why not call for a quorum?

The CHAIRMAN (after counting). Fifty-nine gentlemen are present; not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Thereupon the committee rose; and Mr. SISSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky,

Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee finding itself without a quorum had caused the roll to be called, whereupon 131 Members had answered to their names, and he now returned a list of the absentees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum being present, the committee will resume its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment presented by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to modify my amendment by striking out the five thousand and inserting four thousand eight hundred.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman is too late to discuss his amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. And I make the point of order that it is too late to offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina has not been disposed of.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the committee was dividing.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true; but the point of no quorum brings the matter back to the original form, de novo.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can modify his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked if there was any objection to the modification of the amendment and heard none.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the work of this commission is important. It is the only supervision that the Government Printing Office has. It is expected that as soon as the bill on the calendar passes the joint committee will take over this supervision after the 1st of July, and unless this provision of $4,800 is made there will be absolutely no supervision of the Government Printing Office by Congress. This is very important. Thousands of dollars have been saved by these clerks. I have in mind one case where they saved $13,000 and another instance where there was a proposition referred to reprint certain documents and these clerks went to the superintendent of documents and found there were several thousand volumes not disposed of. I could enumerate fifty instances where these gentlemen have saved money to the Government. It is for the House to say whether they shall continue this work and go on after the 1st of July.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. What do you do with this $5,000?

Mr. FINLEY. There are two clerks and one stenographer who are busily engaged in this work.

Mr. GARNER. What do they have to do?

Mr. FINLEY. If the gentleman will investigate, he will find that they look into the conduct of the Government Printing Office, investigate proposed purchases of machinery and material; that they assisted largely in getting up the specifications for paper used this year for the first time, whereby a great deal of money was saved in that respect. These gentlemen are busy every day.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says there will be no supervision after the 1st of July if this appropriation is not agreed to. Is this for the Joint Committee on Printing?

Mr. FINLEY. This is for the investigating commission.

Mr. MANN. The joint committee has control of the Printing Office. The investigating committee does not have any control of the Printing Office.

Mr. FINLEY. That is what it has got.

Mr. MANN. All that committee has to do is to investigate.

Mr. FINLEY. If the gentleman will read the law, he will find out he is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have read the law. This appropriation is not for the Joint Committee on Printing. The committee on investigation is another thing. All it can do is to investigate and report.

Mr. FINLEY. It investigates and reports to the joint committee, and the joint committee is made up of the same membership as the investigating committee. The result is that the joint committee gets the benefit of the work and the Treasury of the United States gets the benefit of what it saves.

Mr. MANN. The authority of the Joint Committee on Printing still exists whether this appropriation is made or not.

Mr. FINLEY. It will exist, but without any force or power to carry on the work, for the joint committee has no clerks.

Mr. MANN. The Joint Committee on Printing has clerks in the shape of clerks of the two committees.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman from Illinois ought to know that those clerks have their own work to do and that they have not time to do the work that is done by the investigating commission, and they are not going to do it.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether they are going to do it or not, but they ought to do it.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FINLEY. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. Do I understand the gentleman that the joint committee is composed of the same gentlemen that compose the investigation commission?

Mr. FINLEY. That is correct.

Mr. GARNER. Why is it this work can not be done under the committee without calling upon the commission?

Mr. FINLEY. The commission was authorized in 1905. It was clothed with larger inquisitorial powers than the joint committee has under the law, and this commission has been at work all of these years. It has finally reported, and the report is in the shape of a bill. That bill has passed the Senate, and it has been reported by the Committee on Printing to the House and it is now on the House Calendar.

Mr. GARNER. Then, if I understand the gentleman, it took seven years of investigation by two clerks and one stenographer in order for the commission, which is composed of the identical gentlemen who compose the committee, to report a bill to Congress.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not know what the gentleman understands, but he is mistaken.

Mr. GARNER. Well, I asked the gentleman a question. The gentleman said that it was appointed in 1905, and this is 1912. That is seven years. The two clerks and the one stenographer have been working under the identical gentlemen who compose the committee.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman must bear this in mind, that this is the first Democratic House that we have had, and the work has been pushed in this Congress.

Mr. GARNER. O Mr. Chairman, now I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it seems a difficult thing to understand why the same men composing a committee and composing the commission need to have the same clerks report to them as the committee from the commission in order that the committee may determine what shall be done. The truth of the matter is that the Government Printing Office ought to be run by a practical printer. It is a great, big business establishment, and there is just as much excuse for having a joint committee of the two Houses attempting to run the Navy Department or the War Department or some other department of the Government. I believe that if we would permit the Public Printer to conduct the business of the Printing Office and hold him responsible the result would be just as satisfactory, if not much more so. I can not believe that two clerks ought to be put in a position where upon their determination the conduct of that great establishment should be fixed and settled.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. Has the gentleman any inside information on this proposition?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand what the gentleman means by "inside information."

Mr. FINLEY. Has the gentleman been in consultation with the Public Printer about this?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I have not talked with him about this. I know this commission has been in existence seven years. The statement is made to-day that these two clerks are the men who are making certain investigations and doing certain work—in effect, controlling a business establishment that does a business of the extent of $6,000,000 a year. The present Public Printer is one of the most competent men in the United States for the position that he holds, and if, as it appears now, instead of these Members of the two Houses of Congress attempting to exercise some sort of control or jurisdiction, they are absolutely dependent upon two clerks and one stenographer, the quicker we discontinue the services of these clerks and the stenographer the better it will be for the public service.

Mr. FINLEY. Would the gentleman abolish the Joint Committee on Printing also?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If I had my way I would.

Mr. FINLEY. Then I am sure the gentleman would have an absolute waste, and he would have a scandal on Congress in no time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not believe that would result. I would put responsibility upon somebody and not have it divided around and have some clerk hidden away where nobody could find him, who is exercising a greater power than either House of Congress can exercise.

Mr. FINLEY. These clerks exercise no power. The only thing they do is to gather information for the joint commission, and the joint committee gets that information, and they have used it and have saved hundreds of thousands of dollars annually since this commission has been in existence; and the gentleman knows that the appropriations for printing and binding have not increased in the past five years. He knows that there has been a great saving.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think from the investigation that I have made of the subject that it is due to the fact that at present for the first time in my experience there is at the head of the Printing Office a man who knows something about the office. I have listened to representatives of the Government Printing Office who knew nothing whatever and could not tell anything at all about it.

Mr. FINLEY. Who were they?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The representatives of the Printing Office before the present Public Printer were unable to tell anything at all about the business of the Printing Office.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman must bear in mind that the present Public Printer, however efficient he may be, will not always be in office.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope we will get one as good when we put a Democrat in charge.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FINLEY) there were—ayes 18, noes 41.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the original amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Paragraph 52 of section 73 of the act approved January 12, 1895 (Stat. L., vol. 28, p. 620), relating to the binding and disposal of volumes of the specifications and drawings of each patent issued, is repealed.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph beginning on line 19 and ending on line 24 of page 158. It is new legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it repeals a provision which authorized the publication and binding of documents which costs $49,000 a year. The gentleman has included the same provision in a bill reported from his committee. This bill under consideration at the present time will become a law, and it is not so certain that the other will. If the gentleman wishes to effect an economy, here is the place to do it.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman admits that this very provision is in the bill that has been reported by the Committee on Printing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not the very provision, but a provision to accomplish the same purpose.

Mr. FINLEY. Yes; so that evidently the gentleman thinks there are some good things in that bill. He will pick them out and put them in the sundry civil appropriation bill, and thereby weaken the chance of passing the other bill which has been reported by the Committee on Printing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. FINLEY. That is the effect of it, and I make the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would not wish to admit that this is the only good thing in the bill reported by the gentleman's committee.

Mr. FINLEY. No.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee was called upon to recommend appropriations for printing, and here was printing and binding that is confessedly a waste. Instead of appropriating the money for it it recommended a provision to repeal the authority for the printing.

Mr. FINLEY. At any rate, this proposition which the gentleman says will save $49,000 and which will do it is some of the work of the Printing Investigation Commission, to which the gentleman is opposed. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I insist that it repeals authority which imposes an expense on the Government, and it is in order under the rule to make reductions in expense.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the Holman rule there can be legislation in an appropriation bill to the extent of changing the law. The law can be changed by modifying existing law or by repealing it, provided it comes under some one of the provisions named in section 2 of Rule XXI. The only portion of that which the Chair can see under which it might come is in the language contained near the bottom of the page, which reads as follows:

Or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

The Chair is not advised that by repealing this former act there is a reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill. That does not appear on its face.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt about that.

Mr. MANN. Will the Chair permit me to make an inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MANN. The further provision of the Holman rule is:

Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law, or the House members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

The Committee on Printing has reported to the House Senate bill 4239 and included in that bill a recommendation that this section be repealed and that the work provided for in the section be stopped and that the printing be no longer done. That is the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter.

The CHAIRMAN. If that is the report of the committee——

Mr. MANN. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina whether his committee has not reported a bill in favor of stopping this work?

Mr. FINLEY. Does not the Holman rule mean the committee reporting? And that is the sundry civil bill.

The CHAIRMAN. No; the Chair thinks not. The Chair thinks it means the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter under the rule, and if the Committee on Printing has reported a bill that repeals this act now referred to in the sundry civil bill, which would retrench expenditures, then the Chair will hold the point of order should be overruled.

Mr. MANN. I do not have the report before me just at this time, but they not only state that they propose to abandon this printing, but they recommend in the bill the repeal of the act.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the gentleman from South Carolina, chairman of the Committee on Printing, conceded that it would save $40,000.

Mr. FINLEY. I said the gentleman from New York claimed it would save $49,000, and I asked if it was not one of the good things in the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. But the gentleman from South Carolina himself conceded it would save that amount.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have it here; it is $49,137.39.

Mr. FINLEY. Does the gentleman get that out of the report?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I get it out of the statement which the Public Printer submitted as to the cost of this. It is $49,137.39.

The CHAIRMAN. The question with the Chair is whether the repeal of that act would reduce the amount of money covered by the bill or be a retrenchment of expenditures.

Mr. FINLEY. There is nothing in the bill and nothing in the sundry civil bill to show that that is true; no motion is pending that will affect that directly.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is not, the Chair will overrule the point of order made by the gentleman from South Carolina; but if, upon the contrary——

Mr. FINLEY. I did not hear the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the Chair has information to the effect that the repeal of the act mentioned in the bill now under consideration would reduce the amount of money covered by the bill or retrench expenditures under the proviso of the Holman rule, then the Chair will overrule the point of order; but——

Mr. FINLEY. I stated that this provision being in the sundry civil bill does not operate as a reduction directly of the money carried for printing and binding.

The CHAIRMAN. It may or may not.

Mr. FINLEY. And therefore it is extraneous and outside evidence or conclusion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] just stated that the Committee on Printing has made a report to the House to the effect that it would save money; that a repeal would be a retrenchment of expenditures. If that be correct, the Chair would be compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman from New York made the statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Illinois to make the statement.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina controvert the statement that his committee has reported in favor of abandoning this work, as provided for in section 73 of the act?

Mr. FINLEY. I do not. We have so reported.

Mr. MANN. They have so reported, and also propose to repeal the entire printing act, including section 73.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from South Carolina state to the Chair the action of his committee on this point? Has the chairman of the Committee on Printing of this House made a report to the effect that the act set out on page 158 of this bill, beginning with line 19, should be repealed?

Mr. FINLEY. There is no question about that. We have.

The CHAIRMAN. If the chairman of the Committee on Printing has so reported for his committee, then the Chair will overrule the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The paragraph in the bill says, "paragraph 52 of section 73 of the act." It is not paragraph 52 of section 73.

And I suggest to the gentleman that he strike out "fifty-two" and insert the word "The" before "paragraph," so that it will read:

The paragraph of section 73.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will offer the amendment. I move to strike out the word "fifty-two," after the word "paragraph," in line 19, and insert the word "The" before the word "paragraph."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 158, line 19, strike out the word "fifty-two," after the word "paragraph," and insert the word "The" before the word "paragraph."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For engraving the illustrations necessary for the Annual Report of the Director, and for the monographs, professional papers, bulletins, water-supply papers, and the report on mineral resources, and for printing and binding the same publications, of which sum not more than $35,000 may be used for engraving, $145,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 150, line 7, strike out "one hundred and forty-five thousand" and insert "one hundred and sixty-five thousand."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, that one hundred and sixty-five thousand is estimated for, and that is the appropriation for the present year. If the amendment prevails, the estimate will be allowed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in 1911 the appropriation was $175,000, and there was a balance of about $35,000. The balance on the 1st of May was about $15,000, and the committee thought $140,000 was ample in that regard.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Smithsonian Institution, for printing and binding the Annual Reports of the Board of Regents, with general appendixes, $10,000; under the Smithsonian Institution, for the Annual Reports of the National Museum, with general appendixes, and for printing labels and blanks, and for the Bulletins and Proceedings of the National Museum, the editions of which shall not exceed 4,000 copies, and binding, in half morocco or material not more expensive, scientific books and pamphlets presented to or acquired by the National Museum Library, $34,000; for the Annual Reports and Bulletins of the Bureau of American Ethnology, and for miscellaneous printing and binding for the bureau, $21,000; for miscellaneous printing and binding for the International Exchanges, $200; the International Catalogue of Scientific Literature, $100; the National Zoological Park, $200; for miscellaneous printing and binding for the Astrophysical Observatory, $400, and for 1,500 copies of volume 3 of the Annals of the Astrophysical Observatory of the Smithsonian Institution, $2,000; and for the Annual Report of the American Historical Association, $7,000; in all, $74,900.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order will be disposed of first.

Mr. FINLEY. On page 159, line 24, beginning with the words:

And for 1,500 copies of volume 3 of the Annals of the Astrophysical Observatory of the Smithsonian Institution, $2,000.

That is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad to hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] on the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, of course this institution is existing and does this work. It has completed these investigations. This is the third volume of the annals. Fifteen hundred copies of the other two volumes have been printed. This is to enable the publication of 1,500 copies of the third volume.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman cite to the Chair the authorization for any of these appropriations?

He knows that the Smithsonian Institution has been appropriated for for year in and year out, but to the extent for which it may be appropriated for has always been a question with the Chair.

Mr. FINLEY. I want to state to the gentleman from New York I would like to know the necessity for this. I have no wish to stand in the way of any proper appropriation, but I would like to know the necessity for it. That is why I reserve the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution says in regard to this:

Astrophysical Observatory: The current appropriation is $400. The sum of $3,000 is asked for the fiscal year 1913 in order to enable the observatory to publish volume 3 of its annals, including the results of all its researches from 1908 to 1913. Volume 2 was published in 1908 at a cost of $2,000, but owing to the general increase in cost of printing and the necessity of publishing a larger amount of tabular matter in volume 3 than was included in volume 2, the estimate of $3,000 is submitted. The edition of volume 3, as of volume 2, will be 1,500 copies. Only 60 copies now remain of volume 2, and a demand for them still exists.

The work has all been done. The manuscript is ready. The persons engaged in obtaining this information in the Astrophysical Observatory cost about $15,000 a year for their services, and this money is to enable this information to be made available.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] withdraws his point of order, and the Clerk will now report the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 159, line 17, strike out $34,000 and insert $50,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Department of Agriculture, including not to exceed $47,000 for the Weather Bureau, and including the Annual Report of the Secretary of Agriculture, as required by the act approved January 12, 1895, and in pursuance of the provisions of Public Resolution No. 13 of the first session Fifty-ninth Congress, and also including not to exceed $125,000 for farmers' bulletins, which shall be adapted to the interests of the people of the different sections of the country, an equal proportion of four-fifths of which shall be delivered to or sent out under the addressed franks furnished by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, as they shall direct, $475,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 160, in line 4, strike out "$35,000" and insert "$40,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, we are now down to line 20.

Mr. CANNON. All right.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Clerk had finished reading the paragraph ending with line 20, and line 4 is three paragraphs earlier.

Mr. BURLESON. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not want to take advantage of the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. I will offer another amendment, and the gentleman can object to it if he desires.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will advise the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that we have long since passed the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall not object to returning.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the paragraph will be returned to. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. I will offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 160, line 7, strike out "$290,000" and insert "$325,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this is for the Post Office Department, including the Money Order Division.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 160, line 9, strike out "$47,000" and insert "$52,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the paragraph will be returned to——

Mr. CANNON. No; that is not the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 160, line 20, strike out "$475,000" and insert "$480,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" semed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division. That is for the Department of Agriculture.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 32.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Interstate Commerce Commission, $90,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 161, line 13, strike out "$90,000" and insert "$110,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, on the 1st of May the Interstate Commerce Commission had a balance of $41,000 unexpended.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the International Union of American Republics, $20,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph for the purpose of making the inquiry, By whom and when was this bureau claimed to be or called "The International Union of American Republics"? It used to be called "The Bureau of American Republics." I am asking to get some information.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not recollect when it was changed. I understand that it is the correct title.

Mr. MANN. Do they have authority to change the name whenever they please? I confess that the new name does not strike me favorably. I do not know of any union of American Republics. It was the Bureau of American Republics and was properly called a bureau.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the letter of the director it is spoken of as the Pan American Union, formerly the Bureau of American Republics.

Mr. MANN. I presume the gentleman did not have his attention attracted to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not familiar with it. There was a dispute whether the correct title was the Bureau of American Republics or the Pan American Union. My recollection is that we looked it up and found this title and put it in.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that my friend Mr. Barrett, who is at the head of that institution, would be glad to have a union of American Republics and be its first president.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no doubt he is well qualified for that place; if they would leave out the United States of America I would support him for the presidency of the others.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That no more than an allotment of one-half of the sum hereby appropriated for the public printing and for the public binding shall be expended in the first two quarters of the fiscal year, and no more than one-fourth thereof may be expended in either of the last two quarters of the fiscal year, except that, in addition thereto, in either of said last quarters the unexpended balances of allotments for preceding quarters may be expended; and no department or Government establishment shall consume in any such period a greater percentage of its allotment than can be lawfully expended during the same period of the whole appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I would like to ask the gentleman how he thinks this would work with the appropriation for printing by Congress, especially of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of next year? The appropriation is based, I suppose, upon the RECORD being printed only until the 4th of March. Now, under this item it would not be possible to spend all of the money appropriated for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, because you could not expend the last quarter of it in any event.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a large amount of additional printing. However, I will state that it is my recollection that this provision has been in the bill for 20 years, at least.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's recollection is in error. A part of this item first appeared in the act of 1910 and a part of it first appeared in last year's act.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was a modification to carry out the purpose of the provision. It is the only provision that prevents the exhausting of the public printing appropriation the first part of the year and then a request for a very large deficiency.

Mr. MANN. I understand the purpose of it, and have no quarrel with the purpose, but that purpose is not applicable to congressional printing. If Congress ends on the 4th of March, of course, as far as the RECORD is concerned, as far as a large share of the printing is concerned, there could be no use of one-fourth of the appropriation, because you could not expend it after that time. I call it to the attention of the gentleman. I have no desire to strike it out on a point of order. I think the gentleman will find that as far as the congressional printing is concerned it requires a larger appropriation than necessary, because you can not spend the whole of it under the provision of that paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am informed that the part of the paragraph down to line 23 has been carried in this bill for at least 20 years, and that it has never interfered with the printing of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The truth of the matter is that for a great many years the Public Printer in printing for Congress went ahead and printed what Congress wanted, regardless of allotments or anything else.

In a conference with the Public Printer it was stated to him that we desired to have the printing for Congress done the same as for any other department of the Government, and if a deficiency must be created because of the excess of printing, Congress ought to know it and be asked for a deficiency and have provision made for it, so that better track could be kept of the expenditures and better results attained. If that were done, it would result beneficially to the Government.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether the congressional printing would be denominated as included in "department or Government establishments," because I do not know what a "Government establishment" is, but that has never been in the law but one year before, and that was not when it was a short session.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My impression is that that language does not apply to Congress.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Isthmian Canal.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 25069, the sundry civil appropriation bill, but had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SLAYDEN, for 20 days, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Wednesday, June 19, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BUCHANAN, from the Committee on Labor, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 18787) relating to the limitation of the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon a public work of the United States and of the District of Columbia, and of all persons employed in constructing, maintaining, or improving a river or harbor of the United States and of the District of Columbia, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 910), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the resolution (H. Res. 578) directing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to ascertain and report to the House of Representatives certain facts regarding the cost of anthracite coal and the increased demand upon the public consumer, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 911), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24559) granting a pension to James T. Cape, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. JACOWAY: A bill (H. R. 25419) for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Morrilton, Ark.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 25420) to increase the limit of cost for the United States post-office building at Sistersville, W. Va., and making appropriation therefor; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. NEELEY: A bill (H. R. 25421) for the erection of a public building at Pratt, Kans.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25422) for the erection of a public building at Larned, Kans.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. ALEXANDER: Resolution (H. Res. 587) empowering and directing the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries to investigate the methods and practices of various ship lines engaged in general transportation and their connection with railroad lines and other common carriers, etc.; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 25423) granting a pension to Melissa J. Gross; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25424) granting an increase of pension to Sophia Bemis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25425) granting an increase of pension to Eliza Jane Blythe; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BELL of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 25426) to correct the relative rank of Lieut. Frederick S. L. Price; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FAISON: A bill (H. R. 25427) granting a pension to Zebulon A. Pyatt; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: A bill (H. R. 25428) waiving the age limit for admission to the Pay Corps of the United States Navy in the case of Evan Urner Rinehart; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. NEELEY: A bill (H. R. 25429) granting a pension to Samantha Crews; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: A bill (H. R. 25430) granting an increase of pension to Mary Morris; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBINSON: A bill (H. R. 25431) granting an increase of pension to Henry E. Everts; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25432) for the relief of the heirs of John W. Graves; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 25433) granting a pension to Hiram H. Potter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SWITZER: A bill (H. R. 25434) granting an increase of pension to Hiram W. Partlow; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. YOUNG of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 25435) granting a pension to Richard M. J. Miller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Petition of Polish Roman Catholic societies of Connecticut and Pennsylvania, protesting against passage of House bill 22527, for restriction of immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of St. Kazmir Society, No. 360, and St. Stanislaus Society, No. 29, of Scranton, Pa., both protesting against passage of House bill 22527, for restriction of immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota: Evidence to accompany claim for pension for Eliza Jane Blythe, widow of John Blythe, of Company B, First Regiment Minnesota Heavy Artillery Volunteers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, evidence to accompany claim for pension of Melissa J. Gross, widow of Gilbert Gross, Company C, Second Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Cavalry; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: Petition of Daughters of Liberty of Providence, R. I., favoring passage of bills restricting immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 19, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, fountain of wisdom and source of all good, keep us, we beseech Thee, in touch with Thee through the remaining hours of this day, that we enter not into temptation, but with pure motives, high ideals, and lofty purposes we may do the work Thou has given us to do. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the unfinished business is the bill making an appropriation for the Boston customhouse.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent, which I suppose will be equivalent to a two-thirds vote, to dispense with Calendar Wednesday for to-day.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama objects. Does the gentleman from New York wish to make a motion?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I do not.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. WHITACRE was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Francis W. Leeper, applicant for special pension, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, to disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24023) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to take the bill just reported from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the bill had better go over a day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. MANN. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his request.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I withdraw the request.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 24227, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] will take the chair. [Applause.]

CUSTOMHOUSE, BOSTON, MASS.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 24227, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24227) to amend section 11 of an act entitled "An act to grant additional authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out certain provisions of the public-building acts, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1909.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further general debate upon the bill, the Clerk will read the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether he has any further information from the Treasury Department other than that contained in the report.

Mr. PETERS. There is an estimate in a letter which was sent to the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and myself since that time which gives a little more complete figures than those I gave to the House. They do not differ materially.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman that information here?

Mr. PETERS. Yes; I will be glad to give it to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts has given me a copy of a letter addressed to him by the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in which the Assistant Secretary says:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 11, 1912.

Hon. ANDREW J. PETERS,
House of Representatives, United States.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of a letter this day addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, relative to the customhouse building, Boston, Mass., which explains itself.

Respectfully,

J. F. CURTIS,
Assistant Secretary.

JUNE 11, 1912.

CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
House of Representatives, United States.

SIR: In accordance with telephonic request from Mr. Courts, that you be furnished with information relative to the basis for the award of the contract for the construction of the foundation and of the basement and first floor of the extension, etc., of the customhouse at Boston, Mass., I have the honor to advise you that on May 5, 1910, eight proposals were received, in amounts, $278,500, $322,000, $375,062, $378,856, $420,000, $441,700, $483,000, $530,000, and the contract was awarded to the lowest bidders, the Norcross Bros. Co., in the amount of their bid, namely, $278,500.

During the execution of the work it was found necessary to have additional work done, at an expense of $51,542.54, in detail as follows:

Removing exterior dome and base, etc	$8,900.00
Removing inner brick dome	15,700.00
Removing certain walls and floors and shoring up central part	24,746.85
Extra depth of caissons	2,195.69

Work was omitted to the extent of $568, as follows:

Omitting boiler flues, brickwork, etc., in east and south wall in subbasement, etc	$210
Miscellaneous changes	358

In addition to the foregoing expenditures have been made and liabilities incurred for rent of temporary quarters for certain purposes, equipment, and maintenance of same, chargeable to the appropriation for the new customhouse, aggregating approximately $265,000. For architects' fees, $84,905.66; steel inspection and other miscellaneous items, $13,829.23; in total amount, $693,809.43.

Respectfully, ——— ———, Secretary.

The original limit of cost was $1,800,000.

Mr. PETERS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. There has now been taken from that $693,809.43, and a part used for construction work. As I understand, up to the present time for rent, equipment, and maintenance there has been charged to this appropriation $265,000, and that is what the gentleman desires to make up.

Mr. PETERS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And the rent which will be paid in the future?

Mr. PETERS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. How long would these rents probably run?

Mr. PETERS. It is estimated two more years will be necessary to complete the building.

Mr. MANN. At the rate of about $90,000 a year?

Mr. PETERS. At the rate of about $90,000 a year.

Mr. MANN. That would make about $450,000?

Mr. PETERS. About.

Mr. MANN. Somewhere near that?

Mr. PETERS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Now, is it possible to have paid $85,000 for architects' fees up to date on this building?

Mr. PETERS. The fees include the preparation of the plans. And the entire working plans have been completed. It was necessary to have them completed, so that final contracts could be offered to contractors and bids received on them.

Mr. MANN. Well, 5 per cent of the total original appropriation would be $90,000, I think, if my arithmetic is correct.

Mr. PETERS. Yes; I am sure that is right.

Mr. MANN. Here are paid out $85,000 in architects' fees up to this time, and they have not commenced work on the superstructure.

Mr. PETERS. Yes; because architects' fees include the plans on the superstructure.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman this question in reference to the building. From my examination of the matter it seems to me that this building would not be a building that would be satisfactory to Boston very long and would not supply the needed room very long. How soon does the gentleman think the people there would be knocking at the doors of Congress for an additional building to take the place of this one?

Mr. PETERS. The Treasury Department has estimated that this will give sufficient room for any increase of facilities for 30, 40, or 50 years.

I wish to make it clear that this bill does not ask that the customhouse be built in the shape of a tower. We are already committed to building a tower under the plans which were drawn in accordance with the act of 1909. It is now simply a question of whether Congress will give to Boston an adequate and respectable building along the lines already laid out or whether it chooses to build in Boston a skimped and cheaply constructed tower, which will be an eyesore and make a building, the shape of which some do not approve, still more objectionable by constructing it in a manner that would be deplorable in the case of any public building. The very fact that the customhouse is to be a tower, dominating all other buildings in the city, makes it imperative that it be constructed in the most pleasing and stable manner possible within the limits of a reasonable expenditure.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman agree to that?

Mr. PETERS. I am not an expert in making an estimate of that nature.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman is an expert on the needs of Boston. I discovered that. He is not only an expert on the needs of Boston, but an expert in acquiring the things which Boston desires.

Mr. PETERS. So far as I know, this will be sufficient to look after the business for some time in the future.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this measure close in five minutes. I desire to use three minutes of that time myself.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps somebody might wish to reply to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] asks unanimous consent that all general debate on the pending bill close in five minutes.

Mr. MANN. For the present I object. I do not think there will be any trouble in closing debate right away.

Mr. TOWNER rose.

Mr. PETERS. How much time does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] desire?

Mr. TOWNER. I do not ask for any particular time, but I do not think it would be a good idea to make the rule too stringent as to the limitation of debate. I desire at this time, if I may be allowed now for a moment, to say this in regard to this building.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] has the floor.

Mr. PETERS. I asked the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] how much time he wanted and have not yet been able to ascertain.

Mr. TOWNER. Five minutes will be enough for me.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, this bill, as it originally passed the House, provided for an appropriation of $1,800,000, from which there was to be taken the amount necessary for the rent of the temporary quarters. The bill which we offer here to-day proposes to repeal the part of the section which places that restriction on the original appropriation and allow the entire $1,800,000 to be used for the construction of this building. There has been already expended for such construction, including the contract for the foundation and including the sum which has been deducted from the $1,800,000 necessary to pay the rent, the amount of $693,809.43, which taken from the original limitation leaves as an amount now available only the sum of $1,106,190.57. Of this sum there must be deducted, if the act remains as it is to-day, the sum necessary to pay rent for the temporary quarters until the completion of the new building, which is estimated to be about two years, so that there will have to be deducted, as the law stands to-day, from this sum $234,400 additional, making the net amount available for building above the ground only $871,790.57. I wish to submit at this point a table showing the present status of the original appropriation. The amounts of the items that have already been charged against the $1,800,000 are taken from the Treasury Department's letter of June 11, 1912:

Original appropriation		$1,800,000.00
Already expended:
Architects' fees	$84,905.66
Contract for foundation	278,500.00
Additional work	51,542.54
Equipment, rent, etc., of quarters (approximate)	265,600.00
Steel inspection and miscellaneous	13,829.23
	694,377.43
Exact amount charged against original appropriation up to June 11, 1912		693,809.43
Amount now available		1,106,190.57
Less amounts for rent, etc., still to be subtracted—
1. Of the original $300,000 set aside by treasurer there has been expended $265,600, leaving	$34,400.00
2. Additional amount that it will be necessary to expend for rent before completion of new customhouse	200,000.00
		234,400.00
Net amount available for building above ground		$871,790.57
Lowest main proposal		1,393,000.00
Additional amount necessary to complete the building and pay the rent on temporary quarters		521,209.43

That is, $521,209 less than the lowest bid, and it falls short by about $250,000 of allowing sufficient money to finish the building, even if all the changes were made which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations suggested should be made last time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much does the gentleman say?

Mr. PETERS. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. The gentleman is mistaken. If the changes are made there will be ample funds to complete the building.

Mr. PETERS. There are not ample funds; and if the change is made there are not funds left sufficient to finish the building, because there must be deducted from the balance left sums amounting to $250,000, the amount needed to pay rent for these necessary quarters; so that there is about $250,000 less than the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations had in mind in submitting his figures. That is, there would be a balance left, now, of $871,790.57, which is about $250,000 less than the required amount, even deducting the amount suggested by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Now the office force is in temporary quarters, and the Government is paying $84,000 a year in rent, which comes out of the appropriation needed for the building itself. The earlier we can move into the new building the sooner the necessity for this expense is ended. It is therefore a matter of economy to the Government and a matter of fairness to the second port in the country that this bill, which has the unanimous support of your Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, be passed without further delay.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this measure be closed in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] asks unanimous consent that all general debate on the pending measure close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object. I do not think it would take any considerable length of time to complete the debate.

Mr. PETERS. If the gentleman will name any definite amount of time he desires, I will ask unanimous consent that the debate close after the expiration of that time.

Mr. MANN. Oh, we will soon get through with the bill. I do not know whether anybody wants time or not.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I think there need be very little time consumed in determining the merits of this bill. The bill was carefully considered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and while a rather unfortunate situation exists, yet I think that as sensible men we need only meet it as we find it, and do the best that can be done.

In the first place, in an effort to secure a site for this building in Boston it was ascertained that it was practically impossible to secure a site large enough to build the kind of building that it was anticipated would be needed. A building site larger than the existing site could not be secured without the expenditure of a very large amount of money. Then wisely, as it seemed to us, and as it now seems to me, they concluded to utilize the building site that they already have, and to construct the building thereon as far as possible to do under the circumstances. That was possible by the building of a tower-like structure.

It seems that after careful investigation this was approved by the Treasury Department, and plans were made that will accommodate for 25 or 30 years the needs of the city.

I know that at first blush this character of building seems to be perhaps not the best calculated from the standpoint of utility to serve the purposes intended, but in view of the fact that it was selected only because of the existing circumstances and that it will really subserve the purpose for which it was intended, it seems to me there ought to be no criticism on the action taken.

Then another difficulty existed, and that was the fact that in the change from the old to the new building it became necessary to secure quarters for the present operative force, and such quarters could only be secured at a very large rental, approximating $90,000 a year. Under the terms of the bill, which certainly were not very definite, this amount was taken from the appropriation.

It may be that the Treasury Department interpreted the act aright. However that may be, that has been the interpretation, and the amount named has been taken from the original appropriation. I can not but believe from the evidence before the committee that such was not the original intention. That has diminished the fund at the rate of $90,000 a year for perhaps three years, so that the amount now available is less now than is necessary to complete the contemplated and necessary building.

That constitutes, as we believe, an emergency, to meet which the House ought to make at this time a sufficient appropriation.

So that now we have before us simply the proposition to build this building under the original plans and terms, as it will almost necessarily have to be, or else abandon the project and lose that which has already been put into the foundation. So that it seems to me that it is only the part of wisdom on the part of the House to act on the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

I do not join with others in the suggestion that this is a plan of the Members from Boston or Massachusetts to loot the Treasury. I think they are only doing what Representatives of the people ought to do under the circumstances—look after the interests of their constituents and the country. Indeed, I believe that the Government could not afford to build a building less dignified, less useful, and less appropriate in its appearance than is contemplated in the second port of importance in the United States.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I introduced the original bill which provided for a new customhouse building in Boston and a building for the appraisers stores. The present customhouse building was erected nearly 70 years ago, and no addition has been made to the facilities for conducting the customs business of the port of Boston since the erection of the present building.

For a great many years it has been necessary to lease quarters for the appraisers storehouse, and when in the Fifty-ninth Congress a bill was introduced to construct a new building a large part of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds went to Boston to inspect the premises. I do not see any Member in the House at this time who was a member of the committee at that time, but there are Members of the House who went to Boston at that time, and I can say to those who are now present that it did not take the committee 20 minutes to determine that it was absolutely essential that there should be a new building erected in Boston. The facilities were admitted to be entirely inadequate and, in addition, the ventilation was very bad; men were working in public corridors and in all kinds of unusual places. In fact, all of the conditions were so unusual that the committee was astonished that a change had not been made years ago.

The original appropriation provided that the customhouse should cost $3,000,000. It was believed that that amount would be necessary to purchase a site and erect a building. But during the contemplation of this subject the citizens of Boston for two reasons decided that they would like to erect the kind of a building which is now in process of erection. There was a great deal of sentiment in favor of preserving the old building, which had become one of the landmarks of Boston. This building was constructed of Quincy granite.

The columns are as fine specimens as are to be found in any building in New England; they were cut from solid blocks of stone, so that they are not in sections, as columns ordinarily were those days. Incidentally, it is worth noting that the columns were hauled from Quincy, 10 miles distant from Boston, to the site of the customhouse by oxen, and it required 30 pairs to haul each column over the roads as they existed at that time.

Now, wishing to preserve this building as a base for the new structure, and wishing at the same time to reduce the cost as much as possible, the citizens of Boston, as represented by the chamber of commerce, agreed to the form of building which is now proposed, the plans for which were drawn by the firm of Peabody & Sterns, of Boston.

And, incidentally, lest I forget it—I would like the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who took occasion the other day to criticize these plans—they were drawn by the well-known firm of architects to whom I have just referred. I noted in the New York Sun two or three days ago that in the erection of a county courthouse in the city of New York there was some question about the architects who had been selected to compete in making the plans, it being stated that architects had been selected who were not well known. The Sun stated that there need not be any fear that there would be inadequate or unsuitable plans for this building, because a committee of umpires had been selected whose reputation was such that there need be no doubt about their disapproving plans which were unsuitable for such a building; the first of the umpires selected to pass upon these plans is Mr. Peabody, of the Boston firm, who drew the plans for this customhouse.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEEKS. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is perfectly well aware of the fact that the very best umpires are sometimes the very poorest players.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree to that in the case of architects. As I have said, the proposed plans were passed on by a committee of the chamber of commerce, of which organization there are 3,000 members, representing all the varied business interests of Boston. I have never heard any considerable criticism of the decision to which they came. Personally, I think that perhaps it would have been better to have provided plans of another character, but if that had been done it would have been necessary to purchase a new lot, because the old customhouse in this case covers the entire lot.

The purchase of a suitable lot for a customhouse would have cost in the neighborhood of $1,000,000, which would have been added to the final expense of the construction of this building.

From time to time Congress passes large numbers of public-building bills for various uses, so I wish the members of this committee to note the purpose of this bill. It is to provide quarters for the customhouse service of Boston, which is and has been for more than 50 years the second largest customs district in the United States. Thirty millions of revenue are collected there annually, and when we stop to think of the purposes for which we erect public buildings in other sections of the country the necessity for a new building in Boston will be all the more apparent. In the sundry civil appropriation bill, which is now under consideration in the House, there are appropriations for carrying on the work connected with public buildings aggregating $72,247,000. The amount of revenue collected in the buildings which this large amount is provided for is in the proportion of one dollar of revenue annually for five dollars and fifty-four cents of building constructed. In the Boston customhouse the revenue collected is $30,000,000 annually, and it is proposed to expend for the building itself less than a million and a half dollars. In other words, there is a proportion of $20 of revenue collected annually for every dollar of building, a difference of something like one hundred times in favor of the necessity for these quarters.

As the people of Boston are satisfied with this proposed building, as it is of a character which has proven to be adequate in other places for other purposes—for in the city of New York the great Manhattan tower building is one of the most useful buildings in that city—as the customs officials in Boston are satisfied with the character of the building, as it will save at least $1,000,000 to the National Treasury, as it has been demonstrated that on account of the original building being constructed on made land, in order to get suitable foundations it was necessary to go deeper and spend more money than was originally contemplated, it seems to me that this additional request for $300,000 is entirely within reasonable bounds and that the committee action in recommending it should be approved by the unanimous vote of the House.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I am disposed to vote for this measure, but I want to assist, as far as I am able, to procure satisfactory quarters for the customhouse authorities and officials at Boston. Does the gentleman think the people of Boston will be satisfied with this improvement if it is made? It seems to me that the proposed structure is a sort of patched affair, and that the importance of Boston would entitle it to a first-class location and a first-class customhouse in every way. If it is insisted by the gentleman that this bill ought to pass, I am going to vote in favor of it; but what does the gentleman think of the suggestion that has been made that a larger appropriation be made and that some convenient location be selected and a building erected upon it which will satisfy the Boston people for all time to come, or within reasonable time.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, the best evidence that this building will be satisfactory to Boston is that it was approved by a committee of the chamber of commerce, representing 3,000 members. I believe there was no objection made to the report of the committee which investigated these plans. The chamber of commerce is made up of members representing every business industry in Boston, and therefore I think it is a fair statement to say that this will be satisfactory to the citizens of that city.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the gentleman is almost entirely responsible for the drain on the Treasury because of the Appalachian Park appropriation, will he not agree that this amount be taken out of that appropriation and reduce it to that extent?

Mr. WEEKS. Oh, the gentleman from Tennessee gives me altogether too much credit. I wish I were entirely responsible for the appropriation which he calls to our attention, because, in my judgment, it is about the most worthy expenditure the Government is making to-day.

Mr. SIMS. It never passed until the gentleman took hold of it; and I also remember the Weymouth Back River matter, so that I have become rather afraid every time I see the gentleman rise in favor of any money demand on the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WEEKS. The gentleman need have no fear on that score. He ought by this time to have learned that anything which the gentleman from Massachusetts favors is so worthy that it receives the approval of the House.

Mr. SIMS. Well, it goes through the House anyway.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, in this connection I want to say that while I do not directly represent a city of Boston district, I have an intimate knowledge of the necessity for this building, and, in my opinion, the necessity is so acute that action should be taken at once. I believe the appropriation is less rather than more than it should be, and hope that the bill will receive the approval of this committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the opposition to this bill was not based upon the fact that Boston should not have an adequate building, or that the sum originally contemplated was excessive. It was based entirely upon the fact that the building was unfit and was an architectural monstrosity. The gentleman in advocating the bill should, of course, at least state the facts. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], in summing up the reasons which made this legislation necessary, said that the foundations had cost a larger sum than had been originally anticipated. In that he differs with the architect for whom he has expressed so high an opinion. Mr. Peabody said:

The foundations have not really cost more than was anticipated.

So that instead of the foundations costing more than was anticipated, they cost just about what it was expected they would cost.

I venture again the prediction, Mr. Chairman, that when this building is completed and the people of Boston are compelled to transact the public business in it, there will be a violent protest against the Federal Government having such a building for the public business of the United States. To urge that an 18-story tower, 70 by 40 feet, out of which must be taken the space for two elevators, the stairways and the hallways, is an adequate and fit building for the public business in Boston, seems to be not merely ridiculous but preposterous. If some one in this House were attempting to force this building upon Boston, these gentlemen here would be protesting against any such action. They all seem so anxious to have it that perhaps it will be a good thing for the future that this record will be here to show that this building is constructed upon the insistence of the representatives of Boston, who, in the interests of the people of Boston, should be most violent in their opposition to the bill.

I stated all the facts in connection with the matter when the bill was before the House on the last occasion, and I do not wish to occupy time unnecessarily, but I commend the facts to the Members of the House.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. JACKSON. Has anything been proposed this morning which changes the situation from what it was when the bill was last under consideration? I just came in from attendance upon a committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. None whatever, except that the gentlemen from Boston seem to have returned to the assault with renewed courage and determination.

Mr. JACKSON. I wanted to ask the gentleman if he sees any way by which we can tell how much we would be increasing this appropriation if we adopt the suggestions of the gentlemen from Massachusetts? It seem to me it would be like voting blind to increase the amount allowed for the building by an uncertain amount. Is that correct?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The passage of this bill will make available for the construction of the building $1,800,000. It makes available for rent and other expenses while the building is being constructed only such sums as Congress may hereafter determine to appropriate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in that connection I desire to say to the gentleman from Kansas that I just read a letter from the Treasury Department, stating that there had already been paid out $265,000, which would be reimbursable to this fund under this bill. The estimate is $90,000 a year until the building is occupied.

Mr. JACKSON. That is a mere estimate.

Mr. MANN. That is what we are paying, $90,000 a year or $84,000 a year, and they estimate it will take two years.

Mr. JACKSON. It seems to me we would be appropriating, then, merely upon an estimate.

Mr. MANN. Well, he is fairly accurate as far as that is concerned.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I can only repeat what I have said before and all I believe necessary to be said in opposition to this bill, and I do not care to delay its fate.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the gentleman tell us why this building has not been commenced or gone ahead with instead of delayed so long under this appropriation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There has been no delay. They are now ready to let the contract for the superstructure, and unless this bill be passed the substitutions which I mentioned two weeks ago will necessarily be made. Instead of having granite there will be some other stone; instead of having $25,000 worth of sculpture there will be no sculpture. The copper windows will be of some other metal than copper and the marble wainscoting will be turned into a marble base.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it the policy of the Treasury Department to delay the commencement of public buildings at the request of some Senator or Representative who may desire to have changes made?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am unable to speak authoritatively for the Treasury Department regarding public buildings. My understanding is there has been no delay thus far.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand there is something in the hearings in which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] seems to have asked some pertinent questions in reference to this matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think occasionally in the selection or letting of contracts if a Representative of a district prefers to have the matter delayed rather than the contract made the department has sometimes deferred making the contract in order to give the Congress an opportunity to pass upon the appeal that is made.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that appeal made because the Treasury Department in its judgment desires a change made in order to make the service better?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not always. Sometimes it is done because changed conditions may necessitate a larger building than was originally contemplated, and sometimes the delay is had because the Representative of the district believes it is necessary to make it more artistic and ornamental than contemplated by the department.

Mr. FOSTER. And it is not so much a matter of getting a particularly serviceable building but one that will be of architectural beauty. Is that the case?

Mr. FITZGERALD. One that will be a monument to the gentleman responsible for the legislation.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I heard the speech of the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee the other day in opposition to this bill and I was willing to follow him. I thought his argument was unanswerable, but for some reason or other he seems to be in an extraordinary good humor this morning——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was in a good humor the other day.

Mr. FOSTER. And always is.

Mr. SIMS. Has the gentleman from New York changed his attitude?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not changed my attitude, and, of course, I never lose my temper.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, of course, the gentleman never does that, but I notice that the gentleman is willing this morning that the bill be acted upon, and does it in such a manner as to leave the impression with the rest of us that he has surrendered and given up what he thinks is a useless fight, and I want to know now——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken about my changing my opinion or position.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman really want this bill defeated? If he does, he knows how to do it. We can defeat it. We can prevent the passage of it if the gentleman thinks we ought to do it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not in a position to——

Mr. WEEKS. Do I understand the gentleman from Tennessee has surrendered his judgment in this case to that of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SIMS. I want to say this, that I have several times been run over and captured by not surrendering my judgment to the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I did not know but that the gentleman from New York was facing the inevitable and recognized the fact that whenever the Massachusetts delegation go after anything they generally get it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I do not think this bill has any more chance of passing this House than a certain former distinguished gentleman has of being nominated at Chicago.

Mr. SIMS. Well, his supporters all claim that is a dead certainty.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the criticism of the gentleman from New York in regard to the character of the building as a tower, gentlemen have overlooked the fact that by constructing a building of this character they were unable to utilize a site already occupied by the present customhouse. If we had gone into the market and undertaken to purchase a site for the construction of a new building it would have cost from $800,000 to $1,000,000, and in this case the site of the old building has been utilized and in that way it saved the Government an expenditure in the amount of the cost of a new site. It does not cover all the old building site, and hence it not only uses the present site but leaves part of the old building still occupied and still in condition in which it can be used hereafter.

The Supervising Architect, when before the committee, stated that the building as proposed would be sufficient for years to come for the use of the customhouse and governmental purposes in that connection. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. JACKSON], I desire to state that instead of making it indefinite and uncertain, the purpose of this bill is to make the appropriation definite and certain.

Mr. JACKSON. Will the gentleman permit a question there?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. JACKSON. My point is this, if the gentleman will permit, that this appropriation would be increased by a sum equal to whatever the department sees fit to spend for rent and other expenditures during the construction of this building. It does not seem to me that is the way to make appropriations. If they need more for this building, let us give them $200,000 more, say.

Mr. BURNETT. That would not be the effect of the passage of this bill, Mr. Chairman. The effect would be after the passage of this bill to stop the appropriations for the renting and return the amount that has already been used for rentals.

Mr. CURLEY. I want to ask what the difference would be to the Government if another site had been selected for the customhouse to avoid the payment of rent?

Mr. BURNETT. What is the question of the gentleman?

Mr. CURLEY. What would be the difference in saving to the Government between paying rent for the building which is now being used and the purchase of another site?

Mr. BURNETT. None at all.

Mr. CURLEY. What would be the difference?

Mr. BURNETT. The difference in the amount of rent and purchase of another site?

Mr. CURLEY. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. That would depend, of course, on the length of time for which the Government pays rent.

Mr. CURLEY. In that vicinity the cost of a site would be a million dollars.

Mr. BURNETT. It is my understanding that it would cost $800,000 to $1,000,000 to get another site. They are utilizing the present site, and in doing that they have to go up with the building that is proposed here. They utilize a part of the old building. They utilize all the site of the old building that is necessary.

Mr. SIMS. Could not the present site be sold for something? Would it be absolutely a loss?

Mr. BURNETT. Possibly it could be sold; but it is in the portion of the town where they want it for this particular purpose. There are other available sites in this portion of the city where the customhouse ought to be constructed. The vice of the original act was that it was construed by the Secretary of the Treasury to authorize the use of part of this $1,800,000 for paying the rent during the construction of the building. It said, as I recollect, "for the temporary removal from this building," but that was not construed to mean merely the removal of the building and furniture, and it would mean rent of other buildings during the time when this building was being constructed. As has been said by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], there has been paid out for the excavation for the site, as I recollect it, $280,000, and the plans and specifications for this building have been made. Therefore, whatever view we may have as to the expediency of adopting such buildings as this, it is res adjudicata, it seems to me. The excavation has been made, the site of the present customhouse has been utilized for this building, and the plans and specifications have been made for the kind of a building that has been agreed upon and recommended by the Treasury Department. As to what may occur hereafter, as to whether there may be a riot in Boston or whether the gentlemen from Boston may be relegated to the shades of private life because they have made a death trap up there is mere speculation and is something with which this House has no concern. The question is we are confronted with a situation now that is imperatively demanding that some action be taken.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Did not the authorities know at the time they were excavating and when they were drawing these plans that there was not sufficient money and that they would have to come back here and ask for more?

Mr. BURNETT. I do not know that they knew what the excavation would cost.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Why did they not draw the plans to suit the money appropriated?

Mr. BURNETT. The officials may have done wrong in all this matter, as I think they have in many others. And after the 4th of March next there will be a change that will give us more efficiency in all of the departments. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Here is a situation that demands immediate action, and I can not see any good policy in changing the plans agreed upon by the Supervising Architect and the heads of the department at this time.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, I question if any measure ever considered by this House has been subject to a more searching or thorough investigation than the one upon which we are now about to pass judgment.

And as a representative of Boston it is pleasing to me—and I believe it is gratifying to Boston business men generally—that when the vote is taken every man will be in full possession of all facts and his vote will be cast in accordance with his judgment and conscience. The people of Boston have ever displayed a willingness most commendable to make financial sacrifice that historic landmarks may be preserved or that public buildings might be so constructed as to appeal to aesthetic taste in addition to being serviceable.

If Boston had been animated by the desire to economize and accumulate money alone, which apparently is the thought uppermost in this body, its gratification would be possible, but at what a cost in historical landmarks standing as sentinels of a glorious past.

If the present or past generations had harkened to the voices of greed, there would be no Old North Church, with its treasured memory of Paul Revere, and "the shot heard round the world" at Concord Bridge. There would be no Old South Church, whose dead walls breathe the spirit of a militant and patriotic past; likewise, no old statehouse, where are stored relics of past greatness; and dim would be that beacon of human liberty which has served as an inspiration to the oppressed and downtrodden of the world—Faneuil Hall.

Thank God, our regard for patriotic associations has not been blinded by our love for money, for in a nation where great wealth is the sole desire patriotism is dead and the doom of the nation is at hand.

The Boston customhouse is a Boston landmark, with its columns of granite quarried in the city which gave to the Nation two Presidents, and possesses an individuality peculiar to the Quincy industry at the time of the construction of the customhouse.

Boston is in no sense unreasonable in the demand for a suitable building, since the customs receipts of Boston are the second largest of any port in the United States.

I have the highest regard for the sincerity and ability of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. FITZGERALD, and regret that he does not share the view entertained generally by Boston men.

I am grateful to the membership of the House for the consideration I feel they propose giving this appropriation, which will make possible at Boston a public building creditable to Boston's sense of propriety and suitable for the proper conduct of the customs business at the second largest port of entry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 of chapter 318 of the acts of 1909, entitled "An act to grant additional authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out certain provisions of the public-building acts, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1909, be amended by striking out, in the last three lines of said section, the words "including expenses incident to the temporary removal of the force employed in the customhouse during the enlargement, remodeling, or extension."

That such amounts as the Secretary of the Treasury has charged against the appropriation for the customhouse, Boston, Mass., for expenses incident to the temporary removal of the force employed in the customhouse during the enlargement, remodeling, or extension of said customhouse shall be repaid to said appropriation from moneys in the Treasury to be hereafter appropriated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 10, strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the following:

"Provided, That no compensation shall be paid to architects additional to the amount now due and payable under the original limit of cost of said building, to wit, $1,500,000, or because of the increased limit of cost provided by this act."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it was disclosed in the investigation of this matter that the architects were notified that the limit of cost, fixing the amount of money available for the construction of this building, was $1,500,000. It appears that they resented any legislation or any direction that did not permit them to plan a building to cost the original estimate of $1,800,000.

They did not quite appreciate the power of Congress to provide that the cost of removal and rent should be paid out of the amount limited, and a building was designed by them which could not possibly be completed within the limit of $1,500,000, but would require the expenditure of $1,800,000.

That is the reason this bill is here to-day, because the building was planned in defiance of the act of Congress, so that it would cost about $300,000 in excess of the amount determined upon here.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. In a letter which I read a while ago from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, addressed to the gentleman, it was stated that there had already been paid in architects' fees just a trifle less than $85,000, which is very close to 5 per cent of the original $1,800,000, and very close to 6 per cent, if not entirely 6 per cent, of the $1,500,000.

Now, it is perfectly patent that you can not complete the building without paying architects' fees from some source. As I understood the gentleman's amendment, it would even prevent the services of any of the architects under the Supervising Architect to be paid out of this fund.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is difficult to understand how the architects have already received $84,000, when the total compensation to be paid to them is limited to $90,000, and they have not yet completed the foundations and have not made a contract for the superstructure.

Mr. MANN. It may be difficult to understand. I tried to extract information on the subject, while the gentleman was temporarily out of the Hall, from the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS]. The letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, addressed to the gentleman as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, stated there had been paid out already as architects' fees eighty-four thousand and some odd dollars. It does seem to me it would be unwise to prevent the services of an architect, either a special architect or the Supervising Architect, in completing the building, because you can not put up a building of that character without architects' services as you progress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But if these eminent gentlemen, who have performed in the manner I have indicated with respect to this building, are not willing to go ahead and do the superintendence, the building can be constructed under the superintendence of the Supervising Architect's office here. I do not believe we should permit these men to draw plans for a building which will cost in excess of the limit fixed, and——

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MANN. I was going to ask whether the gentleman's amendment would not prevent payments to anybody in the office of the Supervising Architect out of this fund.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If this work was done in the Supervising Architect's office, it would not be paid out of the appropriation for the building.

Mr. MANN. Is it not the fact that where the Supervising Architect's office supervises the construction of a building there is a charge against the appropriation for that building?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; that is changed and we now appropriate specifically for the service in the architect's office.

Mr. MANN. Including the supervision of all buildings?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not chargeable at all to the appropriation for the building.

Mr. BUTLER. Have not these architects been already paid for their services to be rendered in the construction of this building? Five per cent is the ordinary price.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are getting 6 per cent in this case. But I do not believe that we should permit the architects to get a profit to the extent of a commission on this additional amount after they have been so insistent in making these plans. If they wish to decline to perform the services, it is easy to have the superintendence of the construction done under the men in the employ of the Treasury Department. It may teach some of these architects a lesson that when Congress authorizes a building to cost a certain sum, and they are directed to design a building to be completed within that limit, not to disregard the law and the instructions of the Treasury Department and plan a building which is to cost a sum which in their opinion should be spent on such a building.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the Treasury Department make provision when they make a contract for a building that the architect shall superintend the construction of it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; on a certain percentage.

Mr. FOSTER. Do they pay them all the money before the building is constructed?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know how the limit of compensation could be paid under this appropriation for $1,500,000. The architect's commission would amount to $90,000. The foundations have not been completed, the contract for the superstructure has not been let, and yet apparently they have been paid to within $6,000 of the total compensation to which they are entitled. How they managed to do it I am unable to say. That only illustrates some features about the building of this customhouse that deserve the attention of the House.

Mr. WEEKS. If the gentleman will permit me, in the original estimate it was believed that the temporary quarters could be procured for about $30,000 a year, and that $1,700,000 would be available for the building.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Massachusetts is mistaken; the statement of Mr. Peabody, the architect, is that he was informed that $1,500,000 would be available.

Mr. WEEKS. The "gentleman from Massachusetts" is not mistaken, the gentleman from New York is mistaken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The "gentleman from New York" is not mistaken, because he was present and questioned the architect himself.

Mr. WEEKS. The "gentleman from Massachusetts" was present when the original statement was made, and it was understood then that there would be $1,700,000 available.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was a misunderstanding, because the architect himself stated that it was a million and a half.

Mr. WEEKS. This was five years ago, and I know all about it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know what the architect who drew the plans stated his understanding was.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if there is a contract with the architect which has been entered into, would not the Government in the end be required to pay the amount covered by the contract, whether the Government got the services or not? Undoubtedly if they made a contract they must stand by it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The contract was made by the architect, who admits he was notified that $1,500,000 would be available, and he deliberately designed a building that could not be built within that limit. I do not believe that the Government would be bound to pay him upon the excess of cost due to his own stubbornness and determination.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to know whether or not the architect has actually been paid $84,000 for services rendered here when no structure has been begun.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not recall, but the gentleman from Illinois says that he had a letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury to that effect.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] has in his possession a letter transmitted from the Treasury Department containing that statement, and I read it into the RECORD a little while ago.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not understand why they should pay him all of the fees when the work has not been done. I understand, according to the rules of the Institute of American Architects, that the ordinary commission is 5 per cent, and that includes the services of supervision.

Mr. WEEKS. This agreement between the Government and the architect is at 6 per cent.

Mr. BUTLER. Does that include supervision? What we do let us do right, and see to it that if architects have made an agreement to supervise the building that they are kept to it. I think that question is involved in this amendment.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I have any time to yield, but I would like to have the information.

Mr. PETERS. I have a copy of a letter sent from the Treasury Department to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, under date of June 11, which gives the items charged against this appropriation. There was included in that an item of architects' fees, $84,905.66. I know nothing of the relations between the architects and the department. I presume that that is for the completing of plans, because they naturally had to be made before they could get estimates upon them.

Mr. TOWNER. I would ask the gentleman if the letter states that that amount has been paid?

Mr. PETERS. It states that "expenditures have been made and liabilities incurred" for rent, architects' fees, and so forth, to the amount of $693,809.43. I requested a statement of the charges made against this appropriation and received this, and one of the items charged against it is for architects' fees.

Mr. TOWNER. Is the gentleman certain that when the statement is made that this is a charge against the appropriation that that means that it has already been paid out of the appropriation?

Mr. PETERS. That would be my understanding of it, but it makes no difference.

Mr. BUTLER. This haste reminds me very much indeed of that found in the story which is told of three masons who built a bake oven. Two of them held it up while the third went in to get the money.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendment, with a recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. HOUSTON, as Speaker pro tempore, having assumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24227, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with a recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CULLOP) there were—ayes 28, noes 4.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. BURNETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GEORGE WASHINGTON MEMORIAL BUILDING.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, the next bill on the calendar from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is S. 5494, to provide a site for the erection of a building to be known as the George Washington Memorial Building, to serve as the gathering place and headquarters of patriotic, scientific, medical, and other organizations interested in promoting the welfare of the American people. I will state that there are some questions of engineering on which I think we ought to have a report from the department. No report has so far come to this committee. I think the bill ought to be recommitted to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I so move.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

POST OFFICE BUILDING, HURON, S. DAK.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 6009, to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Huron, S. Dak.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is upon the Union Calendar.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard, and the House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 6009) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Huron, S. Dak., with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Huron, S. Dak., be, and the same is hereby, increased $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to finish the walls of said building with the stone specified in the existing contract.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no general debate of the bill, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before that is done, I would like to know what special reason there is for enlarging the cost of this building in order to use Bedford stone. Why can they not put up a very good building with the material which is available under the existing appropriation? I see the distinguished gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] here, always watchful of the interests of his State, and I would like to know what he has to say on the subject.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I would say in response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois that the report which accompanies the bill and the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, which is a part of the report, set forth fully the justification for increasing the limit of cost of this structure.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that I have read the letter and the report. I would like to ask the gentleman in reference to that, as he has apparently also read the letter and the report, whether a building like this with three sides faced with stone does not have a rear side that might be faced with something else? Does this building occupy a whole block?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that the building stands on a square, and that the rear will be exposed. To have three sides of stone and one side of brick it is apparent would be unsightly, and if the gentleman has never observed it, I would like to have him, some time, when he is passing the Senate Office Building, notice the side of the building which is the rear, which is finished with brick, in contrast with the other three sides of the building. It seems to me that demonstrates that in the construction of public buildings we should provide sufficient appropriation to make it possible for the four sides to be of the same material, especially when the four sides are exposed, as will be the case with the building at Huron.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps so, Mr. Chairman, but I quite approve of the method adopted in reference to the Senate Office Building, of making the side there that is of brick of brick. If this building at Huron is in the center of a square, all four sides are equally exposed to the street, and I can see that there ought to be no distinction between the material on the different sides of the building, but if, as I suspect, it is on the corner of a square, I can see no reason why one side not exposed should be constructed of brick instead of stone.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I may be mistaken, but my impression is that the building stands upon a corner of a block, but, in any event, there is a public alley in the rear that is more or less used as a thoroughfare. The dimensions of the ground are such that there will be considerable space between the rear of the building and the alley, and it is in a sense similar to what it would be if it were in a square—that is, the rear will be exposed almost the same as the sides.

Mr. MANN. I believe the law requires a vacant space of 40 feet, but a vacant space of 40 feet is not very wide. I do not know what the facts are in this case. I can see no reason why, as a general policy, the Government should put into its building what no private corporation or individual ever does, the same expensive material on the rear of a building not exposed to ordinary sight that it does on the other sides which are exposed to the sight of the public.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that the difference in cost between the two materials is very slight. It only increases the cost $6,000, and it may not require that amount.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I did not understand all about this building proposition, and I inquired about the policy which permitted the making of contracts for public buildings, three sides of which facing the public are to be built of stone and the fourth side built of brick. The Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in charge of public buildings in the Treasury Department, stated that every contract for public buildings was made in the same way. That is not unusual, not exceptional, and it is not intended to build that fourth side of brick rather than stone. Under the law the department is required to make a contract for the entire building within the limit of cost. As it is impossible to anticipate all contingencies which may arise, some material is substituted in some part of the contract, with the option of the department to substitute another material if it so desires. After the foundation work has been completed, if any unforeseen or unusual or unanticipated difficulties have been met, then the material that is intended to go into the building is substituted. The possibility of an inferior or different material is eliminated.

I was somewhat surprised to learn that was the practice, but the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury states that is the uniform policy. If every contract be made in that way and that be followed, and Congress is to increase the limit of cost so as to substitute the material desired in the plan of the building, then every public building authorized and for which the contract is let will require special legislation to increase the limit of cost. There may be some unusual or peculiar circumstance in this case to which my attention has not been called. I know of none, however, and I believe if there be any such unusual or peculiar circumstances the gentleman should state them, so that this will not be taken as a precedent hereafter to have the committee approve legislation of this character when it will not be either desired or necessary to enact it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, in answer to what the gentleman has said, it seems to me it has been already sufficiently stated why this bill ought to pass. The plans and specifications called for the four sides of the building to be of Bedford stone. The department in asking for bids did not get a bid within the limit of cost and made a contract within the amount authorized by providing that the rear wall should be of brick, but put in a condition that if an additional appropriation was obtained it might be built of stone; and I submit that it is a reasonable and businesslike proposition and we ought to authorize it by passing this bill.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, just a word or two in justification of the committee. The committee thought unanimously that this was an urgent case because of the fact that there was an alternative contract let, and as has been said by the gentleman from South Dakota the construction of the building would have to go on this summer. Under the alternative for the amount of the appropriation within the authorization it would have to be built with three sides of stone and one side of brick, and all its sides are exposed, and it would be in that kind of an anomalous and unsightly condition of a public building with three sides of stone and one side of brick. In that view and in view of the further fact that the statement of the Treasury Department was that this was an emergency matter and that the building is now under contract and that in case the increase of the present limit is postponed until next session it will be too late to make the substitution the committee thought it ought to be passed.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURNETT. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. Is this exposure of this building on a public thoroughfare?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; I understand it is; that all sides are exposed to public gaze.

Mr. HOWARD. All sides are exposed, but there is a 10-foot alley, and, as far as that is concerned, the question is, Is this on a public thoroughfare where this rear end of the building will be seen by pedestrians generally?

Mr. BURNETT. It probably will not be upon one of the large streets, but upon an alley that is used by the public.

Mr. HOWARD. The public, as a general rule, does not use an alley—the gentleman knows that.

Mr. BURNETT. They do in the small towns.

Mr. HOWARD. They are not used by anybody except the taxgatherer and the ash man.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman is mistaken about that. In large cities like Atlanta, which is a metropolis, I think that is true.

Mr. HOWARD. They are not used by the general public in going to and fro, but for delivering goods at back doors.

Mr. BURNETT. In the small towns they do.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, right on that line, I do not know whether I am going to oppose this increase, but there is something wrong about this contracting business that is going on here in the Treasury Department. They are continually asking for increases when buildings are started, as illustrated here this morning in the case of the Boston customhouse proposition.

Now, I want to give the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], who is chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, just one sample of the extravagance that is going on in these public-building contracts on the part of the Treasury Department, or whoever has control of them after these appropriations are made. A few weeks ago the contract for the stone in this new post-office building over here next to the station was to be let, and finally under some maneuver—I do not know what it is that is carried on here when letting these contracts—the selection of the stone finally fell to one man, and that man was the Secretary of the Treasury himself. It developed that there is a certain concern up here in Vermont—I do not know whether they are furnishing the stone for this building, but it is very probable they are——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. This is Indiana stone.

Mr. HOWARD. It ought to be from Vermont. They are getting everything in sight up in Vermont, I know; but it developed in this particular matter to which I have reference that there was a certain stone which the Supervising Architect had said was a better stone. It stood the pressure test better than this Vermont stone, and the bid on this post-office building was $57,900 cheaper than the bid of the Vermont company. I went down to the station myself, and the exposed side of this new terminal station is pitted from one end to the other where the black mica that appears in this Vermont stone washes out in spots as large as a silver dollar. The stone company from my district—the Stone Mountain Granite Corporation—bid $57,900 less than this Vermont company and could have cut the stone and delivered it during the winter, when everything is frozen in Vermont. The Secretary of the Treasury, however, takes the bit in his mouth and spends $57,900 of the people's money uselessly. I want to know by what hook and crook this power is given to this man, and whether these bids are let by honest competition or they can go out and spend money indiscriminately in these public-building matters. If we have got the power, I want in the summer months down home to work on some sort of a law to keep them from wasting the people's money in that sort of style.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Tell the gentlemen what kind of stone the Stone Mountain stone is?

Mr. HOWARD. The Stone Mountain stone is said by the Supervising Architect, J. Knox Taylor, to be as fine building stone as there is in the United States, or equally as good as any in the United States. It is the Stone Mountain granite. It has about 40 per cent less black mica in it than this Vermont stone, and wherever the black mica appears in stone——

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman say that limestone comes from Vermont?

Mr. HOWARD. I am not talking about limestone. I am talking about granite. I know where limestone comes from. There is plenty of it in the gentleman's district.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman, then, is not talking about this particular bill?

Mr. HOWARD. I am talking about how these things are done. It is a new caper here to let a contract out at an enormous sum, greater than they can buy the stone for elsewhere. It is a pure waste of the people's money in order to show favoritism to somebody. That is what I say about it.

Mr. CANNON. May I suggest to the gentleman that if these frauds are being perpetrated, these outrages committed, and his stone is so much better than some stone that has been accepted, and so much cheaper than the stone that has been accepted, why does not the gentleman move an investigation?

Mr. HOWARD. This is a small matter as compared to the many investigations we are engaged in making into irregularities indulged in by the gentleman's party.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, you have got the House. You have 60 majority. You are after all kinds of frauds.

Mr. HOWARD. The trouble is that there has been so much to investigate in your party we can not start investigating all of it at one time. We are doing very well, and we will have new recruits in the Democratic Party next year to help clean up these departments which have been under the control of your party.

Mr. CANNON. It seems the gentleman should not make his word alone all powerful in this case. If what he says is true, somebody has been guilty of maladministration. And the gentleman's speech for home consumption and the broad assertion which he makes are not very well taken unless he proceeds to redress the condition.

Mr. HOWARD. I will say to the gentleman right now that I do not propose to make any speeches here or anywhere else for home consumption. I do not have to do it to retain my seat in this House, and I do not suppose the gentleman from Illinois has to do it after his long and distinguished record in the House. But I want to say the excuse given by the Secretary of the Treasury for selecting this Vermont stone was only this, that it matched the depot in color, and therefore he had to give it to the Vermont concern.

Any man of ordinary observation knows that within six years' time, if that post-office building is built out of any sort of granite, no living human being could tell the difference in its color at a distance of 100 feet, because it would color with exposure to the atmospheric conditions. I can take that particular building and construct it out of Stone Mountain granite or any other light granite, and in six years' time no human being could stand off 100 yards from it and tell the difference in the color of the two buildings unless he is an expert, and that was the excuse given for spending this $57,900.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know about the matter that the gentleman refers to. The gentleman says he does not have to make a speech for home consumption.

Mr. HOWARD. That is true.

Mr. CANNON. And the gentleman thinks I do not have to make speeches for home consumption.

Mr. HOWARD. I am sure of that from some of the statements that the gentleman makes.

Mr. CANNON. But I will say to the gentleman, if I made statements as broad as he has made, without attempting action, I would have to do a good deal of speaking for home consumption to explain my nonaction.

Mr. HOWARD. Well, the gentleman from Illinois probably would have taken some action, and probably the gentleman from Georgia has not allowed this thing to slumber peacefully. It occurred but a very short time ago that this contract was let, and myself and some of my colleagues called on the Secretary of the Treasury and spoke to him about this contract, and I think there will be something further said about this matter before it is finally ended. [Applause and cries of "Read!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Huron, S. Dak., be, and the same is hereby, increased $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to finish the walls of said building with the stone specified in the existing contract.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with a favorable recommendation for its passage.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill S. 6009, had directed him to report it back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reports that that committee, having had under consideration Senate bill 6009, had directed him to report it back with the recommendation that it do pass. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

IMMIGRATION STATION SITE, BALTIMORE, MD.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to call up the bill H. R. 20501, Report No. 694, Union Calendar No. 236.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20501) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to exchange the site heretofore acquired for a United States immigration station at Baltimore, Md., for another suitable site, and to pay, if necessary, out of the appropriation heretofore made for said immigration station an additional sum in accomplishing such exchange; or to sell the present site, the money procured from such sale to revert to the appropriation made for said immigration station, and to purchase another site in lieu thereof.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized to exchange the site heretofore acquired for a United States immigration station at Baltimore, Md., for another suitable site, and to pay, if necessary, out of the appropriation heretofore made for said immigration station an additional sum in accomplishing such exchange; or to sell the present site, the money from such sale to revert to the appropriation made for said immigration station, and to purchase another site in lieu thereof, the total cost of such new site so acquired not to exceed the sum of $35,000.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. I think we had better go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20501) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to exchange the site heretofore acquired for a United States immigration station at Baltimore, Md., for another suitable site, and to pay, if necessary, out of the appropriation heretofore made for said immigration station an additional sum in accomplishing such exchange; or to sell the present site, the money procured from such sale to revert to the appropriation made for said immigration station, and to purchase another site in lieu thereof, with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 20501, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, no one on the committee seems inclined to state what this bill is about, and I shall have to do it myself.

Mr. BURNETT. I did not know that there would be any objection to it, or I should have made some explanation of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman was afraid to make an explanation of the bill. I thought the less that was known about it the more votes it would get. If the gentleman desires to take the floor, I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the bill is to provide for the sale or exchange of the site that was purchased for an immigration station in the city of Baltimore.

The last public-building bill made provision for the purchase of a site for an immigration station at Baltimore. The present conditions there are very bad; they are very much cramped, and the former Congress thought there ought to be a new site acquired and a building constructed. There was an authorization of $130,000 for this purpose, and the Supervising Architect, or some one representing the Treasury Department and some one representing the Department of Commerce and Labor, visited the city and selected the site which was purchased.

The agent of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor acted with the agent of the Treasury Department because immigration stations are under the supervision of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. I have been informed by the former Supervising Architect, Mr. Taylor, that their understanding was that the selection was only for a temporary detention station in case there should be sickness among the immigrants, or something of that kind.

I do not think that the bill authorizing the purchase of this site would bear that construction, because it is for the purchase of an immigration station. This bill was introduced by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] in view of the fact that it has become evident that the place selected was a most unsuitable place for the location of an immigration station. I believe every member of the committee who went and looked over the place was of that opinion. It is located six or seven blocks from the water's edge, so that the immigrants landing would have to march through the city for quite a distance before they arrived at it. Not only that, but it is in a very insanitary location. There are fertilizer factories near by, and we were informed that when the wind was coming from the direction of these factories the odor from the acid and the lime was almost intolerable.

The committee, after that investigation, were unanimously of the opinion that this land ought to be sold or exchanged for some other suitable site, and while we had no authority to choose or select a site, we were informed that there are available sites near the water's edge that could be acquired for a reasonable price. We believe that an exchange can possibly be made, and if not, a sale can be made and a site purchased down near the water's edge without any great expense to the Government. In fact, the expense by the bill is limited to $35,000.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, Baltimore at the present time is terribly hampered in its immigration business. We are using an old building not more than 16 feet front and probably 60 feet deep with a side yard as a detention station. Sometimes there are as many as 150 or 200 people huddled together in this old building. It was therefore determined that we should have a new immigration station, and a bill was introduced asking for $250,000 for the purchase of a site and the construction of such a building.

Congress appropriated $110,000 out of an authorization of $130,000, the $130,000 being available at any time. The Secretary of the Treasury, having a rule that no more than 10 per cent can be paid for any site, decided that he would not pay more than $13,000 for a site in the city of Baltimore. A number of sites were submitted to him. Among them was the present site, offered for $14,000. That came the closest to the 10 per cent of $130,000, and he decided to look into it and see if he could purchase it for $13,000. It was offered to him for $13,250, and he bought the property at that price. I am informed by the local commissioner of immigration at Baltimore that he was not consulted as to the selection and purchase of the site. He informed me of this personally, but in order to have it more specific I telegraphed him on June 4, as follows:

JUNE 4, 1912.

Mr. LOUIS T. WEIS,
President American Label Manufacturing Co.,
Cross and Covington Streets, Baltimore, Md.:

Am I correct in stating to the House that you were not consulted in the selection and purchase of the immigration detention site secured by the Government, and that you knew nothing of this purchase until after the transaction was completed? Please wire me at my expense, giving full statement.

J. CHAS. LINTHICUM, M. C.

I received the following answer to that:

BALTIMORE, MD., June 4, 1912.

Hon. J. CHARLES LINTHICUM,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Knew nothing of location of site selected for immigration station until shown by congressional committee on their recent visit to Baltimore at time when Taylor and Larned were inspecting sites near immigration pier. I had Marine-Hospital Surgeon Schereschewsky write strong protest against site in that locality on account acid and fertilizer factories in that vicinity. I am on record at Department Commerce and Labor for over four years favoring Fort McHenry site.

LOUIS T. WEIS,
Former Commissioner of Immigration.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The accommodations at Baltimore regarding immigration have not been very good.

Mr. LINTHICUM. In what respect?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I mean as to the accommodations for the immigrants.

Mr. LINTHICUM. As I have said, we are using a small three-story house, which is very old and dilapidated, with a side yard, near the railroad track, on an unpaved street. It is very insanitary and is totally inadequate for the purpose, and should not be used for it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is not in keeping with the business done at the port of Baltimore?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Absolutely not. We have an immigration this year, up to the 1st of June, of 20,562 people.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know when this site was purchased, the one of which he speaks?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do not know the exact date, but I think about six months ago.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And it is that site the gentleman desires to have changed?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is, the gentleman desires to move from that site to one more eligible?

Mr. LINTHICUM. We have a number of sites offered us in that vicinity, and some of them very desirable. One of them is situated right adjoining Fort McHenry, and it is the intention to make the fort a permanent reservation. It is right on the water's edge and it would make a desirable site for a detention station, and the immigrants could be landed right there and taken care of by the Government.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the passage of this bill is required in order to give the Secretary of Commerce and Labor discretion to make an exchange, if he sees fit to do so?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think it is necessary to give him that discretion. I know that he will not use that discretion unless the bill is passed.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Maryland yield for a question?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. Was it not stated at the time that the investigation was being made by the committee of the House, by those who represented the Treasury Department, that it had not been contemplated to construct on or use the site they now have secured for anything except a detention hospital and not for an immigration station and detention hospital combined?

Mr. LINTHICUM. That is what the Department of Commerce and Labor say, but why they say that I have never understood, because the bill specifically says that it is for an immigration station, and they have never consulted the local commissioner of immigration as to what it was to be used for. He evidently thought it was to be used for general purposes of immigration.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not remember just when this building and site were authorized. Can the gentleman inform me? It is not stated in the report.

Mr. BURNETT. It was authorized in the last public-building bill, which I think passed two years ago.

Mr. MANN. We provided for the purchase of a site and the construction of a building at a total cost of how much?

Mr. LINTHICUM. There was no distinction made in respect to how much should be expended for a site and how much should be expended for a building. The total amount authorized was $130,000 and the total amount appropriated was $110,000.

Mr. MANN. The authorization for the site and the building was $130,000. I take it that when the committee examined into the matter and made a report to the House they endeavored to ascertain something in regard to what a site would cost and how much ought to be expended for a site and a building. It seems there was allotted for the purchase of the site $13,000. I take it that there must have been some consultation between the officers of the Department of Commerce and Labor, the Immigration Service, and the Supervising Architect's Office before they determined upon the amount of money that should be expended for the building. Of course the balance might be utilized for a site. It seems they went ahead and purchased a site for a trifle over $13,000. No one seems to be able to give us much information in regard to the purchase of that site. Why did they select a site where the committee now states is an insanitary location, and unfitted for the purpose, six or eight blocks away from the water's edge? I do not know whether the building ought to be on the water's edge, convenient to the attack of mosquitoes, or not; but certainly the Government has acquired no new information on that subject in the last two years. They knew as well two years ago whether the immigration station ought to be on the water's edge as they know now. Who was responsible for the selection of this site?

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, fixing practically the amount which could be expended for the purpose at $13,000, now proposes to increase that amount, if we make a direct purchase, to $35,000, and if we make an exchange, to an indefinite sum. We have no report from the department which has charge of the immigration service. It files this report and letter from the Secretary of the Treasury. Even that letter is unsatisfactory and gives no information.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. LINTHICUM. In answer to the question, if the gentleman has no objection, I will be very glad to read a letter sent from the committee to the Department of Commerce and Labor, and the reply thereto.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection, and would be very glad to have the gentleman read them.

Mr. LINTHICUM. They are as follows:

MAY 24, 1912.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
Department of Commerce and Labor.

SIR: House bill 20501, authorizing "the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to exchange the site heretofore acquired for a United States immigration station at Baltimore, Md., for another suitable site, and to pay, if necessary, out of the appropriation heretofore made for said immigration station an additional sum in accomplishing such exchange; or to sell the present site, the money procured from such sale to revert to the appropriation made for said immigration station, and to purchase another site in lieu thereof," was favorably reported to the House by this committee under Report No. 694, herewith inclosed.

Upon the action of Congressman LINTHICUM, H. R. 20501 was placed on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Congressman MANN, of Illinois, objected to the bill being placed on the Unanimous Consent Calendar for certain reasons, as will appear by reference to the inclosed clippings from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the proceedings of the House on Monday, May 20, 1912.

At Congressman LINTHICUM'S earnest solicitation the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has the honor to request that it be advised if the Department of Commerce and Labor has any objection to the proposed exchange of site, it being understood, of course, that the matter of the erection of the building eventually to be placed on the same shall be under the supervision of the Treasury Department.

It appears from Congressman LINTHICUM'S representations to this committee that Congressman MANN said that if the proposed transfer was agreeable to the Department of Commerce and Labor, and a letter to that effect from the department could be shown, he would offer no objection to H. R. 20501 being placed on the Unanimous Consent Calendar; and Congressman MANN further suggests that he would like to be advised as to why the change is advisable.

Very respectfully, yours, ——— ———.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
Washington, May 24, 1912.

Hon. JOHN L. BURNETT,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 24th instant, and in reply beg to say that on the 29th of April this department, in writing to the Secretary of the Treasury upon the same subject, stated that the department is inclined to believe that if sufficient funds are provided by Congress for the purpose it would be advisable to have the immigration station at Baltimore, Md., located upon the water front, so situated that aliens can be landed there directly from boats or barges, and also to facilitate the inspection of new arrivals, as well as the housing of those detained. In other words, it would probably be best for all parties concerned if the immigration station at Baltimore could be arranged upon plans somewhat similar to those of the station now under construction at Philadelphia.

I regard it as quite clear that a location on the water front is in every respect preferable for the reasons just indicated and, further, for the reason that the station on the water front is calculated to secure decided advantages by way of ventilation and other similar conditions.

Respectfully, yours,

CHARLES NAGEL, Secretary.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit a further suggestion, I would state that there is in the files a letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. The bill was originally referred to both departments, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor wrote that owing to the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury had exclusive jurisdiction of the construction of such buildings he would make no further report, but refer this to the Secretary of the Treasury. That letter is also in the files, and that is why no further answer, I suppose, was made to our committee before we took action. This letter to Mr. LINTHICUM has come since.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that the committee in the usual course of its business wrote this letter to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and also to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor side-stepped an answer to the letter by stating that the building site was under the control of the Treasury Department. That is because they did not want to make any reply upon it. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] has obtained a reply from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor; and what does that Secretary say? He says he is inclined to think it would be better to have this immigration station on the water's edge, because the ventilation would be better there.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Would it not?

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas wants to know. He comes from an inland town a long way from the sea. I never heard there was any trouble about ventilation in a Kansas cyclone.

Mr. CAMPBELL. We have no more cyclones in Kansas than you have on the lake front in Chicago.

Mr. MANN. There is no trouble about ventilation on the lake front in Chicago, but they are back from the lake front——

Mr BURNETT. Is it not a little warm there now?

Mr. MANN. But they say they want to put an immigration station on the water front, because ventilation is there, which, if carried to its logical conclusion, would wipe Baltimore off the face of the map and put the buildings along down the Chesapeake Bay, and I think even the gentleman does not propose to do that. They do not say they favor this bill even. Here is a department that has under its control the Immigration Service, and the Treasury Department has purchased a site for an immigration station. Somebody wants to spend more money for an immigration-station site, and urges Congress to increase the authorization, asks the department to recommend it, and they say they are inclined to think it would be a good thing, because the ventilation is better there. They do not say it ought to be done.

Mr. LOBECK. Can not they remove the fertilizer plant?

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman—by the way, yesterday in the House we had up for consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill. My colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] offered on that bill 8, 9, or 10 amendments to increase the sanitary conditions, the health conditions, and so forth, over at Ellis Island, where the immigrants really come in. Every one of those propositions was defeated by the Democratic side of the House, by a solid Democratic vote, as against a solid Republican vote in favor of them, and the statement was made that in all likelihood a new immigration bill might be passed, restricting the number of immigrants coming into the country, and the facilities already in existence would be sufficient to furnish all that was necessary. Now, if the Burnett bill or the Dillingham bill passes, does the gentleman think there is any occasion for enlarging the facilities for immigrants in these ports?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will say in reply to that that the immigrants who come to this country at Baltimore can pass the test of the Burnett bill.

Mr. MANN. Well, it may be they need somebody over there who can, but I should question whether a large share of the present inhabitants over there could pass the test if they had to submit to it to get in.

Mr. BURNETT. If the gentleman will permit——

Mr. MANN. Where do these immigrants come from whom the gentleman says can pass the test at Baltimore?

Mr. LINTHICUM. A large number of them come from Norway and Sweden and a great many from Poland and Bohemia, a very few from the south ports or from Syria.

Mr. MANN. Well, not very many come from Syria at any port. What lines bring in immigrants to Baltimore?

Mr. LINTHICUM. The North German Lloyd Line.

Mr. MANN. Is that the only one?

Mr. LINTHICUM. That is the only one.

Mr. MANN. How many come in the course of a year?

Mr. LINTHICUM. During the year 1911, 23,581. Up to June of this last year, 20,561. They are coming in larger number this year and we expect it to be larger than in the last few years, but not as large as some years back.

Mr. MANN. I am not opposed myself to these people becoming citizens of the United States both by immigration and naturalization, and I believe they ought to have ample facilities for their care and protection whenever they come in, and I think that at Baltimore, even with the number that come in there, there ought to be a sufficient immigration service and a sufficient immigration station. I would like to ask the gentleman, with a site that is already acquired only costing $13,000, why it should be necessary to have a new site that costs $35,000?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I would say to the gentleman from Illinois that the site which was acquired was located right in a locality where there are some fertilizer factories and other manufacturing industries. It is absolutely in the wrong section in which a hospital or a detention station should be located. The site that we desire to get is along the water and has large wharfage facilities and extends down to where boats would come up and land the passengers right there. I hope we will not have to pay $35,000, I do not believe we will, but we do not want to have too small a limit so that we can not acquire what is desirable.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think a site for a hospital along a wharf is an ideal site for a hospital? I think I should prefer to inhale the odors of a good fertilizer plant rather than be on the water front along the wharf if I were ill.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The site for the detention station would not be on the water——

Mr. MANN. I said water front.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The pier would extend out in the water and the detention station and hospital would be some distance from the water. It will reach near Fort McHenry, which no one can ever say was insanitary, and it is desired to make it a public reservation, and, in fact, to-day it is used practically as a public reservation. It certainly would conform with the gentleman's idea for ventilation. Now, the ventilation referred to in the letter is not the ventilation which the gentleman referred to in a general way, but they want to get away from the odors of this guano factory and these other factories alongside of it.

Mr. MANN. There is too much ventilation at that site, not too little.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Too much of that kind; yes.

Mr. MANN. Now, this bill provides—if I may have the attention of the gentleman—not only for the purchase, but also for the exchange of the additional site, and then provides an additional sum in accomplishing the exchange; but there seems to be no limit on the amount of money that might be used as addition if you make the exchange. Of course, this is only the authorization. How much money does the gentleman think it would be in order to appropriate under the rules of the House, if this bill passes, for this purpose?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I should think, in order to carry out the buildings and to have the proper site in the city of Baltimore, we ought to have somewhere in addition about $150,000 all told.

Mr. MANN. What I want to know is, if the gentleman was offering an appropriation on the sundry civil bill, say, how much would he want in addition to the sum now authorized? There is no limit in here on the amount of money if you make an exchange. I suppose there is some proposition. Let us know what it is. I mean the proposition for the exchange. Is there one under consideration?

Mr. TOWNER. Does not the gentleman think the language here near the close of the section, as follows—

The total cost of such new site so acquired not to exceed the sum of $35,000—will apply also to the prior clause of the bill as well as to the latter?

Mr. MANN. I should doubt it. It would certainly not include the present site and exchange?

Mr. TOWNER. No; but the provision of the law is that the proceeds from the present site shall be converted into a fund. So that would amount to the same thing.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The provision in this bill is that the Secretary is authorized to exchange the site heretofore acquired for another suitable site and to pay, if necessary, an additional sum in accomplishing such exchange.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes. But does not the gentleman think——

Mr. MANN. How much additional could be paid?

Mr. TOWNER. I think that the provision here at the close—that the total cost of such site so acquired shall not exceed $35,000—limits it.

Mr. MANN. On the gentleman's theory you can purchase a new site that would cost $48,000—$35,000 additional in cash and the exchange of the existing site, that cost $13,000.

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, no; that would not be possible, because it says the total is to be $35,000, not $48,000.

Mr. MANN. The total cost; but there is no provision in here that the value of the present site shall be taken into consideration; certainly no provision that the original cost shall be taken into consideration. I only wanted to know from the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM], so that he would be on record on the subject, how much he intended to add in appropriation on this bill if it passed.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I am not asking for any additional appropriation. This comes from the appropriation that has already been made.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; that is true enough. That is in case of the exchange. Undoubtedly the appropriation already made, just as in the Boston case, comes out of the appropriation already made. But as soon as it is taken out, then we will be asked to reimburse the appropriation. That is what I wanted to get at. How much is it going to take? Have you not some proposition over there for an exchange?

Mr. LINTHICUM. We have not any proposition for an exchange, and I do not believe we are going to get any. I believe the site they have acquired will have to be sold to somebody for a factory site. I do not believe anybody who has property there is going to exchange for this. I take it that the word "total" meant all money that could be expended for a site whether now or previously—the total amount to be used not to exceed $35,000 under all conditions.

Mr. MANN. The explanation on that point is quite satisfactory.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] such time as he may desire.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] whether the present immigration station is not located on the water's edge?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] that Baltimore has not any immigrant station at the present time. She is using the Baltimore & Ohio Pier, and the immigrant station is a private dwelling.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then you receive your immigrants at the railroad pier?

Mr. LINTHICUM. On the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Pier.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. On the water's edge?

Mr. LINTHICUM. On the water's edge, of course.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And you transfer them to the detention house?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. About how far away?

Mr. LINTHICUM. About three blocks away.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So that those people that for some reason or other are carried over to the detention house are carried three blocks?

Mr. LINTHICUM. At least 3 blocks.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is correct. Now, then, the site that was purchased is 7 or 8 blocks away from the water's edge?

Mr. LINTHICUM. It is about 6 blocks away from the water's edge and about 8 blocks from the present pier that is being used.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is at least twice as far away from the water's edge as the present detention house.

Mr. LINTHICUM. It is at least three times as far away.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And it appears that a mistake was made in your purchase and that it would be desirable now to move back to the water's edge? That is the situation, is it not?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Keefe, Commissioner General of Immigration, is desirous of having all these places at the water's edge. But aside from the fact that this is not at the water's edge, this place is unsuitable for the purpose.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I agree with that opinion of the Commissioner General of Immigration. The fact is that the site which the gentleman wishes to purchase is 7 or 8 blocks away from the water's edge, or twice as far as the detention house?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will address myself, Mr. Chairman, to that phase of the question since the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has raised it. The immigration station at Boston is at the water's edge. The detention house is also there. The old immigration station at Philadelphia was at the water's edge and the new station will be on the water's edge. It seems to be a wise thing to place these stations as near the landing stage as possible, and the reason for it is one that I am sure will appeal to the gentleman from Illinois. Sometimes the patients are detained on account of sickness. It may be that they are detained on account of a malignant or contagious disease. It will be readily seen how unwise it is under such circumstances to take such patients from the landing stage and carry them through the built-up portions of a city, to be detained somewhere in the center of population.

That is one of the objections to the present detention house in Philadelphia, which, by virtue of the erection of a new detention house, will soon happily be abandoned. At present those immigrants who are detained are carried through the streets of a very thickly settled portion of the city to a detention house and are there held until discharged for one reason or another. If it should happen that smallpox should break out after the immigrants have arrived at any landing stage, whether it be at Boston or New York or Philadelphia or Baltimore, it could very easily start an epidemic where the people are so thickly settled as they are at New York, for instance, or at Boston or at Philadelphia.

Hence it is a wise provision, as written into this bill, that the new site shall be somewhere near the water's edge. It is a matter of health precaution. I think the communities through which these immigrants go to the detention stations are entitled to this measure of protection against possible epidemics.

Now, in our city of Philadelphia we have struggled against that condition for a long time, and we are freeing ourselves from it now; and I trust that Baltimore may be given the same facilities to relieve the residential portions of the city of any possible invasion of disease due to the conditions stated.

I realize, as does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the peculiar position in which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] is placed in his advocacy of this bill. As the father of a measure which is proposed to restrict immigration, he is put in the very anomalous position here of providing additional facilities for immigrants. The author of the Burnett bill has given great and deep thought to this subject of immigration, and has always conducted himself in a manner befitting the chairman of an important committee and a Member of this House upon this question. [Applause.] Just how he will explain the advocacy of a measure which means more and better facilities for immigrants while at the same time he presents to the country a measure which says we shall limit the number of future immigrants I do not know. But, being a member both of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, he does his duty as he sees it, no matter which committee he represents. I hope that the measure now pending, advocated by one who can be so broad and generous in his advocacy of measures as is the gentleman from Alabama, will pass this House. [Applause.]

[Mr. BURNETT addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have never shared the feeling which many gentlemen seem to have against the character of the immigration from along the Mediterranean Sea, or, as is usually described, from the south of Europe. My town is largely made up of people of foreign birth, or the children of people of foreign birth. I have never noticed any evidence that there was any injury to the country from those people. I believe that the educational system of the country and the movement of people from one place to another in the country have proven of sufficient force and effect to largely change in the children of these people what we imagine at least to be the characteristics of many of them. I have no doubt that the children of the people from the south of Europe will prove of as great value to the citizenship of this country as have the children of the immigrants from Ireland.

I can easily remember when there was just as much feeling in the country, probably more, against a large share of the immigrants coming from Ireland, and they came in great numbers for a while. He would be a very foolish man who did not understand now that the Irish blood infused into the American citizenship has proven itself of enormous value in every direction. I imagine the same thing will be true of the south of Europe.

I agree with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] and others that there might properly be some steps taken to restrict the number of immigrants, not because their character is objectionable as to any particular individual, but because the immigration is probably a trifle larger than can be profitably absorbed in the labor market and possibly a trifle larger than can be absorbed in the intellectual life of the country. I never have seen any reason myself for believing that the educational test, reading and writing, as proposed by the Senate bill, or reading as proposed by the existing proposition reported by the House committee, is the proper test.

I am led to say these few words on the subject because of the remarks which the gentleman has just made with reference to the facilities on board ship. It seems to me that if we would make it less profitable to the steamship companies to get hold of immigrants in order to bring them over here we would correct the condition of which we complain, and we would do it in the proper manner. Require more space on board ship for each immigrant. Make it more comfortable for the immigrants who come and less profitable for the steamship companies who scour Europe urging them to come—or perhaps I ought not to say that, for that is forbidden, but advertising——

Mr. BURNETT. While it is forbidden, it is beyond our reach, and we can not control it as a matter of fact.

Mr. MANN. That is true, but advertising the facilities and cheapness with which they may come to this land of promise, and thereby encouraging immigration. There is no reason why we should run the country in order to make profits for the steamship lines, and if we would pass a law enlarging the space per immigrant on board the steamships, so that it will not be so profitable for the company to bring immigrants instead of freight, or even empty space, we would restrict immigration without adopting a test which has never been the proper test of judging of the worth of a man, namely, an educational test. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to bring the mind of the committee back to the bill that is before it. Originally the department recommended that an appropriation should be made for an immigration station at the port of Baltimore, and an appropriation was recommended of $250,000. Action was taken upon it by the House and it authorized an appropriation of only $130,000. Subsequent to this authorization there were quite a number of bills introduced into the House and in the Senate in respect to the matter. Unfortunately, some of those referred to the desired appropriation as an appropriation for an immigration station which would have included a detention hospital, and some of them were only appropriations or authorizations for a detention hospital. That was the condition of affairs until the present time.

There is no immigration station which is owned by the Government in Baltimore. Neither is there any detention hospital there owned by the Government. The Government has the use, by mere sufferance, as I understand, of the facilities which are afforded for the landing of immigrants from the German-Lloyd steamers to the station or pier of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. That is the only immigrant station that the Government has. The detention hospital is in a dwelling house of a very unsatisfactory kind, which is located some three or four blocks away from the water's edge in a most inhospitable and unpleasing locality, and is in itself a most forbidding-looking building for that purpose. It is absolutely necessary, as it would seem, that Baltimore should have an immigration station, and, further, that it should have as a part of it a detention hospital. All agree that the immigration station and the detention hospital should be as intimately associated as possible. If they can be part of the same plant, they ought to be so arranged. It is contemplated that this immigration station and the hospital shall be so arranged. Under the impression that they were locating only a detention hospital, the Treasury authorities selected and purchased a site which is seven or eight blocks distant from the water front in immediate proximity to some manufactories of various kinds that are not only unsavory, but absolutely unhealthy, in a place that no detention hospital, and certainly no immigration station, should be located at all. It may be admitted that is a mistake, and not seeking to place the responsibility for that mistake we now have this condition. It is thought now that by the expenditure of not a very large sum of money, not to exceed $35,000, a very desirable site can be obtained for an immigration station, with the detention hospital combined, on the water front, so that it will be in direct contiguity to the grounds now known as Fort McHenry, which will give it one of the most desirable locations in the city. This can be secured for the Government at a total cost of not to exceed $35,000. That is the authorization proposed for that purpose. I think gentlemen certainly would be unreasonable to suppose that an expenditure of that amount for a site for an important place of this kind in a city like Baltimore, which ranks fourth, I believe, among the ports of entry of the United States, is unreasonable. The amount already authorized for the building of an immigration station is entirely inadequate to a city of Baltimore's importance.

I think it ought to be increased regardless of the passage of the immigration bill. I agree with what the chairman has so well said. It is not of importance whether we lose 1 or 5 or 10 or 15 per cent of our population by the passage of this bill in so far as it relates to our duty in this regard. It is important, as the gentleman from Illinois well said in his remarks, how we treat the immigrants after they come here, and certainly for a great port like Baltimore an adequate immigration station ought to be provided, and the simple question before this committee now is, Is $35,000 too large and an unreasonable amount to provide for the acquiring of such a site for such a station? I think it is not, and the committee was unanimous in its belief it was reasonable for that purpose, and I hope that the bill will pass. [Applause.]

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to speak, but I believe that nothing better can be done than to take care of and prepare proper facilities for the immigrants coming to our shores. If it will prove of benefit and convenient to exchange this piece of property or sell it and get a better location for the accommodation in Baltimore for those who come to our country making a home here, we should authorize it. Therefore I shall favor this measure.

I have been listening here this afternoon to the discussion about immigration. I may not know as much about immigration as some of my friends, Members of Congress on this floor, but I have seen the time when I was a boy in Chicago, when improper care was given to the immigrants who came there. There was not the attention given to their comfort, nor were they given the necessary consideration. They had to care for themselves as best they could in the old Illinois & Michigan Central Station at the foot of Lake Street. As a boy I became interested and often went to assist the immigrants and act as interpreter for them. I knew something of the Scandinavian and German languages, and my efforts were amply rewarded by the deep gratitude of these people who did not understand our language and did not know which way to turn in this world so new to them.

My people were seven weeks coming across the water in an old sailing vessel; that was in 1849. They were three months on their journey from Sweden to their new home in western Illinois. They landed in New York and then went by boat up to Albany on the Hudson River, thence by Erie Canal to Buffalo and around by the Great Lakes to Chicago. When they arrived in Chicago, part of the family were stricken with that dread scourge, Asiatic cholera, and on the shores of Lake Michigan the mother of the family was laid away. On the advice of the authorities they were requested to move on. They did so, by the Illinois Canal to Peru and thence by team to Henry County, Ill. More than one-half of the company died of this dread plague, including the father. But they were a courageous people, and over what seemed insurmountable difficulties they survived and made their permanent homes in a New England settlement, and there these pioneer immigrants alongside the sturdy sons and daughters of New England turned the soil to the sun, working with such simple implements as they had at hand. With untiring efforts they have made that country blossom as a rose. They did not understand our language, very few of them could read any of the English language, most of them could not, but I do know that they could write their names as well as the average American born who lived in that country. As a boy growing up in a country store and as a man I have seen as many "Xs" and as many "marks" for signatures made by those of American birth as made by those of foreign birth. I do not blame the American because he had not had the advantage of schools, but these pioneers of American as well as foreign birth having faith in the same God soon understood each other and became friends. These people of foreign birth settled that country and made it a veritable garden.

When in 1861 the call came from the immortal Lincoln for volunteers no men were braver than these Scandinavians, and it is said that every fifth Scandinavian of Illinois old enough to bear arms went to the front and offered his life to preserve the Union. [Applause.] I saw some of them come back from Andersonville, and others I saw brought back from the fields where they had contracted disease, some of them to die, and some of them, as soon as their strength permitted, to return to their places in the ranks, and I know of some who laid down their lives on the field of battle, to sleep forever there. These Scandinavians marched shoulder to shoulder with the gallant Irishman, the sturdy German, and the men of American birth, and shared with them all the privations that come to a patriot and a soldier. When the war was over they returned to their homes and took up their former vocations on the farm, in the shop, in the store, and in every line of life's activity. They have done their full share to develop this beautiful country.

These pioneers were interested in churches and in education. Schoolhouses were built and churches erected. There is scarcely a school for higher education in the States of the North but has many graduates of Scandinavian parentage, and this is also true of some schools in the South. The same can be said of the German and the Irish races. So I say all honor to these worthy people.

I heard the word "Syrian" mentioned here to-day. When I was comptroller of my city—Omaha—a little boy, a manly little fellow, came on Saturdays to my desk to receipt the pay warrant for his father's work. The father commenced work as a street sweeper, and after he had accumulated and saved money he bought a team and continued to work for the city. I saw this little fellow sign his name in a beautiful hand script. The boy attended our schools. I said to him one day, "Are you going to help your father some day?" He replied, "No, sir." I said, "What are you going to do?" "I am going to be a bookkeeper."

That boy had the right spirit. And you can go through the schools of Iowa, Illinois, Nebraska, everywhere in this country, and you will see the children of these foreigners from Germany, Ireland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Bohemia, Poland, Austria, France, Russia, and Italy—Jew, Gentile, or Greek—attending our schools. These children are studious and stand well in the grades and are becoming imbued with American ideas. They desire to become good citizens. If we will support a proper system and keep up a high standard of education in this country and uphold the teachings of the fathers of this Nation and teach American patriotism, there will be no trouble about these people who come to our shores, for they will make a good citizenship.

These people of foreign birth and their descendants have made good in every line—agriculture, railroading, education, and banking. You may go to Chicago, as my friends Mr. MANN and Mr. MADDEN can tell you, and see a bank controlled by Scandinavians, one of the largest banks of that city, which now has some $30,000,000 of deposits. This bank was established by an old Swedish sailor who scarcely knew how to read or write, but he had a good, clear head and was possessed of common sense; he acquired some lake vessels and helped to develop his adopted country. He gave his son an education—sent him through Harvard. The son, through sterling and rugged spirit inherited from a hardy, industrious parentage, made a success of banking. The same story in varied terms can be told of the German, the Irish, and other Europeans who have come to the United States. Everywhere they have made their names known—in the lawmaking bodies of our country, in the cities, counties, and legislatures of our States. In a word, they have made good. On this floor to-day I see my friends REILLY of Connecticut and MURRAY of Massachusetts, of Irish lineage, and I recall the names of ESCH and BARTHOLDT, of German ancestry, and the Scandinavian HAUGEN, LENROOT, and LINDBERGH. There are many Members of Congress of English, French, and Scottish ancestry, who are held in the highest esteem by their constituents.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And if we had imposed an educational test many years ago they would not have been here now?

Mr. LOBECK. No; and there were many from other States, American born, who came West to settle Iowa and Nebraska who could not write, but who have given to the West a high class of citizenship.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And all these constitute some of our best citizenship to-day?

Mr. LOBECK. Yes; and I would like to state, Mr. Chairman, that among these of foreign birth are some of the greatest inventors of the age. It was an Ericsson that constructed the Monitor, and his ideas have revolutionized the navies of the world. It was a poor Swedish boy on a farm in Illinois who conceived the idea and made the first model of the modern corn planter. In every workshop, in every manufacturing plant, you will see the ideas of these sons of foreign birth in daily use.

I have mentioned the Civil War, and I might with equal propriety mention the Spanish-American War. On both sides in the Civil War were found those of foreign birth who battled for what they believed was right. In the Spanish-American War, from every portion of this land, these young men of foreign ancestry fought side by side with the sons of American lineage.

I wish to say to my friend from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] that if in his bill proper provisions are made to exclude the criminal classes from our country, I will be with him; but no educational test should bar the honest man and his family from coming to this country. The scalawags, the men who leave their country for their country's good, are men who can read and write. They are the men that you are welcoming if education is the test instead of honest fellows who can not read and write. Some of us would be in a serious fix if we should go to Germany, Russia, or other parts of Europe if we could not use their languages, and still we might make very good citizens. I believe in extending a welcoming hand to all honest men or women who come to our shores with their families to make America their home. Foreigners who came to this country when I was a lad were many of them very poor and it did not seem as if they would make good. They have helped to build our railroads, construct our canals, and they have given their services to public works, and as soon as they could save enough to secure a humble home, either in the city or in the country, they did so.

I believe that the same will be true of the great majority of people that are coming to our shores now. They are looking for the future and seeking a home for themselves and their children. As they have made good in the past they will do better in the future. I have no fears for this country so long as we maintain the high standard of our schools and instruct our children in the wisdom and teachings of the forefathers. Under such conditions we will lead the world in civilization and make good in the sight of God and man. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK]. I knew something of the character of the immigrants to which he refers. I have met them on the prairies of Kansas; have seen them as Irishmen, Scotchmen, Germans, Swedes, wearing every badge of a new immigrant. They settled upon the raw prairie with few implements. I have watched their growth into citizenship and their development of the prairie of Kansas into one of the best agricultural States in the Union. Men who settled upon those prairies 25, 30, or 40 years ago, with no knowledge of our language, of our institutions, or of our laws, and but little of our people, are to-day among the very best citizens we have in the country. They have raised families, educated them, given them every opportunity, and have made of them the very best citizens we have. I might say incidentally that they own the original quarter section upon which they settled, and the quarter section that adjoins it on the north, and on the south, and on the east, and they are ready to buy the quarter section that lies on the west. They did not mortgage the farm as soon as they could get a loan for the purpose of gratifying some fancy as a needed improvement, but put up with the limited means they had, used the simple implements they started with, and in many instances, as I have said, to-day they not only possess the original quarter section upon which they settled, but additional valuable lands.

I have also seen immigration of a different character, of the character referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], come into the community. The part of the country in which I live has a very large foreign population, coming from Italy and from Austria and from southern France—from southern Europe, if you please. I know men, whom I can call by name, who settled there 20 to 25 years ago without any knowledge whatever of our language. I do not know whether they could read or write in their own language, but probably they could.

Mr. BURNETT. I will ask the gentleman whether they were from northern or southern Italy? The reason I ask is that there is a vast difference. In northern Italy there are only 8 per cent of adults who can not read and write, and in southern Italy there are over 50 per cent.

Mr. CAMPBELL. A man whom I call to mind at this time came from the neighborhood of Milan. But there are hundreds of them. I remember when they did not have a member of their family who could speak a word of English. In the course of four or five weeks they would come in and bring a little girl or boy 5 or 6 years of age to interpret for them. To-day those men and their families are among the substantial, good citizens of that community. They engage in the work of coal mining. They had no other occupation. There was nothing else for them to do. They brought nothing with them. They went into the mines and learned to dig coal, and as coal miners they provided themselves such homes as they could, paid such rent as they were able to pay, sent their children to school, and kept them in school; and many of those men to-day not only own the houses they live in, but own three or four more besides. I know some of them who own brick buildings on the best business street in our city, from which they are receiving a rental running from $75 to $100 and $125 a month.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. Is it the rule that they are anxious to have their children go to school and receive a good education? Is not that the rule?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes. There are no citizens in our section of the country who are more anxious to have their children acquire an education than those peoples, or who are more anxious and ambitious for the welfare of their children than they.

So far as their ability to read and write when they came here goes, but little was known. I do not know whether they could read and write or not. But I do know that they were ambitious and honest and industrious; and I know that they have made good citizens, and that they have raised children that have grown up in our community, who have made and are making good citizens.

But I have in mind another character of people who come to this country not, if you please, as immigrants; people who come here not to be assimilated into our citizenship, not to assume the responsibilities of citizens of the United States, but who come here for the sole purpose of getting the benefit of our high wages; people who work just enough below our standard of wages to displace the immigrant who came here with a view of becoming a citizen and assuming the responsibilities of our citizenship and raising their children here and having them grow into our community as a part of it.

I have in mind especially the people who come here from old Mexico and work upon our railroads. The lines of nearly all the railroads in our section of the country are covered with Mexicans—single men, with just enough women among them in the camp to do the cooking. They do not come here with a view of becoming citizens. They do not come here with any view but of getting the highest wage they can get, sending the money back home, and going back there themselves as soon as they lose their jobs.

I have in my hand a paper that gives in detail and at considerable length the condition of the labor market in the United States at given periods. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] spoke of the immigrants who had come to his city. I will state that at a given time there were a great many men who had families to support in the great city of Chicago, Ill., who would have been glad to have employment at a living wage, who would have been glad to work upon the tracks of the railroads centering in Chicago, with a view of supporting their families, who were deprived of work by the Mexicans who had been brought across the line into the United States, and who work right up to the city limits of Chicago on the railroads centering there, driving every man who would live as a respectable American citizen off the railroads by reason of the low wage they were willing to take, all on account of the low standard of living on which they were willing to live, and on which they do live while working upon our railroads. It is that class of immigrants, whether they can read and write or whether they can not, that I would bar from the United States; men who do not come here with a view of becoming citizens, but with a view of supplying our labor market and taking from the immigrant who comes here to become an American citizen, or the man who has been here long enough to have acquired citizenship, or who was born here, the employment which of right should be his. I say I would deprive these men who come here solely for the purpose of getting the advantage of our high wages of the right to come here to take the place of our citizens who are here and willing to do that work at a living wage.

Mr. LOBECK. Has the gentleman a remedy to propose?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I wish I could suggest one offhand. But I will say to the gentleman from Nebraska that I have given the matter a good deal of study. I would bar every immigrant who does not come to our country with the intention of staying here and becoming a good, law-abiding citizen. I wish it were possible to draft a law to bar the man who merely comes to the United States to get the advantage of our wages for a few years and then return to his own country, whether it be Mexico, Sicily, Italy, France, Spain, or any other country. I have taken the Dillingham bill and the Burnett bill and tried to work out an amendment that was feasible and that could be enforced at Ellis Island or at any of our ports or on the line between the United States and Old Mexico. I see the greatest possible difficulty in framing such a law. I think, however, that the enforcement of the law that we now have would be a great protection to us. There are many of the Mexicans and Greeks who, I fully believe, come to the United States to-day to work upon the railroads and work throughout the country who come here under contract. [Applause.] There is no sort of question about it, in my opinion. The railroads practically admit that they bring them here by saying that they can not get trackmen in any other way. They do that while men are without employment in Chicago and Kansas City and every other large city in the country, willing to work at a wage upon which they can live and live decently. I am opposed to the Greek and the Mexican being permitted to come in through any sort of violation of the law or by any pretext, driving our own people back off the railroads into the city, where there is no work, and to thus practically deprive them of an opportunity to make a living.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. We just passed in the sundry civil appropriation bill an item for two men at $1,000 each to furnish information of violations of this contract law. I submit that some of these people who are out of employment might possibly be able to acquire a handsome fee by furnishing information which the gentleman says is patent and acknowledged by the railroads of the violation of this law.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, I do not say that the railroads acknowledge that they make contracts and bring laborers into the United States.

Mr. MANN. Then I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They practically admit it. There is no railroad coming into Chicago from the Southwest that does not employ many of its trackmen from Old Mexico. How does it happen that these Mexicans, without any knowledge whatever of our language, who can not read our newspapers, come into the United States in large numbers and find employment readily upon the tracks of our railroads? Is it not because somebody representing the railroads has been down in Old Mexico picking up these men and telling them that they can find employment on the railroads of the United States——

Mr. MANN. There is no law against that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And who has made arrangements with them to come at an agreed price, which is against the law?

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. BURNETT. I want to suggest to the gentleman that last year over 18,000 were admitted from old Mexico, and of that number 7,000 over 14 years of age were unable to read their own language. This illiteracy test is to reach that very class of people.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that there are as many Mexicans in the United States earning money, which the gentleman says ought to be earned by citizens of the United States, as there are citizens of the United States in Mexico earning money, which the Mexicans think ought to be earned by citizens of Mexico? Is not the shoe on the other foot?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, I do not know. The men who go to Mexico are skilled laborers.

Mr. MANN. But he takes the place of somebody, whether he is a skilled laborer or a merchant or something else.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I beg the gentleman's pardon, he does not take the place of anybody. He supplies a vacant place, a place that has not been filled and would not be filled if the American skilled laborer did not go there and fill it. And let me say to the gentleman that the skilled laborer makes a place down below him for many unskilled laborers.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that there is considerable prejudice in Mexico against the United States because of the large number of citizens of the United States in Mexico making money, and that the Diaz government was probably overthrown in Mexico for the reason, principally, that the people there had come to believe that President Diaz was too friendly with the American citizens in Mexico making money which the Mexican people thought ought to be made by Mexican citizens.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The character of the American who has gone to Mexico differs very widely from the character of the Mexican who comes to the United States. The American who has gone to old Mexico has gone there as a skilled laborer or has gone there with his means and invested it in constructing shops and factories and building railroads and employing Mexican labor.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman objects because the cheap Mexican labor comes to the United States. The Mexicans would not object because cheap labor went from the United States to Mexico. They object because the higher-priced people go to Mexico and take the money, and as an American citizen probably makes more money in Mexico than a Mexican citizen does in the United States, and as there are more American citizens in Mexico making money than there are Mexican citizens in the United States making money it looks to me as though we were not in a position to throw many stones at Mexico.

Mr. LOBECK. I think the Mexican plantation advertising schemes have brought a whole lot of money into Mexico that has been of benefit to the Mexicans and of not much benefit to the Americans who invested it.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that much of that money went into Mexico? I have been under the impression that most of it went into New York and some other cities like that. Some of it went into Chicago.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The chief complaint that I found in old Mexico was not against the employment of skilled American labor there, nor against the investment of American capital there. Progressive Mexicans welcome both, but what the Mexicans feared was that we were Americanizing Mexico, and that was the thing to which they were particularly objecting. They have a different civilization from ours, a different standard of living. They have an entirely different viewpoint from ours, and they are not particularly anxious to exchange their viewpoint for ours. The Mexican laborer there lives as the Mexican lives here. They are huddled up in small places in which an American laborer would not stay. They live in a fashion in which the American laborer could not live, and under which we would not have him live. These Mexicans come to the United States and they live out of a tin can, occupying space on the right of way of the railroad that gives them employment, and they send practically all of their wages back to their own country. They propose to follow that money back there just as soon as they have acquired enough to justify them in returning to their own country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman referring to Mexicans now?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am referring solely to Mexicans and Greeks or others who do not come to our country with a view of becoming citizens.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Many of them do.

Mr. LOBECK. Oh, yes; many of them do.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not so many of them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has been in evidence before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization that very many of the Greeks, and particularly the Italians, and especially the Jews, leave their money in this country. Of course they have attachments abroad which will linger for a generation or two. They help the old folks by sending the money back; but the tendency is dying out. The disposition is rather to acquire land here and to become citizens of this country.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have already noted that the Europeans that come here come here very largely with a view of becoming citizens. They invest their money here and they acquire homes as soon as they can get them. They invest in business property, and in rental property and establish themselves here and become a part of our communities.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And when they do that they become good citizens?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; good citizens.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So long as the gentleman has opened up the question of railroad labor, that which he says comes from Mexico, is it all unskilled labor?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; although a man must have some knowledge of laying railroad ties and putting down tracks and taking out an old rail and putting in a new one and becoming a good trackman on a railroad.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it such labor as the American boy aspires to?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; but there are many men, as I have ascertained, who can be found in cities of the United States and in the country who would be perfectly willing—indeed, who would be anxious—to do the work these men do, and who, if they were properly distributed over the United States, could do this work that the Mexicans come here and do, if they could get sufficient pay for the work.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then it is a question of distribution after all?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is a question of getting the labor where it is required and paying him enough for doing it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not also a question as to whether you can get the educated American boy to undertake the kind of work to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is true not only of the American boy but of the boy who is born of European parentage in the United States. They do not aspire to become trackmen on railroads or to dig ditches; but many men may be found in every section of the country to do such work at fair pay.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The American boy does not want to do it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. He does not want to do it, and he fits himself for a different kind of work; but that boy's father, or his uncle, probably, would like employment on the railroad at a time when he is out of work at something else, if he could get good wages that would enable him to support his family.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Commensurate with the service rendered?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; that would enable him to provide his family with a suitable living.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would the illiteracy test applied against immigrants remedy that situation?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not think it would.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I would like to ask if it is not a fact that there are Americanized workmen who work digging ditches in cities, especially in building work, where they are organized, and which work pays two or three times as much as railroad companies are paying for their trackmen? I have in mind a condition in the city of Chicago, where the building laborers get from $3 to $4 a day working at foundation work. They are very creditable citizens. People do not have to rely on foreign labor to secure work of that kind done. I am of opinion that if the railroad companies would make it an inducement for men to do the work these men would find work that is more desirable, probably, than the work they do in the ditches and in the foundation work of buildings.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have no doubt that the railroads could find plenty of laborers who have come here to become citizens, who are raising their families here, to do the work on their tracks if they were willing to pay them enough money to keep their families.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is it not a fact that one of the reasons they are making an inducement to these foreign immigrants to come here is for the purpose of keeping that sort of labor down?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, I do not think there is any question about that.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Down to a lower standard than the American laborer would be willing to work for?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has the gentleman any direct information that they do induce these people to come; that they undertake to violate the law respecting contract labor?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I believe they do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is there any evidence of that?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; I have no evidence; that is, no such evidence as I could submit to a court and ask conviction upon. I have not gone into it far enough for that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Suppose we were to take up the padrone system—that is to say, the manipulation by one man of a number of men in the interest of a railroad or any other large employer of labor—does the gentleman not think it is possible under the existing law to reach an offense of that kind and that it could and would be reached?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, I have no doubt it could be done. I want to say this——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] called attention a moment ago to a paragraph in the sundry civil bill which provided a reward of $1,000 each to two men who gave information in regard to the employment of alien contract labor.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now, if the employer brings in five or a dozen men, or not to say 100 men, is it possible, with the labor organizations thoroughly established all over this country, on guard against contract labor, that some one would not tell the story of these 5 or 100 men coming in under contract, especially when there is a reward of $1,000 for the man who supplies the information?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not contending and I do not think anyone contends that any industry that employs labor in the United States now goes to Europe or Mexico or any other country and brings men into the United States under contract, but they induce the men to come here in some way and in that way violate the law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is still vague as to his information, but he admits that there is existing law that forbids the very transaction of which he speaks.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Of course there is existing law that forbids that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And there is an inducement to anyone to report a violation of that law—to the extent of $1,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am protesting against this violation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is a question of administration after all and not a question of existing law.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly; I have said all the time it was in violation of the law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then any man belonging to a labor union, any man belonging to a patriotic society, who has any information that John Smith was bringing in 5 or 100 men improperly, could report it to the officials at Washington or to any Federal officers anywhere, and put himself in the position of obtaining a reward of $1,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have this kind of a case, if the gentleman will permit me to proceed in my own time: A railroad company had three gangs of men who were getting $1.50 a day. Within 10 days every one of those men except the foreman was laid off and Mexicans took their places at a less wage. Now, was that an accident, or were the men induced to come into the country and do the work for less pay than it was being done for?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That was reprehensible, to say the least; but were those Mexicans brought in in violation of the law?

Mr. CAMPBELL. How did they know they could find this employment from this particular railroad?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am sure I do not know.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They reported for duty to the foreman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But apparently the gentleman does not know that they got into this country improperly in violation of the immigration law.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think they were.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then they should have been deported. If they are brought in in violation of the contract-labor law, they should have been apprehended and sent back, and there would have been a reward for their detection.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, it is sometimes difficult to enforce the law. If the gentleman had ever lived in a State where it was against the law to sell liquor, he would know something about the difficulty of enforcing the law when two men want to violate it—both the man who sells and the one who buys; and in this case, where the man who employs the laborer wants to violate the law and the laborer who is employed wants to violate the law, it becomes a very difficult question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But that the gentleman knows is due to an appetite or tendency that no law can restrain.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How can you stop a man from drinking by the enacting of a law?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That has no bearing on the discussion.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How can you prevent a man from committing murder by providing in an act that there shall be no murder committed?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It illustrates how difficult it is to enforce the law where two men conspire together for its violation as is done when the employer wants to bring a man into the United States in violation of law and the man wants to come into our country for the purpose of getting our high wages, whether by contract or otherwise.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman, as a Member of the lawmaking body of this Nation, has performed his duty by enacting a law which reaches the offense of which he complains, and it is a matter of administration whether the law is violated or not.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It may not be out of place sometimes to call attention in a lawmaking body to the fact that the law exists, and that it is being violated and should be enforced.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is no harm in that.

Mr. JACKSON. My colleague has been along the Mexican border, I am sure, a number of times. He does know that there are men there, or labor agencies, that make it their sole business to encourage immigration to this country and to procure the placing of these laborers in large numbers with the railroads, does he not?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes. There is no question but that it is done.

Mr. JACKSON. And if it was not for this sort of work these Mexicans would not leave their homes and come over here to fill these contracts?

Mr. CAMPBELL. As I stated a moment ago, it is inconceivable that a Mexican, totally ignorant of our language, who can not read or write in English, would come here at once and take a place a thousand miles in the interior on our railroads and supplant an American citizen.

Mr. JACKSON. This condition of affairs amounts to a violation of the law, although it would not be a violation of the letter of the law.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is true.

Mr. JACKSON. So that the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] are wholly irrelevant and not addressed at all to what my colleague is talking about?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am talking about the general effect of this immigration into the United States upon the condition of our laborers, and express my belief that these people are here in violation of our laws.

Mr. JACKSON. As I understood my colleague to say, he thought the illiteracy test would not exclude these Mexicans?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not say it would not, but I did say, in my judgment, it would not cure the whole evil.

Mr. JACKSON. You do think, though, do you not, that it would exclude a large percentage?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have no doubt of that. I am not prepared to say I am ready to establish a literary test for immigration into the United States. Some of the men who are a menace to this country to-day are men who have come here from other countries, not only with the knowledge of our language, but with the knowledge of many languages, who can not only read and write in their own language, but in our language and other languages, but who do not come here for the purpose of making this a better country, but, as has been suggested, for bettering the country that they have been forced to leave. They become a danger here.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Almost any educated man can pass a civil-service examination, can he not?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And that does not always detect whether a man is morally fit, whether he is a good man. It is no test of his moral worth, is it?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No. And I am not especially enamored of the idea of a literary test as a test of a man's fitness to do departmental work.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the way I understood the gentleman.

Mr. JACKSON. The class of immigrants of which you speak would have to be excluded under other laws, and we have laws that are calculated to take care of them. It is hardly a legitimate argument against this other class that we do not seem to be able to exclude them in any other way.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would hesitate long before I would say to a man with a family coming to the United States with a view of becoming a citizen here——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In good faith.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In good faith, working at such employment as he could find, sending his children to our schools and rearing them as citizens—I say I would hesitate a long time before I would say, "You can not come here unless you can read and write."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is a human test rather than a moral one.

Mr. BURNETT. May I ask the gentleman right there a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. BURNETT. Is it not a fact that the large majority the educational test would keep out do not come with their families, do not come for the purpose of remaining, do not wish to be naturalized, do not become citizens, but acquire all the money they can, and when a wave of adversity comes over this country are the first to leave it? Would not an illiteracy test keep out just that class of people?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have no doubt there is a large number in the class to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. BURNETT. In the language of the commission, would not that be most feasible? You spoke of a rule awhile ago that can not be worked and can not be worked as to whether they become citizens or not. How do you know what is in a man's mind? As you admitted, that is an impracticable test and can not be worked out. Now, what other practical way of keeping out the class I referred to a little while ago could be adopted except the illiteracy test?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, I confess that I have been unable to arrive at a solution of the problem. It is a grave one, and it is more serious to-day than it has ever been in this country heretofore. The land that has been available for settlement has been practically settled. The immigrant who comes here now comes to supply the labor market among our wage earners. He no longer comes here to develop our agricultural resources, but he comes here to take a place alongside of those who are employed in a given industry, that pays a good wage, and he too often accepts a lower wage than the standard of living here requires. After he has been here long enough to acquire our customs and our habits and to become acquainted with his fellow laborers he demands the wage that is customary and that enables a laborer to live according to the American standard.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does not the gentleman think that if a standard minimum wage scale could be established it would have a good effect on the immigrants? Does not the gentleman think if the corporations were required to pay these immigrants the same scale of wages as American workmen receive that would be a good thing?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, it would be a very difficult thing to frame a wage scale for every industry in the United States; quite as difficult as it is to draft an immigration law that would permit the man of good intentions to come into the United States and keep out the man who would make an undesirable citizen.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. The question was asked here a few moments ago as to whether the American laborer would work at common labor, such as working on the streets, sewers, and other public improvements. It has been my experience and observation that whenever the waterworks company of my city wants to get men for labor there has been no trouble to get men, either of foreign ancestry or of American ancestry, to work, and it is the same way with respect to work on our streets and the same way with respect to work on our public improvements. There are always plenty of men seeking for the job, and they are not foreigners, but they are of American ancestry.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, there is no difficulty whatever in getting American citizens, whether foreign born or native born in the United States, if you will pay a sufficient wage for their labor.

Mr. LOBECK. A decent wage. They are anxious to get the work, and they are Americans.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is no question about that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is that true with respect to labor on the farms of the country?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, we are having some little difficulty in getting enough laborers on the farms. But wages are going up, and that is bringing more help.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But the farmers have been complaining that they could not get sufficient farm labor.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, yes; they have been complaining about that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it true of the mines?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; I believe the supply of laborers for the mines is quite equal to the demand.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is not so reported from some parts of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, there may be an occasional district in which that is true; but my information is that the supply of laborers is kept quite equal to the demand in the mines throughout the country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How about domestic labor? The gentleman, of course, speaks from the interior country viewpoint; but there is a great deal of complaint about the scarcity of labor for domestic service.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is a great deal more difficult, I will say to the gentleman, to get domestic help in the interior than it is in Philadelphia, for example.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is not the tendency of the American woman not to work in the kitchen for wages?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is, to work for her neighbor or for a wage?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is true.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A moment ago the gentleman was asked, I think by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. JACKSON], about those aliens who came into this country and left the country without leaving much of their earnings here. I would like to know whether it is not true that lots of Americans, native-born citizens of the United States, who live well and are finely educated, do not avoid the payment of taxes and escape other responsibilities that a man who owns real estate or who engages in business is bound to assume?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, yes. But that is wide of the discussion.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, I think it is a fair question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There are men of means who put themselves into the class of bad citizens by refusing to pay taxes and covering up the property that they have on which they should pay taxes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And some of them "toil not, neither do they spin."

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is true; and "yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now, may I ask the gentleman one more question? He has given careful attention to the study of the Mexican situation, and has referred to these natives of Mexico who come over the borders of the United States to work upon the railroads, doing manual labor which a great many American citizens do not care to do. Is it not true that many Mexicans come over the border for other purposes than to secure labor in the United States?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I assume so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not true that along the border of Mexico now and in the State of Texas there are Mexicans who are there for an entirely different purpose?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think that is true.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know how we may apprehend these Mexicans and interfere with the practices in which they are engaged? I mention this to show the difficulty of administering the immigration laws.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am familiar with the difficulty of administering the law, and I say I wish it were possible to frame a law that would be more easy of administration, that would exclude from the United States the undesirable and unnecessary people of whom I complain. I wish it were possible to exclude those and to admit every man who wants to come here and who would make a good citizen. I repeat, I wish it were possible to frame a law that would permit every man who wants to come into the United States with a view of bettering his condition, with a view of rearing his family here and of becoming a citizen and having his home here, and bar every immigrant who does not come here for that purpose.

I want to say, in conclusion, that no one need say, or can justly say, that many of the people who come here from southern Europe and would be barred by a literacy test come here and make good citizens. There is no sort of question about their fitness from every standpoint of industry and morality. Some are bad.

I recall when the United States called for volunteers a few years ago that I saw in the streets of my own town, where we have almost every nationality in Europe, Italians, Austrians, Frenchmen, and many nationalities walking down the street with a company that afterwards was merged into the Twentieth Kansas, to the music of the Union, under the Stars and Stripes, to give their lives for the country of their adoption. Some of them went to the Philippines with the Twentieth Kansas and died following our flag.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And no questions were asked as to whether they could read or write?

Mr. CAMPBELL. They made good fighters whether they could read or write; they understood orders, and they knew the purposes for which they enlisted. In civil life they pay their taxes and support our institutions. It is true they have their own customs through the first generation, but in the second generation they make just as good citizens as we find anywhere. I am glad to welcome those who come here and make such citizens, and I would welcome any plan that could be formulated that would exclude those who do not come here for that purpose.

Mr. CURLEY. The gentleman said that he saw these men marching to the music of the Union. I suppose he means the national anthem?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know who the gentleman's forebears were, but when did they come to this country?

Mr. CAMPBELL. In 1866; they made the first stop in Iroquois County, Ill. My mother could not speak English, and I could not at that time.

Mr. CANNON. From what country did they come?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Nova Scotia.

Mr. CANNON. And the gentleman has been for some years a Member of Congress?

Mr. CAMPBELL. For nine years.

Mr. SLOAN. And hopes to be for two years more. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope so.

Mr. CANNON. How old was the gentleman when he came to this country?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Four years of age.

Mr. CANNON. Then, of course, he could not read and write at that time. I do not know just when a man ceases to be a foreigner and becomes an American citizen, but a good many of us, if we go back a generation or a generation and a half, would not be here now if the educational test had been applied to those who are responsible for our being. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is true.

Mr. CANNON. Where a man of the Caucasian race comes to this country, whether he can read and write or not, if he comes to make his home here and live in the sweat of his face, labor for what he gets, and has his children educated in the public schools, after all is said and done, he is of a class of immigration that is not undesirable, I take it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think so. On the contrary, where a man has the courage, spurred on by ambition, to leave home and fatherland, old associations and friends and relatives, and go out into a new country, knowing nobody, unacquainted with the language, unacquainted with the conditions, going there to take his chances and become a citizen, he shows he has in him the elements of which good citizens are made.

Mr. CANNON. Let us take the people who come to the country to blackmail and prey upon their brethren, notably from the south of Europe. As I understand it, generally they are somewhat intelligent and can read and write and have the capacity to send these blackmailing letters and to kill people. Is there anything in any proposed legislation that would keep one of those people out, unless it could be demonstrated that he is a criminal?

Mr. CAMPBELL. We would have to prove, in the first place, that he is a criminal.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is already provided against in the immigration act of February 20, 1907.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is true; but it must be shown that he is that kind of a man.

Mr. CANNON. And it is somewhat difficult, either as to a native or to a foreign-born citizen in this country, to convict a man or enforce laws against him without proof. Under our system of government every man is entitled to a hearing and a trial, and must be convicted only upon proof. In fact, I think that none of us would be very safe, so far as the moral law is concerned, and sometimes so far as the law that is merely prohibitory is concerned, if we did not have the protection afforded us by being able to demand that we be confronted with proof.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not object, but I would like to get along with the business of the House. I ask unanimous consent that general debate upon this bill shall conclude in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to know if the gentleman from Illinois thinks there has been sufficient time consumed in a discussion of this bill so that the large number of Members who are here will understand it properly?

Mr. MANN. It might be desirable to have a longer discussion from many points of view. However, owing to the fact that the House is pressed with business, I think it would be well to close debate upon this bill.

Mr. BURNETT. And there are several others, I will state, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that debate close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A question put by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to the gentleman from Kansas is a vital one. He asked about the writers of black-hand letters. They are most undesirable citizens?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, yes; whether they be foreign or native born.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would a test as to reading and writing keep out a man who could write a black-hand letter?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Hardly, and a vicious black-hand letter could be written quite as well by a native-born American citizen as by some one who has come from a foreign country.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I noted with a good deal of interest the gentleman's description of those foreigners who joined the gallant Twentieth Kansas, noted in our military history, and the gentleman's description of their marching to the music of the Union under the national colors. I noted also that the gentleman in answer to questions by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] gave a personal turn to the matter and spoke of another interesting band of immigrants coming from Nova Scotia to the prairies of Illinois. I would like to ask if this last group of immigrants, in whom we are all interested, did not come marching to the music of that other very interesting tune, ever welcome, The Campbells Are Coming? [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, Mr. Chairman, the bagpipes were not playing very much just at that time. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] brought out that phase of the discussion; and I recall that it was in the little town of Onarga, in Iroquois County, in his district, that my family made their first stopping place in the United States.

Mr. MANN. That is the most intellectual place in the State.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It was but a short time before the 4th day of July, and I remember riding in the band wagon on the Fourth—and I will say this, that I was in the wagon before the band began to play, and my father was driving the wagon.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], in a speech I once heard him deliver, described the trip from North Carolina which he took when he was a 3-year-old, and I desire to compliment the gentleman from Kansas upon the fact that he has now improved upon it by describing one which he took when he was 4 years old.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted to bring this rambling discourse to a conclusion, I desire to say that the United States is greatly indebted to foreign countries. Our blood is a mixture of the blood of England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, France, Germany, Austria, Italy, Norway, Sweden—of almost every country in the world. Immigrants have come here from all of these countries, and their blood has mingled here and has made the average American citizen. I do not hesitate to say that he is the highest type of citizenship to be found anywhere in the world. I would bar the vicious and the criminal, whether they can read and write or not. I would admit the ambitious immigrant who comes here to better his condition and become a good citizen. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized to exchange the site heretofore acquired for a United States immigration station at Baltimore, Md., for another suitable site, and to pay, if necessary, out of the appropriation heretofore made for said immigration station an additional sum in accomplishing such exchange; or to sell the present site, the money from such sale to revert to the appropriation made for said immigration station, and to purchase another site in lieu thereof, the total cost of such new site so acquired not to exceed the sum of $35,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the words "Commerce and Labor" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the Treasury."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendment to the House, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20501, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended to read as follows: "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange the site heretofore acquired for a United States immigration station at Baltimore, Md., for another suitable site, and to pay, if necessary, out of the appropriation heretofore made for said immigration station an additional sum in accomplishing such exchange; or to sell the present site, the money procured from such sale to revert to the appropriation made for said immigration station, and to purchase another site in lieu thereof."

On motion of Mr. LINTHICUM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I understand there is a conference report that is necessary to be adopted in the morning, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations desires to finish the sundry civil bill to-morrow if possible. I therefore ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 10.30 to-morrow morning.

Mr. MANN. I understand that conference report is on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On the District appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] No objection is heard, and it is so ordered.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN PROPERTY IN ALVA, OKLA.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to call up the bill H. R. 1248.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1248) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey a certain frame building.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman this is a very simple bill and that he ask that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] No objection is heard.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to convey to Company I, Oklahoma National Guard, the frame building formerly used for the United States land office, and located on lot No. 1, in block No. 40, in the city of Alva, in Woods County, State of Oklahoma, said building to be removed from its present location and used as an armory for said militia company.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill was to remove the building without expense to the Government, and I am not sure the bill expresses that it is to be without expense to the Government, and therefore I ask unanimous consent to add at the end of the section the words "such removal to be without expense to the Government of the United States."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 9, page 1, the words "such removal to be without expense to the Government of the United States."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

OLD MARINE HOSPITAL, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to call up the bill S. 6252.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 6252) to relinquish the title of the United States to certain property in the city and county of San Francisco, Cal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill S. 6252, with Mr. CULLOP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to relinquish the title of the United States to certain property in the city and county of San Francisco, Cal.," approved August 14, 1876, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:

Strike out the words "to be used by the city and county of San Francisco solely for the purpose of a sailors' home: Provided, That if the same shall at any time be used for any other than the purpose aforesaid, or if said home shall not be opened within one year from the passage of this act, in each such case all right and title hereby relinquished shall revert back to and again vest in the United States," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "to be used by the city and county of San Francisco for such charitable purposes as its governing body shall determine," so that the act will read as follows:

"That all the right and title of the United States to the following described property is hereby relinquished to the city and county of San Francisco, the same being the two 50 vara lots on which the old marine hospital building now stands, fronting 275 feet on the north side of Harrison Street, between Spear and Main Streets, with a uniform depth of 137 feet and 6 inches, as laid down on the official map of the said city, to be used by the city and county of San Francisco for such charitable purposes as its governing body shall determine.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] such time as I may have to enable him to explain the bill.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the property which it is proposed to turn over to the city and county of San Francisco for such charitable purposes as the Secretary of the Treasury may permit is known as the old Marine Hospital. The building is quite an old one, having been constructed in the early fifties, as I have been informed. Since 1876 it has been in the custody of the city and county of San Francisco, and has been used as a sailors' home. Congress passed an act in that year authorizing the transfer, which act also provided that if at any time it should be used for any other purpose than a sailors' home the property should revert back and again vest in the Government of the United States. There are accommodations in this building for 300 persons, and in recent years not more than 30 or 35 beds have been used. It is proposed by the charitable organizations of San Francisco, if this bill be enacted into law, to use the building as a lodging place for homeless men. I may say that only a few weeks ago this building was used for the refugees who were brought by the Government transports from Mexico—American citizens who were brought to San Francisco by reason of the disturbed conditions in our sister Republic. The amendments which the committee has made to the Senate bill, in my judgment, entirely safeguard the rights of the Government. There is a provision that Congress reserves the right to amend, alter, or repeal the act at any time. There is also an amendment to the effect that the city shall use the property for such charitable purposes as the Secretary of the Treasury may permit, so that the Secretary himself will be enabled to make the regulations for admission to this building under the direction of the charitable organizations of San Francisco.

The building suffered somewhat during the earthquake of 1906, but the citizens put it in repair. Though old, it is serviceable for the purpose intended. It has been used for charitable purposes since 1876. This continues it for charitable purposes, but rather enlarges the scope of the charity. It will not cost the Government a single dollar.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman from California has anticipated the inquiry I was going to make. In order to make it more clear, as I understand the situation, it is now used for charitable purposes to the extent of making it a sailors' home?

Mr. KAHN. That is true.

Mr. TOWNER. And they use only about 30 of the 300 beds that can be used? This authorizes the extension of its use, so that the building can be used to its capacity for charitable purposes by the charitable associations of San Francisco?

Mr. KAHN. That is the entire purpose of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. This building was under the Marine-Hospital Service formerly?

Mr. KAHN. That is true.

Mr. MANN. And turned over to the city of San Francisco on the theory that the city of San Francisco would maintain it as a sailors' hospital?

Mr. KAHN. A sailors' home.

Mr. MANN. And it would relieve the Government from taking care of the sailors in the marine hospital to a large extent?

Mr. KAHN. On the theory that it would take care of the sailors who were on shore for a limited period during the time between the date of their discharge from one vessel and the date they would sign new shipping articles and go on some other vessel. In other words, it was intended to provide a home for sailors while they were in port.

Mr. MANN. Do we now maintain a marine hospital in San Francisco?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. So that the Government, having given this building to the city of San Francisco on the theory that it would relieve the Government to a large extent of maintaining sailors in a Government hospital, the city has managed it so that the sailors did not go to this hospital. They go to the Government hospital, and therefore San Francisco says: "As we have complied with our implied contract to take care of the sailors, you ought to turn it over to us to do something else with it."

Mr. KAHN. I think the gentleman is mistaken about it.

Mr. MANN. Is not that absolutely the fact?

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. The building was never turned over to the city for the purposes of a hospital. It was turned over to be used as a sailors' home. The gentleman will recognize the fact that in nearly all seaports there are a good many so-called sailors' boarding houses. In some instances sailors have been very badly handled in those houses. I think some years ago legislation was passed by Congress to prevent the bad treatment of sailors. It was shown that sometimes the boarding-house keepers would get them full of liquor and sign them up without the sailors having a full knowledge of what they were doing. It was to prevent the sailor from falling into the clutches of that kind of individuals that the building was turned over for the purposes of a sailors' home, so that when the sailor got his discharge he had a place to go to where he would be assured fair and honest treatment.

Mr. MANN. Has the number of sailors in San Francisco decreased since 1876?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; the maritime conditions are entirely different there.

Mr. MANN. There are not so many sailors there now?

Mr. KAHN. Not so many.

Mr. MANN. They can find only 30 sailors to be taken care of?

Mr. KAHN. There are only 30 sailors occupying this building.

Mr. MANN. How many are there in the Government hospital being taken care of?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know. But the gentleman will realize the fact that there are many sailors sent to the Government hospital from various branches of the Government service as well as those who are employed in the merchant marine, and these ordinarily would not have occasion to go to any home. They probably have their own homes. Many of the sailors who sail from San Francisco have their regular domiciles. Many of them are married men.

Mr. MANN. And live up on the hill in the palaces, I presume?

Mr. KAHN. No; they live down near the water front, most of them. I know there are a great many married men among them and they go to their own homes when they return from a cruise; but they are entitled by law to go to the marine hospital for treatment, and those are the men who accept the treatment at the marine hospital. The moment they get discharged as cured they go to their own homes again, but those who have no homes find lodgment in this building.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, under the existing law the home could be used only as a sailors' home, and the result is that they have there some 300 beds in the building that are susceptible and capable of being used, and yet there are only 30 or 35 of them that are being used. All that this bill does is merely to enlarge the use of the home, so that it may be used for the other persons specified, who can occupy some of these vacant beds. That is the whole effect of the change. Then the bill is better safeguarded than the original law, it seems to me, in regard to the reversion of the title in case it should be used for any other purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill and the committee amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to relinquish the title of the United States to certain property in the city and county of San Francisco, Cal.," approved August 11, 1876, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:

Strike out the words "to be used by the city and county of San Francisco solely for the purpose of a sailors' home: Provided, That if the same shall at any time be used for any other than the purpose aforesaid, or if said home shall not be opened within one year from the passage of this act, in each such case all right and title hereby relinquished shall revert back to and again vest in the United States," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "to be used by the city and county of San Francisco for such charitable purposes as its governing body shall determine," so that the act will read as follows:

"That all the right and title of the United States to the following-described property is hereby relinquished to the city and county of San Francisco, the same being the two 50-vara lots on which the old marine-hospital building now stands, fronting 275 feet on the north side of Harrison Street, between Spear and Main Streets, with a uniform depth of 137 feet and 6 inches, as laid down on the official map of the said city, to be used by the city and county of San Francisco for such charitable purposes as its governing body shall determine.

Also the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 3, strike out everything after the words "United States" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "to be used by the city and county of San Francisco for such charitable purposes as may be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That if the same shall at any time be used for any other than such charitable purposes all right and title thereby relinquished shall revert back to and again vest in the United States."

Also insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. Congress reserves the right at any time to amend, alter, or repeal this act."

So that the act will read as follows:

"That all the right and title of the United States to the following-described property is hereby relinquished to the city and county of San Francisco, the same being the two 50-vara lots on which the old marine-hospital building now stands, fronting 275 feet on the north side of Harrison Street, between Spear and Main Streets, with a uniform depth of 137 feet and 6 inches, as laid down on the official map of said city, to be used by the city and county of San Francisco for such charitable purposes as may be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That if the same shall at any time be used for any other than such charitable purposes all right and title hereby relinquished shall revert back to and again vest in the United States.

"SEC. 2. That Congress reserves the right at any time to amend, alter, or repeal this act."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the committee amendment, on line 23, page 2, after the word "States," by changing the comma into a semicolon and adding as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. That Congress reserves the right at any time to amend, alter, or repeal this act.

I may say, Mr. Chairman, that that amendment was embodied in the report, but failed to be inserted in the bill. It is simply to correct the bill.

Mr. MANN. How does that correct the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. In the bill, the Chair desires to state to the gentleman, it is on page 3 as section 2.

Mr. KAHN. But there is no provision in the part amending the bill.

Mr. MANN. There should not be. That is section 2 of this bill, not of the original bill.

Mr. KAHN. It seems to me that in the section which amends the bill up to and including the word "follows" ought to have that amendment, adding the new section, because otherwise you would say "strike out" certain language and then insert this language which follows.

Mr. MANN. This is the amendment of the original act, which, as the gentleman will notice, is correctly printed in quotation marks in this bill. Section 2 of this bill is not put in the original act. That is covered by the enacting clause.

Mr. KAHN. I should imagine that it should be put in after the words "United States," on line 23. Does the gentleman think it is unnecessary?

Mr. MANN. I do not think it is proper.

Mr. KAHN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from California is withdrawn. The question now recurs on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill, with the amendment, to the House and recommend the adoption of the amendment and the passage of the bill as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CULLOP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill S. 6252, had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KAHN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONVEYANCE OF PORTION OF MARINE-HOSPITAL RESERVATION TO WILMINGTON, N. C.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I call up the bill S. 6603, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to the board of education of New Hanover County, N. C., portion of marine-hospital reservation not needed for marine-hospital purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to convey to the board of education of New Hanover County, State of North Carolina, the following-described tract of land, being a portion of the marine-hospital reservation in the city of Wilmington, which, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, is no longer needed for marine-hospital purposes, to wit, 34.1 acres of land, more or less, covering six whole and three one-half city blocks lying east of Tenth Street, in the city of Wilmington, county of New Hanover, and State of North Carolina, such conveyance to be upon condition that the land shall be used exclusively for industrial-school purposes, the title thereof to revert to the United States if at any time the land or any building erected thereon shall no longer be used for such purpose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I understand that if the House should now adjourn this would be the unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. This would be the unfinished business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 20, 1912, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER presented petitions of sundry citizens of Lankershim, Cal., and a resolution adopted by the Evangelical Lutheran Augustana Synod Convention at Chicago, Ill., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CATRON. I present a joint memorial adopted by the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, relative to redistricting the judicial circuits for the United States circuit courts of appeals. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 5. Introduced by Mr. R. L. Baca, April 25, 1912; read first and second times by title; ordered translated and printed and referred to committee on judiciary.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your petitioners, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of New Mexico, respectfully show that the interests of that portion of the United States west of the Mississippi River imperatively demand the creation by Congress of at least two additional judicial circuits, as will readily appear from a consideration of the facts hereinafter set forth, which present a comparative statement of the number of States and population in each of the circuits as they now exist:

The first judicial circuit includes the four States of Rhode Island, Massacusetts, New Hampshire, and Maine, with a population of 5,082,033.

The second judicial circuit includes the States of Vermont, Connecticut, and New York, with a population of 10,584,326.

The third judicial circuit includes Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware, with a population of 10,404,600.

The fourth judicial circuit includes Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina, with a population of 8,368,868.

The fifth judicial circuit includes Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas, with a population of 12,848,397.

The sixth judicial circuit includes Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky, and Tennessee, with a population of 12,051,988.

The seventh judicial circuit includes Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin, with a population of 10,673,327.

The eighth judicial circuit includes Nebraska, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, North Dakota, South Dakota, Utah, Wyoming, and New Mexico, with a population of 16,515,272.

The ninth judicial circuit includes California, Oregon, Nevada, Idaho, Montana, Washington, and Arizona, with a population of 5,181,180.

It will be seen from a comparison of these figures that the eighth circuit, in which our State of New Mexico is situated, has a population of more than three times as much as the first and ninth circuits, nearly twice as much as the fourth circuit, about 50 per cent more than the second, third, and seventh circuits, and about 33⅓ per cent more than the fifth and sixth circuits; and in addition to this the enormous area of the eighth circuit should be considered, extending as it does from the northern boundary of Minnesota to the southern boundary of New Mexico, a distance of approximately 1,500 miles. It should also be borne in mind that the principal railroad lines through that circuit run in east and west directions. As a consequence a large part of the people resident in that circuit, and especially the people of our own State, are subjected to great losses of both time and money in the transaction of business in the Circuit Court of Appeals, and the increasing amount of litigation in the Federal courts in that circuit must necessarily tend greatly to obstruct and delay the determination of causes. It must also be remembered that the population of most of the States in that circuit is increasing very rapidly, and the population of the whole circuit will probably long before the taking of the next decennial census exceed twenty millions.

We therefore respectfully pray that the 13 States included in that circuit be divided among three judicial circuits, and if such division be made each of those circuits, while much greater in area, would have approximately the same population as the first and ninth circuits, and we particularly ask that one of those circuits may be composed of the States of Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, and New Mexico, with a population, according to the census of 1910, of 4,474,524, but the actual population at the present time must greatly exceed that number.

Mr. PERKINS presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from the Riverside Chamber of Commerce; the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce; the Turlock Board of Trade; the Placerville Board of Trade; the Chico Business Mens' Association; of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co.; of the Hollister Chamber of Commerce; of the Merchants' Association of Fresno; of the Crocker Huffman Land & Water Co.; of Hon. John Barneson, of San Francisco; of the Oakland Chamber of Commerce; of the First National Bank of Merced; of the Pomona Board of Trade; of the Madera County Chamber of Commerce; of Hon. M. J. Brandenstein, of San Francsico; of the Alameda Chamber of Commerce; of the Lodi Merchants' Association; of the Livingston Chamber of Commerce; of the Stockton Chamber of Commerce; of the Owens Valley Chamber of Commerce; of the Auburn Chamber of Commerce; of the Redding Chamber of Commerce; of the Native Sons Golden West of Sutter Creek; of the Board of Trade of San Francisco; of the Berkeley Chamber of Commerce; of the Visalia Board of Trade; of the Bishop Chamber of Commerce; of the Paso Robles Chamber of Commerce; of the Orland Chamber of Commerce; of the Stanislaus Board of Trade, of Modesto; of the Merced Merchants' Association; of the Redwood Board of Trade; of the Sacramento Valley Development Association; of the Merced Security Savings Bank; of the Merced County Chamber of Commerce; of the Fresno County Chamber of Commerce; of the Richmond Board of Trade; of the Marysville Chamber of Commerce; of the Pasadena Board of Trade; of the Escondido Chamber of Commerce; of the San Mateo County Development Association; of Hon. A. I. Eisberg, of San Francisco; of the San Joaquin Valley Association; of Hon. James Rolph, jr., mayor of San Francisco; of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce; of the Grass Valley Chamber of Commerce; of the Berkeley Board of Trade; of Hon. Charles S. Fee, of San Francisco; of Hon. James Borsburgh, jr., of San Francisco; of the Sanger Chamber of Commerce; of the Coalinga Chamber of Commerce; of the Long Beach Chamber of Commerce; and of the Board of Trade of Sierra Madre, all in the State of California, favoring an appropriation of $270,000 for the improvement of the Yosemite National Park, which were referred to Committee on Appropriations.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 7181) extending the provisions of the Carey Act to Arizona; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 7182) for the relief of George L. Neff (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 7183) granting an increase of pension to Anna L. Phillips; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CATRON:

A bill (S. 7184) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Jose Padilla; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 7185) for the relief of the estate of Reymundo Trujillo, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 7186) granting a pension to Mariana L. de Miller; and

A bill (S. 7187) granting a pension to Martina M. de Sanchez; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REED:

A bill (S. 7192) authorizing the construction, maintenance, and operation of a dam across the Osage River, in Miller County, Mo.; to the Committee on Commerce.

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF AGRICULTURE (S. DOC. NO. 855).

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not certain whether under the unanimous-consent agreement I am justified in making the request, but I present the matter to the Presiding Officer. I wish to ask for the publication as a Senate document of the report to the International Institute of Agriculture on the conference held at Nashville, Tenn., April, 1912. If it is in order, I will ask that it be printed as a document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such matters have usually been regarded as a part of the morning business, and in the opinion of the Chair it is within the unanimous-consent agreement. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next at 10 o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 8 minutes a. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 24, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 20, 1912.

The House met at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite and eternal spirit, Father soul, never far from any of us, we would draw near to Thee with open minds and hearts, that we may receive of Thy spirit and be guided through the changing scenes of this new day, that at its close we may find ourselves in harmony with Thee, at peace with ourselves and all mankind. And Thine be the glory and the praise, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 17681) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas calls up the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and the gentleman from Kentucky reserves all points of order thereon.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, does that prejudice my rights upon any of the points of order?

The SPEAKER. Not at all. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read the statement of the conferees.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 899).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17681) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

On amendment No. 422: Restores the provision, proposed by the House, prohibiting the payment of membership dues or fees of officers or employees of the United States or the District of Columbia unless the same be specifically authorized by law.

On amendment No. 423: Makes a verbal correction in the text of the bill.

On amendment No. 424: Provides for the payment of fees collected by the District of Columbia into the Treasury of the United States in equal parts to the credit of the District and the United States.

On amendment No. 425: Makes permanent law of the provision authorizing the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds to transfer certain property discontinued or permanently out of use to other branches of the service of the United States or the District of Columbia.

The bill as finally agreed on appropriates $10,719,173, which sum is a reduction of $1,337,613.50 under the current law, $2,235,547.50 under the estimates submitted, $1,145,351.50 under the amount as passed by the Senate, and $418,315 more than as it was passed by the House.

A. S. BURLESON,
E. W. SAUNDERS,
E. L. TAYLOR, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, as shown by the statement, the bill as agreed upon by the conference committee carries the sum of $10,719,173. This amount is less than the current law by $1,337,613.50 and is under the estimates submitted by $2,235,547.50. It is under the amount carried in the bill as it was returned to us from the Senate by $1,145,351.50. The House conferees agreed to an increase of $418,315, being the aggregate of certain amendments proposed by the Senate. Of this sum the major portion is made up of certain authorized improvements of streets and extensions of sewers, items which were purposely left out of the bill as originally reported to the House under the policy of the House committee to leave certain of the street improvements and sewer extensions for the Senate to determine upon.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if no Member of the House desires to ask questions respecting any particular item in the statement, I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I would ask the gentleman whether in the conference report there are any schoolhouses provided for?

Mr. BURLESON. There is a provision authorizing plans for the M Street High School and the Central High School. An unexpended balance from a former appropriation made for the purchase of sites for those two schools is reappropriated in this bill for securing the services of architects to prepare plans for the two high-school buildings. There are no other appropriations for school buildings carried in the bill.

Mr. MANN. There are no appropriations for new schoolhouses?

Mr. BURLESON. No new school buildings other than the two high schools are provided for in the bill. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the controlling reason which moved the House conferees to insist upon this policy was that the President had directed attention to the fact that there had been a striking lack of economy in the construction of school buildings in the District, and we hope by next year that Dr. Davidson, recently appointed superintendent of schools, will be able to designate certain school buildings which it is desirable to enlarge to 12, 14, or 16 room buildings, and thereby correct mistakes which have been made and, in a measure, overcome this lack of economy which has characterized the management or the policy of the school board with reference to the erection of school buildings in the past.

Mr. MANN. That was the reason?

Mr. BURLESON. That was the reason which controlled us in resisting amendments for additional school buildings.

Mr. MANN. I believe that was not the same reason that was given when the bill was before the House for not including any items for schoolhouses in the bill. Either reason may be sufficient.

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. If he will examine the RECORD—the discussion on this bill when first reported—he will find that was the principal reason, among others, assigned why we did not provide for new school buildings in the bill this year.

Mr. MANN. I have a very distinct recollection of the debate upon that subject, which, however, does not make any difference. That was not the main reason that was assigned. The fact is that the bill does not carry any provision in the conference report for new school buildings.

Mr. BURLESON. That is true.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman in reference to amendment No. 219, concerning schools. The Senate inserted the following provision:

> No class in any year of any of the high schools at any time shall consist of less than 10 pupils.

The House conferees declined to agree to that in that shape, and insisted upon making it read:

> No class in any year of any of the high schools shall consist of less than 10 pupils for a period not longer than 15 days.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I will candidly state to the gentleman that that is an error. The additional language was added by the clerk who served the conference committee, and the word "not" ought to have been left out. There is an unfortunate handling of the negative there.

Mr. MANN. Then I take it that the intention of the conferees was to provide that no class should consist of less than 10 pupils for a period longer than 15 days.

Mr. BURLESON. That was the intention of the conference committee.

Mr. GARNER. I do not understand that.

Mr. MANN. The class should not consist of 10 pupils for a period longer than 15 days. In other words, suppose there is a class of 15 or 20 pupils and some of them do not appear on certain days so that the class happens to consist on those days of less than 10 pupils. This language, as it stands, literally construed, would require not teaching the class on that day, whereas the intention is to permit a class of 10 pupils or less for a period not longer than 15 days.

Mr. BURLESON. That is true; but I hope that an intelligent officer will construe this provision in accordance with the intended meaning of the conference committee.

Mr. MANN. I am having this go into the RECORD in order that the intelligent officer will know that it was a clerical error and as it reads does not carry out the intention of the conferees.

Mr. BURLESON. I am pleased that the gentleman has directed attention to it.

Mr. MANN. In reference to this provision concerning parks, it is proposed to add a couple of parks, one-third of the expense to be borne out of the District revenues, one-third out of the Federal Treasury, and one-third by levy and assessment upon the property benefited. Is not that something of a departure from the theory of the half-and-half principle, or does the gentleman contend, as I think he might, that that is along the same line as opening a street by condemnation proceedings with a special assessment to pay benefits?

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, in the matter of opening a street by condemnation, under the law no part of the expense is borne either by the District government or the General Government. The primary expense is all borne by the District government, but after the street is opened by condemnation proceedings, the cost thereof as benefits are all assessed against the abutting property, collected and restored to the treasury of the District. With reference to parks, heretofore the policy has been for the Federal Government to pay one-half, for the District government to pay one-half of the cost thereof, and for the abutting property owners to pay nothing toward its acquisition.

The conferees thought it was only fair that hereafter in the acquisition of a park the General Government should pay one-third, the District government should pay one-third, and that not less than one-third of all the expense should be assessed as benefits against owners of adjoining property, the scope or area of benefit conferred to be as large as the court may determine to be just and fair.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman also with reference to the appropriation for playgrounds, being amendment 190. There are three paragraphs in the bill relating to playgrounds originally, and one new one inserted by the Senate, which was agreed to. In the last one of the paragraphs, which is for salaries, the conferees have added the provision:

> The appropriations for which purpose shall hereafter be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

I take it that it only relates to the payment of salaries.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman is correct. It has become the settled policy of the House that appropriations made for that purpose, in so far as they are intended to pay salaries, shall be paid wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia. The Senate, following its usual practice, struck out the proviso in the House bill requiring this to be done, and when the item was reached the House insisted upon having it restored, and the Senate conferees agreed that inasmuch as this matter has been in controversy a number of times they would no longer have controversy about it, but that hereafter all salaries shall be paid by the District. Acting upon that suggestion, the item was restored and it was made permanent law.

Mr. MANN. I believe the gentleman has had his attention called to the fact that there is an error when they disagreed to the Senate amendment No. 191——

Mr. BURLESON. Involving the total.

Mr. MANN. That will be cured——

Mr. BURLESON. Will be cured by an existing statute.

Mr. MANN. And will not affect anything, because the specific appropriation will control.

Mr. BURLESON. It will be cured by general statute, which provides that an item specifically appropriated for shall control and not the aggregate or total for a number of items.

Mr. MANN. Now, the gentleman says it has become the settled policy to require these appropriations to be paid out of the revenues of the District. On page 42 the first item of playgrounds is for maintenance, repairs, including labor——

Mr. BURLESON. What number, please?

Mr. MANN. Amendment No. 183, for maintenance, repairs, including labor, supplies, and necessary incidental and contingent expenses, $4,000. The House had it $3,000 and the Senate made it $4,000, and that is the amount agreed to. That is not paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURLESON. No; we have not heretofore insisted that such expenditures should be paid out of the revenues of the District.

Mr. MANN. The next item, which is precisely the same kind of an item, for repairs and replacement of apparatus and other equipment on the playgrounds, and so forth, $3,000. Does the gentleman insist that shall be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; and I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. MANN. What is the distinction between the two items?

Mr. BURLESON. I will state candidly why the House conferees insisted this proviso should go in, and we announced our intention that it was ultimately our purpose, if the House sustained us in it, to make the District revenues bear the entire expense of playgrounds. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, the city of Washington is upon an entirely different footing in the matter of spaciousness from any other city in the United States, or I might say in the world. I read an article only last Sunday, in a magazine, stating that 54 per cent of the area of Washington is covered by her streets, alleys, and parks. In Paris it is only 26 per cent; in Vienna it is only 35 per cent; and in New York only about 27 per cent; and inasmuch as the House has heretofore taken the position that these playgrounds here are in a way unnecessary—in fact the House has taken the position that this playground movement, in so far as it is known here, is a fad, nothing but a fad, and in this city there is really no need for them—this proviso was insisted upon. It is the intention next year, if we can have the House agree with us, to make the city of Washington pay the expense of all the playgrounds the people desire and insist upon out of the District revenues.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I regard the playgrounds in a great city as a necessity, not as a fad.

Mr. BURLESON. In the city of Chicago or in a great congested city, like New York, I agree with the gentleman, but here conditions are not like those in these great cities; it is upon an entirely different footing, for the reasons I have just stated. There is no controverting the fact that in the city of Washington 54 per cent of the area of the city is given over to streets, alleys, and parks.

Mr. MANN. And public grounds; that will have to be included in the 54 per cent.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, we have no great industrial manufactures here; we have no congested sections in this city. The gentleman knows that the contest over these playground items has been made here on the floor time and time again, and I think the policy of the House is clearly understood.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And there are 7,000 acres of water included.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says there are 7,000 acres of water. I suppose they can play in that, too.

Mr. GARNER. On it—in the wintertime.

Mr. MANN. They can play in it in the summer time, if I had my way about it.

Mr. BURLESON. We make adequate provisions for aquatic sports, or bathing facilities, for those who desire to participate in such.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether it has been touched upon, but my friend has a liberal and generous heart and I know has responded, but it cost me $2 the other day to buy four tickets for the benefit of the playgrounds on a proposition to attend a baseball game.

I am quite willing to expend the money for the benefit of the playgrounds, and yet if the playgrounds are necessary I suggest that instead of being supported at the expense of individual Members of Congress, as is partly the proposition now, there is no reason why the Government should not contribute at large as they do in other respects in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion there are several reasons why this bill in its present shape should not pass. There are four or five provisions in the bill against which points of order, if made, would be sustained. If any one of them was sustained, it would relate to the whole bill, and the whole bill would then be compelled to go back to conference. That would cause a very considerable delay, so much delay that it is possible, if the Congress adjourns at the time when it is now anticipated it will adjourn, no bill might be passed at all. If that should happen, the entire District of Columbia would possibly be without any money at all until next December. That is one reason why, and a very important reason why, the bill should pass in the best possible shape.

There are, as I said, several reasons why it should not pass. But, taken upon the whole, perhaps the best that is within reach has been done, and the bill should go ahead and become law. But it is a singular coincidence that one piece of new legislation in this bill, a piece of legislation that was not in the House bill, a piece of legislation that was not in the Senate bill, and, consequently, legislation made by the committee of conference, pertaining to the longevity pay of a new class of schoolteachers which they have put upon an increased pay roll, should begin on the very day when the 180 half days which they have taught, and for which they have received pay, have expired and they are now entering upon the 180 full days which they will not teach and for which they will receive pay.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman allow a short statement? I will say that the House conferees were opposed to this particular item. I have resisted it for a number of years, because I think it unjust considering the compensation allowed other teachers. I do not think it is good legislation. But we acceded to it in the way of compromise in order that we might reach an agreement. In doing so we expressed a hope that we could have an understanding that next year the superintendent of schools will bring forward a comprehensive plan for the rearrangement of the salaries of school-teachers upon some sound, sensible basis. The plan upon which we are now operating, those who are best informed state, is without parallel in any city in the United States, that there is no other city which has such a plan, and I earnestly hope that the present able superintendent of schools will, before next year, draft a plan, acting in cooperation with the school board, and have it ready for presentation to Congress next year for its consideration, which will thoroughly revise and re-form the law for paying the teaching force in this District.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the net result of that will be a very large increase in the expense to the Government?

Mr. BURLESON. On the contrary, I am assured that the result will be a reduction of the present appropriations; that there will be a considerable portion of overhead supervision and unnecessary supervision eliminated. If it does result in an increase of appropriation, not much progress will be made with the superintendent's reorganization plan.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will remember this statement and that the superintendent of schools will remember his statement next year, but I think both gentlemen will forget it until they are reminded of it, and I hope some gentleman will remind them of it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] a question.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] has the floor.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas how the salaries of teachers in the District of Columbia compare with the salaries of teachers in cities of similar size?

Mr. BURLESON. The per capita cost in the District of Columbia is higher than in any other city in the United States, and, I have heard it stated on this floor, higher than in any city in the world.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Is it due to the salaries paid to the teachers, or is it due to the overhead expense?

Mr. BURLESON. A small part to the salaries paid to the teachers, but largely due to the grossly excessive supervision and duplication of supervision.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Are the salaries as a matter of fact larger than in other cities of this size?

Mr. BURLESON. They are.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman, in that connection, that in most parts of the country from which I have heard relative to the matter school-teachers are paid by the month, and they are paid only for the months they teach.

Here they are paid by the year, and they are paid for the months when they do not teach. They are paid for the months when they are out hunting positions in other places; they are paid as teachers when they are in business for themselves or working for somebody else.

But that has been gone over time and time again. But I say it comes as a singular coincidence that many of the teachers should be given participation in a longevity fund on the very day when their long vacation begins.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for a question that his statement suggests?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If these teachers are paid so much better here in Washington than in other cities in the United States, why should they be looking for positions elsewhere, as the gentleman suggests they do, while they are receiving pay?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The grass on the other side of the fence always looks a little better to the average cow. [Laughter and applause.] It is the roving disposition of some people that brings this about.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As a matter of fact, is it not true that many of the teachers who are employed in the schools of the city of Washington have been so employed continuously for many years and they are not of a roving disposition, as the gentleman suggests?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Some of them have been teaching in the District of Columbia until the school board admits that they are now an injury to the schools; that they are in the way; that they are incompetent and incapacitated to teach. Yet they are kept on the pay roll. They have no desire to roam; they can not.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That does not sustain the gentleman's suggestion that they are roaming about or seeking positions elsewhere.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Oh, I had no desire to say, and the gentleman has somewhat strained at what I did say, to arrive at the conclusion that the teachers as a whole were of a roving disposition. But some of them can find employment at other places that are more congenial, and, for some reason, do find employment elsewhere, while other teachers from elsewhere come here and find employment.

Now, there is another serious objection to this bill, and that is with respect to the two parks that are provided for. Points of order were made against the parks in the House bill, and those provisions were stricken out. The Senate has inserted two parks. They are to be paid for on an entirely new scheme, as suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON]—one-third from the revenues of the Federal Government, one-third from the revenues of the District of Columbia, and one-third from the assessment of benefits upon other property in the District of Columbia.

No zone is fixed; no limit is established as to what distance the assessment of benefits shall extend. That no zone is fixed I believe is beneficial. If a small zone were fixed, it would amount to confiscation of the property immediately surrounding the property to be taken as parks.

I believe that the entire District of Columbia should be assessed as benefits in the purchase of these parks.

Some years ago, probably 12 years ago, a million and a quarter of dollars was appropriated to acquire Rock Creek Park. In the bill appropriating this million and a quarter dollars was a provision that benefits should be assessed. The commission which made the purchase of the land which now constitutes Rock Creek Park took the assessments upon those various parcels of real estate and added them up. When the assessed values were added up the total did not nearly consume the million and a quarter dollars which had been appropriated. Then the commission, if I am properly informed, multiplied that amount by four. Even then the $1,200,000 was not yet exhausted. Then the commission had another meeting.

Mr. BURLESON. Does the gentleman mean they increased it by 400 per cent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They multiplied it by 4, according to my information, until at last they got 600 per cent beyond the assessed value of the property. That is what I was getting to. Every time they met and added up the former valuations they fixed higher values upon the different pieces of ground and still found money left, and they continued to meet and meet until finally they fixed the value of the land purchased at $1,200,000, the total appropriation. That was 12 years ago. No assessment of benefits has been made by that commission even up to this day.

Mr. BURLESON. If that is so, ought not a resolution or a law to be passed directing that assessment to be made?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes, that is true; but it is a deplorable thing that congressional directions to executive officers amount to nothing. They are ignored day after day and year after year. Now, as concerns these two parks to be acquired there is a provision for an assessment of benefits. I believe that benefits will be assessed, but when the benefits are assessed they will be assessed upon that portion of the District of Columbia least able to bear it; whereas concerning Rock Creek Park the assessment of benefits that should have been made, and which never have been made, related to property of the people who were best able to bear the assessment.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. BORLAND. Does not the gentleman think that when the principle is once established of charging the cost of these parks on the adjoining property owners that there will be more careful appraisal of the value of the land taken? Does not he believe that the property owners will have an interest in keeping down the price to a fair value of the land taken?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman had followed me closely he would have seen that I am in favor of that system; but when are you going to do it? Twelve years ago Congress passed a law that benefits should be assessed for land taken for Rock Creek Park.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Kentucky will allow me, the gentleman says 12 years ago.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. When was it?

Mr. MANN. It was before I came here, and I have been here longer than that.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, my recollection is that that legislation was under the leadership of Louis C. Payson, of Illinois, during the Fifty-first Congress. Mr. Payson had not been in Congress but a little time, and that was in 1890.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is possible, then, Mr. Speaker, that I have mistaken the year 1900 for that of 1890. If that is true, 22 years have elapsed instead of 12 since the commission should have assessed the benefits against that property, and to-day they have not done it. When they held their last meeting and adjourned they did not adjourn sine die, but simply adjourned. It has been within their power during 22 years to have held another meeting of that commission and assessed these benefits, and still they have not assessed them. There, I may say to the gentleman from Missouri, is a precedent of a law passed by Congress and absolutely ignored by the commission.

Mr. BORLAND. I will say to the gentleman that I think there must have been some fatal defect in creating that commission, and I think the gentleman will agree that the proposition as a general thing to assess the cost of parks or some part of them on the adjoining property owners will have a tendency to hold down the extortionate price for the land taken. If the Government is going to pay for all the land there will be a temptation to divide up the total amount appropriated among the landowners.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Why does not the gentleman from Texas in charge of the bill make some condition precedent to the opening of these parks, that this assessment shall be made and collections carried into the Treasury or in some other way before the park is opened? In that way you will enforce the views of Congress and not open the park until the condition has been complied with.

Mr. BORLAND. I think they are attacking a tangled problem.

Mr. BURLESON. That is the intention of the provision. As the item was inserted in the Senate it provided for no benefits to be assessed against owners of adjoining property. The House conferees propose that they should pay a certain proportion of the cost of acquiring the parks; and in order to avoid the very condition of which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] speaks—and I am not familiar with the facts of the case detailed by the gentleman—or a condition similar to the one described by him, we provide that hereafter whenever a park is acquired one-third shall be assessed as benefits against the adjoining property owners, making it a specific, direct, mandatory provision of law.

Mr. GARNER. Does this apply in the case of these two parks?

Mr. BURLESON. It does.

Mr. GARNER. Do I understand the gentleman's contention to be that before these parks can be opened they must assess one-third against the adjoining property owners?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; and we safeguard the interests of the Government by fixing what we consider two-thirds of the value thereof, what we think is fair and just, one-half of which is to be paid by the General Government and one-half by the District of Columbia; but if any jury, influenced by other considerations than a desire to find the true value of this property, should find for a higher value for this property, then we say that any excess over that amount fixed in this bill shall also be assessed as benefits against the adjoining property owners.

Mr. GARNER. May I suggest to the gentleman from Texas that if this same provision was in the Rock Creek Park——

Mr. BURLESON. But it was not.

Mr. GARNER. It is suggested to me by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] that this provision, not the identical one the gentleman has referred to, but a provision that it "shall be" was included in it; and if that was so, could they not ignore this one the same as they did that, unless you put in a provision that this park shall not be opened until the assessment has been made and collected?

Mr. BURLESON. We provide against that by fixing a limitation of the amount that can be paid by the District government and the Federal Government.

Mr. GARNER. Well, let us illustrate that out. Let us see what would happen. Suppose they go out there and buy the park, open it up, and pay upon it what has been appropriated, and then come back to Congress and say that they lack so much money and that Congress ought to pay it, and get some committee to bring in an appropriation, and we settle it up.

Mr. BURLESON. They can not do that under this provision, for we provide that any excess over the sum fixed in the bill shall be assessed against the adjoining property owners as benefits. There is no loophole left for them to come back and ask from the Government or District an additional sum.

Mr. GARNER. Of course, if the park could be purchased for the appropriation carried in the bill, then there would be no necessity of any assessment against any part of the property.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, the provision in the conference report is not quite as stated by the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], in charge of the conference report. The provision is that the Government shall pay for the land acquired, and there is enough money appropriated to pay for the land acquired. Then comes the provision that of the amount which is paid for the land, plus the expenses, at least one-third shall be assessed as benefits, and that the total amount which the Government is required to pay in excess of the benefits shall not exceed $21,334. But if the Government has condemned the land and paid for it you could only assess the benefits through a proceeding in court.

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And if the court should hold that the land assessed is not benefited to the extent of the assessment or benefits, we still have paid for the land and have it, and it probably is turned into a park at that time.

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois this is all in one proceeding, and the provision clearly directs that any excess over and above $21,334 shall be assessed by the jury against adjoining property owners as benefits.

Mr. MANN. That is true; but, as I endeavored to state before, the provision is:

> There is hereby appropriated an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of said condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages.

Then comes the further provision that one-third of that shall be assessed as benefits and paid into the Treasury. That is to reimburse the fund already paid out.

Mr. GARNER. In other words, to make it a concrete statement, it is this: This bill is carrying an appropriation of $21,334 to buy a park. The proposition is that they will return $7,000 of that to the Treasury to be paid by those benefited by the opening of the park, but after you have paid the $21,000, if it can be purchased for that amount, there is a very serious question, according to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], and from his statement and other statements it is entirely justified, as to whether the Treasury will ever get back this $7,000. My only suggestion is this, that it ought to be possible to so frame this item that the part to be contributed by those benefited would be paid into the Treasury before the park is opened.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] that the only absolutely necessary provision in making this assessment of the landowners is that the landowners have some sort of a day in court. We could not by any act of Congress provide that a landowner should pay a sum of money, $7,000 or any other sum, and this provision expressly says that when the jury is assessing the value of the property to be taken it shall divide the amount found to be due for damages as benefits, and not less than one-third of that shall be assessed on the adjoining property owner in that proceeding. That will have the effect of giving the property owner a chance for his day in court to determine, first, the value of the land taken, and, second, the proportionate amount of the benefits that ought to be assessed against his property; and if he has notice and appears in court, or does not appear in court, if he has adequate notice, and a due finding of the jury is made and confirmed by the court, that assessment stands against his property, or ought to, unless there is some other defect in the proceedings.

Mr. GARNER. Then there will be a legal assessment before this park is acquired by the Government?

Mr. BORLAND. Oh, I think so. That is the intention.

Mr. MANN. It is, so far as that makes the assessment of damages, but the assessment of benefits may not be disposed of for quite a while after the damages have been paid. However, this is a step in that direction.

Mr. BURLESON. In the right direction.

Mr. MANN. I am not so sure about that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, while we are upon the subject of condemnation proceedings, it may not be inappropriate for me to mention that when a condemnation jury is sent out it is not any longer sent out as one was to condemn the property for Rock Creek Park, where the commission was not limited either in the minimum or maximum, except in so far as the money went; but in the proceedings under which these parks are to be condemned there is a provision that it is to be condemned under the act by which an addition to the post-office property was condemned. In those condemnation proceedings, and in all park condemnation proceedings held since that time, there has been a provision that the proceedings should be held under the act condemning the addition to the post-office property. The court has now gone to the extreme of issuing written instructions to the condemnation jury, saying that they shall not, in arriving at a value, consider the assessed value of the land, and this has the same provision in it. It seems to me that when a jury goes out to condemn, it ought to have all the information it can get as to the value; and when these two parks are condemned they will be condemned under that post-office act, and there will be written instructions given by the court, saying to the jury who are to fix the value that they shall not hear the assessment values; that they shall not be brought into evidence. Between the Capitol and the Union Station, if I am correctly informed, we have now this condition: Concerning a piece of property, which is assessed at $1.50 per square foot, proof is now being heard, and has recently been heard, to fix the value of that particular piece at $25 a square foot; and what it is assessed at is, under the instructions of the court, forbidden to be put into evidence.

Now, as I have said, this piece of property is to be condemned under the same procedure. That is all wrong, it should be defeated, but I doubt if this is the time when it can be done.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is much legislation that the committee of conference has put into this bill. Some of it is good, and some of it is bad; but, whether it be good or bad, from recent events I hardly think it necessary for the point of order to be made here. The President of the United States has taken that legislative privilege unto himself. He has taken the position that if there is new legislation in an appropriation bill he will veto it because of that fact. If the Army of the United States has to go unfed and unpaid until the time for the next appropriation bill comes round, then it will be because the President of the United States has exercised that legislative function, and I am not going to take issue with anybody in advance that he will be inconsistent. I am going to agree that he will be consistent, and that he will veto this bill because by containing new legislation it places a burden upon the poor people residing in the northeast in contradistinction to the former legislation, which gave so much to the rich of northwest section of the District. He has ample ground here upon which to put in his veto, and I expect him to be consistent. Now, I am at issue in my own mind with the conference committee, but in the main I think they ought to be congratulated rather than be censured too much. There are items here which they should not have consented to let go in. They should have kept them out, but it must be said in their praise that for the first time in long years they have insisted to the other end of the Capitol that there is a House of Representatives. [Applause.] They have said for the first time in long years that the legislative body which is closest to the people shall keep some sort of check upon appropriations. A million and a quarter of dollars have been cut out of this bill in conference. The House conferees have stood like Gibraltar for several months insisting that that million and a quarter dollars should not go on, but I still insist that the conferees should have gone a little bit further and said that there shall be no bill unless the Senate confine itself to the rules; but perhaps they, like I, have relied to some extent upon the consistency of the President of the United States to veto this bill. Because of the fact that the House conferees have cut down a million and a quarter dollars in this bill—saved that much for the people without injuring the administration of affairs in the District of Columbia—the gentleman from Texas may be pardoned for having retained, at a cost of $24,000, his favorite item—brass band of the District Militia. [Laughter.]

I do not know just how he is going to use this brass band, neither am I as bitterly opposed to it as I once was. I conceived the idea that, perhaps, he was going to take that brass band through Texas in his canvass. He has promised to let me have it upon some occasion to go down to the station, or come back from the station accompanied by some of my constituents, that they might see how money grows on trees here. It is now too late to raise objection to it, and, having fought it when it was before the House, I shall not have any more to say concerning the item. But, Mr. Speaker, there is another and more serious objection to the legislation put into this bill by the conference committee, and that is that they have given away, without authority of law, public property, real estate, owned by the United States, for which no money is to come in return. They have deliberately given it away. They have provided in this bill for a small asphalt plant. That is good. I have not opposed the erection of a larger asphalt plant alone, but because the bill carrying the appropriation for it had a provision in it that the United States Government should give the land upon which it was to be built. That has been my most serious objection to the asphalt plant, and I think it is a tenable one.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman that there is no provision in this bill affecting any tract of land belonging to the Government in connection with this asphalt plant.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There is no provision in this bill carrying the grant of land for a $7,500 movable asphalt plant, but there was in the House bill—which the subcommittee of which the gentleman from Texas is chairman—a proposition to give to the District of Columbia, without the payment of a farthing, the most valuable piece of water front in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman that he is mistaken about that. We did not convey the title, but the title to it——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. You did not undertake to convey the fee, but you did undertake to give the use of it.

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; that is true; we permitted its use for the purpose——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And if that plant had been once established the use of it would always have remained in the District of Columbia, just as in 1871 the United States gave the use of a valuable tract of land for a school in the District of Columbia, and it is still being used. The United States Government is now paying half the expense of maintaining it; has contributed, upon the half-and-half plan, to purchase $10,000,000 worth of school property in the District of Columbia, and the entire $10,000,000 has been conveyed, not half to the United States that paid for half, not half to the District of Columbia that paid for half, but the deeds in fee simple have been made to the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURLESON. But the gentleman understands that the District of Columbia is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Congress. As a matter of fact we speak of these funds as District revenues, but the revenues raised by the assessment of property for taxation in the District of Columbia, the collecting of excise taxes in this District—in fact, all revenues collected here—are just as much revenues of the United States as revenue collected through the customhouse offices or through the internal-revenue offices of the United States.

That is a mere fiction that has been built up by the people who have no franchise, no voice in government, but who happen to live here. It does not hurt the United States or anyone else for them to indulge in this belief, but, as a matter of fact, I repeat the revenue that is derived by taxation in the District of Columbia is just as much the revenue of the Federal Government as custom taxes and internal-revenue taxes, and is subject to the same control by Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I must admit that I see nothing in what the gentleman has said to justify that the United States shall give away all the land that it owns in the District of Columbia to anybody. The District of Columbia is a municipal corporation. It has the right to own property and sue and be sued; and when the Federal Government, without valuable consideration, parts with title, then, I say, it is an unwarranted gift. There is but little of this done in this bill, I am glad to say. Much of it has been kept out, to the credit of the conference committee.

The Senate has not been able to override this conference committee in every respect. The committee is to be complimented, too, upon the fact that it kept out some of these schools. A year and a half or a little more ago, in a short speech made upon the floor of this House, I said and was able to establish, and can now establish, that during the then next preceding five years one could take the appropriations made for new school buildings in the District of Columbia, add them up, and make a total of those amounts, and then divide that total by the number of children who had actually come into the school age during those five years, and show it cost $1,210 to give each one of those children desk room alone in these buildings, to say nothing of the maintenance of the building; to say nothing of the cost of tuition. And I say that the conference committee from this House has acted wisely in not again adding a million or two more of public money to this already large expenditure for seating capacity.

We people who live in the country and can once in a long while get $1,210 for a house in which to seat all our children have a right to complain; and we have a right to compliment the gentlemen of the committee that they have stood in the way and said that $1,210 shall not be spent for desk room for each child that enters at school age in the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, as I have said several times, there are some items in this bill that should not be in it. But the committee has done well to keep out some monstrous things that were attempted to be put in. In passing I should mention, in my opinion, that without authority of law there is one item of $500,000 in the bill which has been given as a present to the District of Columbia. Yet, I say the time has now arrived in the consideration of this bill when we can not go back to that. I repeat that the committee for the first time in long years have withstood the pressure that has been made to bear upon them to grant more than they were warranted in granting. They may be pardoned for having withstood to the extent they have this pressure and that they did not put more in this bill simply because it was desired by those at the other end of the Capitol.

I have reserved points of order against this bill. There are at least five which, in my opinion, if made and insisted upon, the Chair would be compelled to sustain; but, so far as I am concerned, I will for the present withdraw the points of order and leave it to the President of the United States to treat this bill as he has treated the Army bill, by vetoing it because it has new legislation in it.

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that I am not expecting the President to veto this bill. Mr. Speaker, I now move to agree to the conference report.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. If the gentleman will yield, I understand there has been carried in this bill for several years a provision admitting ex soldiers and sailors of the Spanish and Mexican Wars to the temporary home for ex-Union soldiers and sailors. That provision was put in the bill and has been stricken out in conference.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman that I put in a former bill the provision of law to which he alludes. It was stricken out by the request of the Mexican War veterans, saying that they did not want to be put on such a basis; that they were not asking such charity. And I will state, furthermore, to the gentleman, in my opinion this institution to which he refers is a fake institution and ought to be abolished, and I am not alone in that opinion.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I am not complaining of the action of the gentleman. I merely wanted to know what the reason was.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman that I have stated the reason.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I did not and shall not make a point of order upon the conference report. There is one item in it that I think ought to have a statement made concerning it, so that it will not mislead some one else hereafter. Amendment 153 appropriated $5,000 for an investigation of an asphalt plant. Rather, I should say, it provided that $5,000 of the appropriation carried in the bill should be used for that purpose. The conferees have slightly increased the amount which shall be taken out of the appropriation. The amount carried by the appropriation in the bill as it passed the House was $390,000.

Mr. BURLESON. That is true.

Mr. MANN. Thereupon, after having provided that a portion of that should be used for a purpose for which it could not be otherwise used, the conferees reduced the amount of the appropriation from $390,000 to $360,000.

Mr. BURLESON. That is true.

Mr. MANN. Which clearly made the report subject to a point of order by the way of affecting the text. As I understand—and I want to know whether that is the case or not—the original sum of $390,000 was put in the bill in connection with the proposition creating an asphalt plant?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; the municipal asphalt plant, and not the portable one.

Mr. MANN. And I understand that the latter provision creating the asphalt plant was stricken out in the House on a point of order without changing the original appropriation.

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman that when that item was stricken out of the bill it carried with it also the portable plant and we thereby lost the advantage that would accrue to the engineering department of the city by the utilization of the municipal asphalt plant and the portable asphalt plant. The District engineer officer informed us that if he could have the use of a portable asphalt plant he could effect economies by the use of the refuse material or old material that was prized up from the pavements to be replaced by new material. He said he could effect such economies that he would not need the entire amount of money that the bill carried, and for that reason we reduced the amount.

Mr. MANN. I remember that when the provision in the bill for the permanent asphalt plant was stricken out my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], with some dramatic instinct, rose and offered an amendment increasing by a considerable amount the appropriation in the bill, stating:

> This shows itself that the Chair was wrong in ruling that this proposition did not decrease expenses, because I have got to offer an amendment largely increasing the amount.

Thereupon it was carried, and then it goes into conference and, contrary to all the ordinary rules of practice in conference, the conferees have reduced the amount now because the gentleman has found that the permanent asphalt plant did not make that much change.

Mr. BURLESON. The explanation I have made of expected economies to result from the use of the portable plant accounts for that action. It will effect economies that will attain the same results without the expenditure of so much money.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the motion to agree to the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALEXANDER). The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] moves to agree to the conference report. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BURLESON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 24023) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 24023, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

> H. R. 24023. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the Senate amendments to the House bill 24023—the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill—be disagreed to and a conference asked for. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. He asked unanimous consent to take the bill from the Speaker's table and do this.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to take the bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question. Has the gentleman examined the Senate amendments to the House proposition abolishing the Commerce Court?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that I only received a copy of the printed bill this morning and have not had time to examine it closely.

Mr. SIMS. I looked it over this morning casually, and the provisions do not appear to be as they were published in the papers. As I gather from reading the amendments of the Senate to section 10 of the House bill, I think the House would readily concur. I dislike very much to disagree to amendments which I highly favor.

Mr. BURLESON. I think there is one amendment relating to the Commerce Court wholly unnecessary, but that is neither here nor there.

Mr. SIMS. I only wanted to know whether the members of the committee had examined the amendments carefully.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it is important that these amendments should be carefully examined.

Mr. SIMS. Yes; they should be. I do not care to make any motion in regard to it.

Mr. HAY. I assume that there is no general legislation on the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There is legislation in the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In accordance with the rules of the House.

Mr. HAY. And I hope that the work will not all have to be done over again.

Mr. BARTLETT. The legislation that the gentleman from Tennessee refers to is the abolition of the Commerce Court—the enactment that the court shall be abolished and the office shall be taken away from the judges, or the act repealed which created the court.

Mr. SIMS. That does not seem to be in the bill. The provision abolishing the tenure of office does not appear in the bill, unless it is in some other section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I want a little time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MANN. Fifteen or 20 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be permitted to proceed for 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to agree to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina that the bill be taken from the Speaker's table and laid before the House, and that the gentleman shall have the right in the House to move to disagree to the Senate amendments, but I want a little time to make some observations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Pending the request of the gentleman from South Carolina I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be permitted to proceed for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to Senate amendments in relation to employees in the Senate. I know it is always stated in the House that the House has no jurisdiction over the amount appropriated for Senate employees. I do not know whether it is lucky for me or lucky for the Senate that I am not one of the conferees on the subject, because, unless I should change my mind very decidedly, I never would agree to some amendments which they have inserted and which they have insisted on at different times.

The Senate has added 22 messengers to the various committees of the Senate in this bill, besides a large number of other committee employees. The House appropriates $162,230 for its committee employees, to which may be added $6,480 appropriated for nine committee clerks, and possibly $4,200 appropriated for clerks for the minority leader, making a total of $172,910. The Senate, with the amendments that they have inserted in this bill, appropriates $370,940—$370,000 for the Senate against $172,000 in the House.

It is true that the Senate does not appropriate for private secretaries for 61 Senators, while the House appropriates for clerks for every Member of the House. Now, these Senate committees in the aggregate can have no greater jurisdiction than the House committees. While I know that a Senator represents a larger constituency than a Member of the House, and probably ought to have, as I think he ought to have, more help than the average Member of the House, I think that either the employees of the committees in the Senate are grossly excessive, or else the employees of the committees in the House are entirely inadequate, possibly both. I am inclined to think that some of the House committees do not have clerks enough, especially judging from some reports that I read where I think more employees would be able to give greater attention to details in some of the bills which are reported from the committees.

But in that distinguished body at the other end of the Capitol, for which I have a profound respect, a respect which sometimes increases when I am absent and do not read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for a time, they get into the habit when a chairman of a committee proposes something which he thinks he needs every other chairman falls in line. Because one Senator thought he needed an extra messenger for his committee, they have added 22 extra messengers. Some committees in the Senate that never meet each have two messengers. They had but one each before. I think the House committee, which is responsible to the people for the total of appropriations, ought to say that we can see no reason for this and decline to agree to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman leaves the item just referred to, I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. MANN. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Under the rules that obtain between the two Houses how can the conferees on the part of the House question the expenditures that are made by the Senate, when they are made, as it is claimed, for the personal comfort of the Senators?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, let them put it in a contingent fund. They ought to have no larger contingent fund than the House. Possibly they ought to have as large a contingent fund. What they do with the contingent fund I do not care. If they want to pay for employees for the individual Senators, that is their lookout; but when they ask for specific places and ask us to appropriate for them, we have a right to examine into that matter just as much as we have a right to examine into the clerks in the different departments of the Government.

Mr. Speaker, the House passed a provision to abolish the Commerce Court. The Senate has inserted a provision in another place in the bill to abolish the additional judges which were created when the Commerce Court was created. They have tried to do it in four different ways. Of course, some of us believe that when you create a judge of the Federal court, under the provisions of the Constitution we can not remove that judge from his office during his good behavior.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. But we can do as they did in 1802 when the midnight judges were appointed. We can remove the office from the judge.

Mr. MANN. I doubt that. I know that most lawyers believe that that act was unconstitutional. It never was tested.

Mr. BARTLETT. No judge who was appointed at that time ever sought the office. All they did was to make an appeal to the Congress to provide for their salaries or give them work to do. That is as stated by the historians.

Mr. MANN. Certainly. Congress in the last hours of its session, in an expiring administration, provided for the creation of a number of Federal judges. The succeeding Congress and the succeeding administration almost instantly, as soon as it had the power, when Congress met, repealed that law. The judges had been appointed instantly when the law was passed. I take it that they appreciated the fact that it was highly improper for an expiring Congress and an expiring administration to endeavor to load onto the incoming administration and the incoming Congress, of a different political party, a large number of judges, and they acquiesced in the passage of a law which many, and I have no doubt most, lawyers then and now believe to be unconstitutional. But outside of the constitutionality the new law had all the marks of propriety.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman will pardon me, the act of 1789 did not create any circuit judges. There were 5 United States associate judges of the Supreme Court, whose duty it was to hold court with the district courts in the circuits. This act of 1801 created 16 circuit judges and 16 circuit courts. In 1802, when the Jefferson administration acted, it repealed the act creating the 16 new judges and circuits and reenacted the old law of 1789, and under the repeal of the act of 1801 and the reenactment of the statutes of 1789 all of the 16 judges went out of office.

Mr. MANN. It was done under the conditions which I have stated.

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, the gentleman has correctly stated the matter, of course.

Mr. MANN. And I think no textbook writer from that time to this has assumed that that act was constitutional. If was not questioned. It met the proprieties. It was highly improper for the Adams administration—I believe that was the administration——

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Going out of the office, in the expiring days of its life and of the life of the Congress under it, to create a lot of new Federal judges and appoint them at that time for the purpose of preventing the Jefferson administration, coming in, having been selected by the people, from having any control over the Federal judiciary.

It is quite patent that the distinguished body at the other end of the Capitol did not believe that act was unconstitutional. They provide first in their amendment:

> The five additional circuit judges provided for by the act of Congress approved June 18, 1910, and by chapter 9 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, are hereby abolished.

If that is good, that ends it. We created five additional judges, and they say that those five judges are hereby abolished. That is enough to settle it, if that is good. Then they go on and say further:

> And the authority in said acts of Congress for the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint five additional circuit judges is hereby repealed.

That is sufficient by itself, if it is good. They are not willing to stand on abolishing the judgeships, because they think they can not do it. If it can not be done, it is useless to put it in here; and if it can be done, it is useless to go further. Then they provide that this law under which the judges were appointed is repealed. That would be sufficient. They then go ahead further and say:

> And the number of circuit judges is hereby reduced to 29.

That would also be sufficient, if it were good. There are three propositions, any one of which would be sufficient if it were good, and the fact that they do not stop at one in each case shows that they do not believe that one in either case will be sufficient to accomplish the purpose. Then they go ahead further and adopt a fourth method of trying to get rid of these judges by providing that these judges can not hereafter sit. They are endeavoring to repeal the law which authorized these judges to sit in the circuit or district court.

Any one of the four provisions would be sufficient, if it were valid, and the fact that the distinguished body at the other end of the Capitol took four chances at it indicates they did not believe any one chance was very good, but they hoped that some one of the four under the provisions of Almighty Providence would be sufficient.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it not more likely that it was to meet the varying views of different gentlemen that they adopted each of the various propositions? Some might have thought one was effective and some another, and they wanted to satisfy everybody.

Mr. MANN. It is perfectly patent that the body acts as a body, and if they would meet all the varying views in the Senate they would have 96 provisions, in all probability.

Mr. SIMS. The fact that the Senate adopted so many provisions in order to get rid of them is certainly conclusive that they did really want to get rid of them.

Mr. MANN. I do not know. I assume they did. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, for the House in the end, if it wants to, to agree to this provision, because when the President vetoes the bill he will be clearly justified by the people, for they will regard it as an assault upon the integrity of the courts. Here is a proposition that would reduce the number of circuit judgeships from 34 to 29. We have the same authority to say 25 that we have 29. We have the same authority to say 9 that we have 29. With a constitutional provision saying that these judges shall be appointed for life or during good behavior I do not believe that Congress has the power under the Constitution to deprive them from their offices without impeachment, without trial, without any authority of law at all except the mere provision that they are fired.

Mr. SIMS. May I ask the gentleman a further question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. Suppose Congress had very foolishly provided for the creation of 500 judges, does the gentleman think the people then would not be willing to adopt some method of getting rid of that unnecessary number? If 5 are unnecessary, 500 would just add to the number of unnecessary judges.

Mr. MANN. I think if Congress provided for 500 judges there would be no difficulty in getting rid of the Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. Not a bit, and there ought to be none.

Mr. MANN. But I do not believe they could get rid of the judges unless those judges resigned.

Mr. SIMS. Then the Constitution ought to be amended.

Mr. MANN. Not at all. If the provision of the Constitution that a judge is appointed for life or during good behavior can be set aside by a majority of the two Houses discharging the judge, then the provision of the Constitution for dismissing a judge by impeachment is of no effect.

Mr. SIMS. It is practically of no effect.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman recalls the law abolishing the circuit courts and creating an entirely new system of courts——

Mr. MANN. But we did not abolish the circuit court judges.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman is going too far, because outside of the judges of the Supreme Court I have no doubt that Congress can abolish any other court and get rid of the judges.

Mr. MANN. The power of Congress over the Supreme Court is no greater, but is precisely the same as it is over any Federal court. We can increase or decrease.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The commentators on the Constitution seem to have a different view.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has not read them recently. I have read them recently.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have read them, but I may not have read the particular one on which the gentleman seems to rely.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has not read them lately or he would not make that statement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have read some lately.

Mr. MANN. The power of Congress over the Supreme Court, as far as the personnel is concerned, is precisely the same as it has over any other court. It can increase the number of Supreme Court judges. Congress can increase the number of Supreme Court judges, and it can decrease the number of Supreme Court judges, but we can not dismiss a number of judges on the bench when we decrease it. Now, the Constitution does not say how many judges shall be on the Supreme Court. The same power exactly exists under the law. I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, and I am not prepared to take that position in this day and in these hours when there is so much discussion—I do not believe that the Federal judiciary ought to be made the football of politics in Congress.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield for one further question?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman, I suppose, has no doubt of the constitutionality of the House provision as passed by the House?

Mr. MANN. I do not; I have no doubt of our power to abolish the Commerce Court, not the slightest; but I do not believe it is desirable for the conferees to agree to the Senate amendment, although if they do I hope and believe that the President will veto the bill, and I think the country will sustain him in it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I only desire a moment or two. The House is not responsible for the provision which the gentleman from Illinois has been criticizing. The House included in this bill a provision which it believed meets practically almost the unanimous sentiment of the country in providing for the abolishment of the Commerce Court. The Senate for a number of various reasons has inserted an amendment providing for legislating out of office the additional circuit court judges who were appointed at the time the Commerce Court was created. This House has no desire either to make a football of the courts or to do that which is not within its power under the Constitution. The conferees have not yet been appointed, and at any rate the committee has not taken the matter up for consideration. Some of the Members of this House who are recognized as very excellent and competent lawyers have been requested to look carefully into the constitutionality of the amendments of the Senate. I am inclined to think the House conferees will not act hastily—will not agree to consent to these provisions to get rid of the judges—if there be any doubt whatever as to the power of Congress to legislate them out of office. This House does not wish to give the President such an excuse for his interference with the right of Congress to abolish a court which has become an obstruction in the administration of justice rather than an aid in the administration of justice. If the President wishes to override the will of the Congress in getting rid of a useless and inefficient court, he will have to do it upon some other ground than that Congress has exceeded its constitutional power.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, what I said when I first got the floor had reference only to the amendments touching section 10 in the House bill which abolished the court. I did not have reference to the amendment on page 149, which I had not then seen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 24023, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, be taken from the Speaker's table, the Senate amendments be disagreed to, and a conference asked for on the disagreeing votes between the two Houses. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the following conferees: Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina, Mr. BURLESON, and Mr. GILLETT.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 25069) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

First. For salaries of officers and employees of the Isthmian Canal Commission, including assistant purchasing and shipping agents, and all other employees in the United States, $150,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I do not have it in mind, so far as consideration of other appropriations is concerned, to move material amendments to this bill. I will move an amendment when we reach fortifications. I desire, however, at this time to call attention to the estimates for the construction of the canal. The appropriations for 1912 were $45,500,000; the estimates for 1913 were $41,622,810. The amount recommended in this bill for construction, and so forth, is $28,780,000. The total decrease in the appropriations is $12,842,810.20 below the estimates, as against the appropriations of last year of $45,560,000. This is not particularly called attention to in the report as to the reason for making this seeming great reduction. It is a reduction apparent on its face, but not in fact real. These appropriations for the construction of the canal are continuing appropriations.

I doubt if they are sufficient for the coming fiscal year. If they are not sufficient, during the short session of Congress the deficiency can be made good. But there is a surplus in round numbers—I am not exactly accurate, but I can be accurate in the statement—in the amount appropriated last year of, say, $6,000,000. That is owing to greater efficiency in this work, greatly to the credit of Congress, but substantially the credit is due to that great man Col. Goethals, who is in charge of this work, supported by Congress and by the administration, and who is commended for his efficiency, that there is, in round numbers, $6,000,000 of the $45,500,000 appropriated for the current year which is not expended; and the appropriation is continuing, available for the coming fiscal year, just as much as it would be if this $28,780,000 was increased by $6,000,000, making it $34,000,000 instead of $28,000,000.

For the purposes of comparison I call the attention of the House to the fact that from the $45,500,000 appropriation for the current year $6,000,000 should be deducted, making, in point of fact, $39,500,000 that has been and will be spent for the current year. Now, if you will take this $6,000,000 which comes over and is available and add it to the $28,780,000 appropriated or recommended by this bill, the amount would be $34,780,000. Substracting that from the $39,500,000 leaves really and in fact a difference between the appropriation for the coming year and the current of $4,720,000 instead of $12,000,000 plus, as a casual reading of the amounts appropriated last year and recommended for this year would lead one to suppose. I am inclined to think—at least I hope—that the amount appropriated for construction in the coming year will be sufficient. It may not be.

It is true also that the constantly improving efficiency of labor and effort on the Isthmus, as well as the less amount of work to be done, furnishes an explanation of the difference of $4,720,000 between the appropriations for the current year and the present year.

You may say, "What of it?" Nothing. And yet I thought proper at this time to call attention to it. The $6,000,000, in round numbers, that comes over as a surplus which is just appropriated for the current year continues for the coming year and the next year. It does not have to be expended in any fiscal year. That is also true as to the appropriation for the coming year.

That is all I desire to say, and I say it for information and in justice to the last Congress that made this appropriation, I believe, by the consent of both the majority and minority of the Committee on Appropriations, and in justice, also, to those who expended the money, making, so far as I have been able to ascertain, every dollar a real asset and force in the construction of that great work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the committee in making up these recommendations, acting upon the information in its possession and its experience, recommended such amounts as it believed would be sufficient for the entire fiscal year. Since the bill was reported I have received information from a reliable source to the effect that the total amounts of the appropriations are satisfactory to those in charge of the canal. There may be some little differences of opinion about one item or another, but with the continuance of the 10 per cent interchangeable provision, as it is in the bill, the appropriations are entirely satisfactory.

I wish to repeat that, so far as the majority members of the committee are concerned, they made no effort whatever to make any reductions in the appropriations for the canal in order to lessen the total of appropriations to be made by this Congress. The appropriations in this respect were made for the purpose of enabling the work to be carried forward during the entire year. I do not say that the committee could not have made a mistake, but I repeat that since the bill has been reported I have inquired about the matter and have received information from those connected with the work to the effect that, in their opinion, the total appropriations would be sufficient. I believe, in justice to the committee and everybody concerned in this work, that statement should be made.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the appropriations for the Panama Canal stand upon a different footing from the appropriations for any other service of the Government. Every one admits that the sooner the canal is completed and opened for operation, the more economical it is in the end; and the appropriations which are made and the expenditures which are made are reimbursable by the sale of bonds, if a necessity exists therefor. So that the condition of the Treasury should not affect the amount of the appropriations, and the only question should be, How much can be properly expended in the operations incident to the work of construction?

It seems to me that the report of the Committee on Appropriations is a serious reflection upon Col. Goethals and the other officers in charge of the construction work, although I know it is not so intended. It is the first reflection that I have heard made upon those gentlemen. They estimated for $41,000,000. They certainly did not make an estimate without some care and some knowledge. The committee's bill carries an appropriation of $29,000,000, but they say that about $6,000,000 surplus will be carried over from this fiscal year unexpended, and say therefore that the total reduction from the estimates by the bill practically amounts to about $6,000,000. Am I correct in my figures?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it is a little less than that.

Mr. MANN. About $6,000,000?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it is less than that, because information received later was to the effect that it would be a little lower.

Mr. MANN. The information I give is derived from statements made on the other side of the House by the gentleman to-day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is about that. It might be a little lower.

Mr. MANN. It is impossible for me to understand how the engineers in charge of this work, after a series of years and a series of estimates, are unable to come closely to what they need. I can not understand how they are $6,000,000 wrong.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will understand that they are engaged in a great construction enterprise. The estimates were prepared in September. As the work progressed the information as to the progress and the cost of the work as it was going on was furnished to the committee, and I hardly think it fair for the gentleman to say that the committee intended to reflect upon Col. Goethals.

Mr. MANN. I say the committee did not intend to reflect upon him, but that the action of the committee is an indirect reflection upon him.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It did not reflect upon him. The information as to the surplus and as to the propriety and the possibility of a reduction in the estimates originated with Col. Goethals himself and not with the committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I offer him another suggestion. He says that the estimates, speaking in round figures, were about $41,000,000, and the appropriation is about $29,000,000, being about $12,000,000 less, $6,000,000 of which is explained by a balance coming over, so that even if we have cut the estimates $6,000,000 this year, we have done no more than ought to have been done last year, as is shown by a surplus of $6,000,000 for that time.

Mr. MANN. That may be true. No one knows. But this year nobody can tell whether the surplus will be $6,000,000 or not. But the work of construction is not hampered now by the fear that the money will be running short by the 1st of July. If the gentlemen in charge of this work in last September were not able to come nearer than $12,000,000 as to what the appropriations ought to be, I think they fell down very badly indeed.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, well, if the gentleman will permit, it is not a question of coming within $12,000,000; it is a question of coming within $6,000,000, because the estimates do not take into view the balance that will be available.

Mr. MANN. Of course they take into account the balance available.

Mr. SHERLEY. They never do and did not in this instance.

Mr. MANN. The estimate for the amount of work to be done on the canal, to complete the canal, necessarily takes into view the amount of money which is appropriated and which is unexpended.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. I am not mistaken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken, because I know it does not, and that is why the surplus is charged off against the estimate.

Mr. MANN. In the estimates of the expense of the canal originally figured out and always kept in view in making all the estimates, it is necessary to take into consideration all the time the amount of money which has been appropriated and the amount of money which has been expended and the amount of work which is unfinished.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, the gentleman is hedging.

Mr. MANN. No; I am not hedging; I am stating the absolute fact. These gentlemen ought to know what they wanted in September. I know how gentlemen come before the Committee on Appropriations and submit to the sharp cross-examination of bright gentlemen who seek in every way to get them to admit that they can get along with a little less money—quite a proper course to pursue in reference to the departments of the Government, but not a proper course to pursue with reference to the construction of the Panama Canal; a proper course to pursue in reference to the personnel and number of employees, but it will have no effect whatever on the cost of handling the dirt.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, he is the first man who has ever suggested that by a skillful cross-examination, or by anything else, anyone could take advantage of the judgment or determination of Col. Goethals in the full performance of his duties.

Mr. MANN. I have seen Col. Goethals before a committee many times, more times than has the gentleman from Kentucky. I know how all these gentlemen are affected when they come before a committee of Congress, especially a great man outside, fearing the extreme greatness here, and of course he meets it in the Committee on Appropriations. I think the canal work ought not to be hampered in any way, and that there ought to be no chances taken in hampering it. It can do no harm to make the appropriation such as Col. Goethals asked for when he was giving his cool, deliberate judgment to it, and before he was called into the private conference in the room of the Committee on Appropriations. I think gentlemen are making a mistake in this regard. Probably it will do no great amount of injury, except to delay the opening of the canal a little. It will have that effect; the work will not progress as rapidly as it otherwise would. They will not have the money, they will not expend the money, and they will commence to curtail the moment the appropriation is passed in this shape, if it passes with the amounts named in this bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the statements of the gentleman from Illinois are so absolutely erroneous that I propose to demonstrate it by the statement of Col. Goethals himself. Five minutes' examination of the statement of Col. Goethals would have shown the gentleman from Illinois that he is absolutely in error. The $5,000,000 surplus was $5,000,000 that came over from 1910 and was to the credit of the canal commission on the 1st of July, 1910. For the fiscal year 1910 the estimates were $48,063,524.70. There was appropriated by the Republican Congress $37,855,000, or about $11,000,000 less than Col. Goethals asked for, and at the end of the year they had $5,000,000 they could not expend.

So that there will be no misunderstanding, I will read from the record:

ESTIMATES FOR CURRENT YEAR.

The CHAIRMAN. Your estimates for the current year were $47,920,847.69, and the appropriations were $45,560,000. Will you state first whether you anticipate any deficiencies?

Col. GOETHALS. From the talk that you gave me in Washington, I do not think it would be wise for us to anticipate any deficiencies, and so far as construction and engineering is concerned there will be no deficiencies.

The CHAIRMAN. Will there be any surplus?

Col. GOETHALS. That I doubt.

Mr. MALBY. Not ultimately?

Col. GOETHALS. Not ultimately.

The CHAIRMAN. As far as the present year is concerned?

Col. GOETHALS. No; I do not think there will be as far as the present year is concerned; we have not gone far enough ahead yet to determine what savings there will be, but I am perfectly willing to give you the savings that were on our books in 1911, but nothing more.

The CHAIRMAN. I might state for the record that the estimates for 1911 were $48,063,524.70, and the appropriations $37,855,000. Now, have you any surplus from 1911?

Col. GOETHALS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you state the amount of the surplus?

Col. GOETHALS. Salaries in the United States, a balance on hand at the close of the fiscal year June 30, 1911, of $15,000; incidental expenses in the United States, a balance of $29,000; pay of officers and employees on the Isthmus, $416,000; Isthmus pay roll, $1,600,000; miscellaneous, material, purchases on the Isthmus, $3,767,800; that is, supplies of all kinds purchased by the quartermaster's department.

The CHAIRMAN. Which makes how much all told?

Col. GOETHALS. Very nearly $5,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Which you will have available in addition to the $45,000,000 appropriated?

Col. GOETHALS. In addition to the $45,000,000 appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. In preparing these estimates was allowance made for the surplus which you have?

Col. GOETHALS. No; it was not.

The CHAIRMAN. So that regardless of any other considerations we can eliminate about $5,000,000 from your estimates for the next year?

Col. GOETHALS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you place in the record a statement showing the amount of transfers made by you under the provisions of law giving you authority to transfer not to exceed 10 per cent or not to increase any appropriation by 10 per cent?

In March or April of this year Col. Goethals for this fiscal year, having but three additional months to run, was able to state that from his own knowledge as to the conduct of the work what saving would be made out of the appropriations made for this year. In making up the sums to be carried in this bill the committee made allowance for the savings of two years.

So that the statement of the gentleman from Illinois may not create a misapprehension in any place, I want to say that the day this bill was reported to the House a copy of it was sent to Col. Goethals in the city of New York for his information, and the only request that came from him relative to changes in the provisions for the canal was to insert the one word "unallotted" before the word "surplus" in the provision turning the surplus earnings of the Panama Canal into the Treasury.

To be certain that there was no question that there was enough money carried in this bill, I inquired from the office in Washington as to whether the committee had recommended sufficient money, and a statement was made that when this bill was reported the details were cabled to the Isthmus, and, so far as the total appropriations were concerned, they were perfectly satisfactory and would be sufficient; that there was some difference of opinion as to the amounts carried in some of the items, but that with the 10 per cent interchangeable provision in the bill, in the shape it is in this year, there will be no embarrassment, no difficulty, and they had all the money and all the authority they needed for the next fiscal year. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is not justified on the facts or the record in attempting to put this side of the House in the position of in any way delaying or preventing the speedy completion of the work upon the Isthmus or the completion of the canal as rapidly as those in charge of it are able to complete it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to take back from what I have said, which was all true, but let that go for a moment. May I ask the gentleman about something else? The gentleman has stated, I think, on the floor that the appropriations carried for the canal in this bill made ample provision for the construction of a dry dock or the commencement of the construction of warehouses, docks, wharves, coal yards, and so forth, that are contemplated in the Adamson bill, and that in his opinion the authorities there were authorized to make these constructions under the Spooner Act. Under what appropriation in the bill can that be done?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It comes under several of the items—the engineering and construction items.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the auditor might do, but I do not see how an auditor could approve accounts for any of those items in this bill under the Spooner Act.

Mr. FITZGERALD. When the committee was on the Isthmus the matter was discussed, and the necessity for inserting some language in the appropriation provisions was considered. The statement was made by those in charge of the work that it was believed that under the provisions of the Spooner Act providing for the construction of the canal and proper terminals, if I recall the language, it included the facilities contemplated which the gentleman has mentioned.

Mr. MANN. I do not know who those gentlemen were who gave the committee that information, but certainly until very recently no one contemplated that under the Spooner Act these works could be constructed, nor do I see how they could be constructed under any provision of the bill. True, the bill carries one provision in reference to the matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They could, under the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth items. They would be the appropriations out of which they would be paid. It depends entirely on the accuracy of the construction that is placed upon the Spooner Act.

Mr. MANN. Of course that would depend under the fifth provision on whether the construction of these works is a part of the construction of the Isthmian Canal.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true.

Mr. MANN. The same would be true under any other provision, I suppose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will call the gentleman's attention to a statement of Col. Goethals:

I should like to state right here that we have prepared an estimate for 1913, including the sum of $3,000,000 for the terminal.

Mr. MALBY. Is that included in your 1913 estimate?

Col. GOETHALS. Yes. We have in our current year's appropriation an estimate of $2,193,000. Also for terminals, and I have authorized, in order not to tie up some of the dredges, the excavation of a certain area at the Pacific entrance of the canal, which I showed you the other afternoon.

So that for the current year in the appropriations made there was the sum of $2,193,000 included.

Mr. MANN. But that is for dredging in the sea.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it is for dredging at Balboa, where the dock is to be constructed.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I remember it distinctly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may be correct; but the original provision was for dredging in the sea.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But this item about which Col. Goethals was speaking was the dredging at Balboa, where it was intended to build the slips and docks.

Mr. MANN. There is certainly no authority in the original act to construct a dock down there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have sent for the Spooner Act, and I will call the gentleman's attention to the provision under which those in charge of the work and construction insist they have that right.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that I served for years on the legislative committee having jurisdiction over this subject, and no one ever pretended they had that authority, and they never have made any such pretense that they have to the members of the committee having legislative jurisdiction of the subject.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be true, but this was the situation. The gentleman is familiar with the conditions and the necessity for providing certain terminal facilities.

Mr. MANN. Of course I appreciate the fact that if the Spooner Act authorized these works as a part of the construction of the canal, then the work could be done under the items in the bill; but if the Spooner Act did not authorize the construction of these works as a part of the construction of the canal, then if the gentleman had inserted an item in this bill, that would have been subject to a point of order. However, the House has passed the Adamson bill, providing for the construction of those works. That bill has been reported into the Senate. I think before this bill becomes a law the gentleman ought to endeavor to have put into it in proper language at some place an authorization. I notice the gentleman carries the language on page 168, after the total appropriation, but that is applicable to appropriations hereafter made, as well as heretofore made, and would not be construed as an authority.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true. Let me call attention to this statement:

Col. GOETHALS. I do not know. We contemplate building a sufficient length of dockage at both ends of the canal to serve the needs of the present commerce, leaving to the future the enlargement or the extension of the system should the necessities require. We contemplate also the construction of a dry dock for commercial purposes and the construction of coaling facilities. In case the canal authorities are authorized to deal in coal, certain terminal facilities will be necessary, even before the canal is completed, to take care of the commercial business that now devolves upon the Panama Railroad; the present appropriation will provide for that, and I am willing to take the responsibility of going ahead, but we need some authority from Congress in the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any statute or anything in any of the laws regarding the construction of the canal by which authority can be had to construct terminals?

Col. GOETHALS. Yes; the Spooner Act. What the Spooner Act contemplated by terminals is questionable; whether it included a dry dock or not I do not know. In our estimates for 1908, which contemplated the completion of the canal, we had no idea at that time of a dry dock or a coaling station, our estimates including only the construction of a few docks.

It is upon that statement that I have made the statement I have made several times.

Mr. MANN. A dry dock is necessary, and a coaling station is absolutely necessary. Why not insert after the total amount of appropriation, on page 168, after the word "expended," some such provision as this:

Which sum may be used as far as necessary for the construction of necessary dry dock, coaling plant, etc., referred to below.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection, and I think it would be desirable unless somebody else objects. The work ought to be done, as the gentleman understands, at the present time, when the canal is being constructed.

Mr. MANN. Certainly. Now is the time to do the work. The bill giving authority will become a law. It has already passed the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. As far as I am concerned, I believe it is desirable, if there be any doubt, to have the matter settled, so that there will be no holding up of expenditures because of lack of authority.

Mr. MANN. Of course this would not increase the appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; and the amounts required for that purpose are included in the present year's appropriations, and are included in the amounts carried for the next year.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman, after the word "expended," in line 11, to insert some such provision as I have intimated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will have an amendment prepared when we reach that if it is the desire of the committee to put it in.

Mr. MANN. All right.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fourth. For skilled and unskilled labor on the Isthmus, including engineers, conductors, firemen, brakemen, electricians, teamsters, cranesmen, machinists, blacksmiths, and other artisans, and their helpers; janitors, sailors, cooks, waiters, and dairymen, for the departments of construction and engineering, quartermaster's, subsistence, disbursements, and examination of accounts, $11,000,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 165, line 10, after the figures "$11,000,000" insert the following:

"Provided, That so much of this appropriation as may be necessary, not to exceed $15,000, shall be expended in soil improvement and agricultural development, in accordance with the recommendations and conclusions submitted in Report No. 95, United States Department of Agriculture, entitled 'The agricultural possibilities of the Canal Zone.'"

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is subject to the point of order. It is drawn on lines corresponding to those of the paragraph which has just been passed and does not contemplate any change in expenditure.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman wish to discuss the point of order?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to discuss the merits.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will make the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; I do not care to discuss the point of order, but I would like to have a vote upon the amendment. I do not think it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do. Let us dispose of the point of order, and if the gentleman wishes to speak to his amendment——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman what his point of order is?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is that it is not authorized by law, it is legislation, it is not germane to this bill, and there are three or four other reasons which I could give if necessary.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this item is as germane to the bill as paragraph 3 on page 164. The provision as drawn is in exactly the same language as the proviso on page 164, and it contemplates no change in expenditure, but simply makes a reservation of a certain amount of the appropriation for a certain purpose.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether his amendment is for carrying on the work of the construction of the canal under the so-called Spooner Act? The gentleman will notice that items of appropriation follow the language, to continue the construction of the Isthmian Canal to be expended in accordance with the terms of an act entitled, and so forth, which is the Spooner Act. I do not recall any provision in that act other than for the construction of the canal and the acquirement of the necessary land. I do not recall any provision in it in regard to cultivating the soil, and I call the attention of the gentleman to ask whether there is any such provision.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have not gone very thoroughly into the relation of the Spooner Act to this particular amendment. But I observe that provision is made in the paragraph, to which I propose to attach this amendment, for dairymen and for subsistence, and if those two features can be regarded as coming within the provisions of the Spooner Act for the continuation of the construction of the canal, if the milking of cows is in line with the construction of the canal and the providing of food for those employed on the construction of the canal, then this amendment is equally in line with the Spooner Act. If it can be held that provision can be made in this bill for employing men to do the work of dairying and that is in line with the construction of the canal, then surely this amendment is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, leave will be granted. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fifth. For purchase and delivery of material, supplies, and equipment, including cost of inspecting material and of paying traveling expenses incident thereto, whether on the Isthmus or elsewhere, and such other expenses not in the United States as the commission deems necessary to best promote the construction of the Isthmian Canal, including not exceeding $50,000 for the payment of damages caused to the owners of private lands, or private property of any kind, by reason of the grants contained in the treaty between the United States and the Republic of Panama proclaimed February 26, 1904, or by reason of the operations of the United States, its agents or employees, or by reason of the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, and protection of the said canal or of the works of sanitation and protection therein provided for, which may be compromised by agreement between the claimant and the chairman of the commission without the intervention of a joint commission for the departments of construction and engineering, quartermaster's, subsistence, disbursements and examination of accounts, and for a permanent administration building, $12,000,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], if I may have his attention, that in line 3, page 166, coming after the word "commission," there should be a comma.

Mr. SHERLEY. What page?

Mr. MANN. Page 166. Without the comma the way the language reads is "joint commission for the departments of construction and engineering."

Mr. SHERLEY. I think there ought to be a comma. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert after the word "commission," in line 3, page 166, a comma.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 166, line 3, after the word "commission," insert a comma.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The President is authorized and directed to detail officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army, not to exceed four companies, in manner and form as he may prescribe, to police the Canal Zone and perform the duties of peace officers therein under the laws thereof; and for the purposes hereof the President is empowered to use so much as may be necessary of the moneys appropriated by this act for the departments of civil administration and law.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph for the reason it is new legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I think if the gentleman understood the provision he would not make the point of order. We have on the Isthmus at the present time about 1,000 soldiers. There is nothing for them to do. The people in charge of the construction of the canal state that if they can be utilized in this way they would be utilized in some useful occupation and we would save $200,000 a year.

It is purely in the interest of economy and efficiency and simply to enable the utilization of soldiers who are on the Isthmus, for whom there is no work, for which no occupation can be found, to do this policing of the canal at a saving of $200,000 a year.

Mr. CULLOP. Well, I do not understand, Mr. Chairman, that the argument of the gentleman from New York has been directed against the point of order, but has been directed in support of the policy proposed by the amendment. The President has the power now to withdraw the troops that are there if he cares to exercise it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The President will not withdraw the troops. While the canal is being constructed there is nothing for them to do. There are a thousand men on the Isthmus with no occupation, with no means for occupying their time, and they can be utilized in policing the canal at the saving of $200,000 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] that he will be glad to hear the question discussed, not upon the merits but relative to the point of order, and in that discussion he would like them to treat of the question as to whether or not the President, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, has the right to send troops there with or without this section and can use them for that purpose. Recently the troops were used for similar purposes, if the Chair is informed, on the border of Texas.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was not discussing the point of order, Mr. Chairman. I was making a statement to the gentleman from Indiana before we came to the discussion of the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask some gentleman whether it is the plan now to make the Canal Zone a mere military reservation?

Mr. CANNON. I hope so.

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman that the Secretary of War, in a hearing before the Committee on Military Affairs stated it was the purpose of the War Department to send to the Canal Zone about 7,000 troops, and if that is done I take it that would make it very largely a military reservation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, when we passed the Adamson bill through the House——

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman permit me just a moment as to the discussion of the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOP. Instead of making a point of order just now, I will reserve it, in order to open up the discussion some of the gentlemen wish to have on it. I beg pardon for interrupting the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. The fact is, I saw the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from New York trying to reach an agreement, and pending that I thought I would try to get some information.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this provision was inserted after consultation with the officers in charge of the construction of the canal. A thousand soldiers have been sent to the Isthmus. They have no occupation, no way of occupying their time, no kind of amusement or entertainment. If they could be utilized in this way, they would be kept out of mischief and they will be paid the extra-duty pay, and after that pay is given to them we would still save $200,000 a year in the policing of the canal. Those in charge of the construction of the canal believe that as time goes on it is much more desirable to utilize the troops that are there for the policing of the various parts of it rather than to rely upon civilians. It seemed a way to utilize troops that were there with no occupation. It was believed it would improve the efficiency of the policing of the canal and would result in this saving and the committee believed, under all those circumstances, that it was highly desirable and a wise thing to include this provision in the bill. It is done simply and purely in the interests of economy and efficient protection in the policing of the canal. As soon as the canal is completed I understand the intention is to have it controlled by a military power. We simply advance a year or two and get the benefit of the saving. The committee hopes that under the circumstances, with the facts before the committee, objection will not be made to the provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not heard the point of order discussed.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, after what the gentleman from New York has said about the purpose of this provision, even though it be new legislation, I am not disposed to insist on the point of order. I am convinced that it is necessary and should be enacted at this time.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment as soon as this matter is disposed of.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] may have reported for the information of the committee the amendment which he suggested.

Mr. HAY. I understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserved a point of order.

Mr. MANN. I reserved it for the purpose of obtaining information. I reserved it, and I am disposed to insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "officers"——

Mr. MANN. After the word "officers" where?

Mr. HAY. In line 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "officers," in line 3, page 167, insert the following: "in accordance with the provisions of existing law."

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, that would apply only to officers and not to enlisted men. It seems to me that should belong after the word "Army."

Mr. HAY. We do not want it to apply to anybody except the officers. Enlisted men are not detailed. It is the officers who are detailed, and what I desire to do is to provide that these officers detailed under this provision in the bill should be detailed just as other officers are detailed from their commands—that is, for four years.

Mr. CULLOP. Then if the gentleman leaves the amendment at that place he will see that in reading it it is ambiguous.

Mr. HAY. I do not see how it should apply to others than the officers. It would read:

The President is hereby authorized and directed to detail officers in accordance with the provisions of existing law and enlisted men of the Regular Army.

Mr. CULLOP. Is there not going to be some punctuation or something after it?

Mr. MANN. That covers it.

Mr. Chairman, as I understood the gentleman, he is under the impression now on the Canal Zone as police instead of civil police without interfering with the present arrangement of the companies incident to the military occupation there. It must be perfectly patent to anyone that the enlisted men and officers of these companies located in camp are not in a situation to act as policemen on the zone and that you would practically have to break camp and locate them in the towns, which you could not ask enlisted men to do unless you paid them extra for it, with no provision or authorization for paying them extra for it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the law they would get the extra-duty pay.

Mr. MANN. Extra-duty pay, yes; but here is a man who is subsisted by the Government in camp. He can not remain in camp down there and perform the duty at night in Colon and other towns in Panama.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The intention is to have these men located in different places. There is ample provision for them.

Mr. MANN. If you locate a company, that means a military camp in that place and it would cost more than the police cost now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is in accordance with the belief that is entertained down there.

Mr. MANN. Let us be frank about it. The opinion of the people there is that the matter of expense cuts no ice. They have reached the conclusion—and perhaps they are right about it—that no private citizen has any right to be anywhere on the Canal Zone and that it ought to be policed by the military authorities for the purpose of keeping people back at the point of the bayonet, not merely by police officers. The Adamson bill that came into the House, representing their views, expressly provided that it should be a misdemeanor or a crime for any person to be found on the Canal Zone without special authority.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, without questioning whether or not it shall be the ultimate intention of these gentlemen to have practically a military reservation there, the matter of using these soldiers for police duty came up entirely apart from any question of that kind, and, as I now recall, it came up as the result of a suggestion made by some member of the committee.

It was then stated that it was believed that it could be done and effect a saving, and the economical side was the side that was chiefly discussed and considered.

Mr. MANN. As a matter of fact, the men on the Canal Zone are not the Army at all.

Mr. SHERLEY. I had in mind Col. Goethals, who has not only acted there in charge of the actual construction, but I think also has the viewpoint that the gentleman has expressed, of having the military side of the canal not lost sight of in the future.

Mr. MANN. The people who represent us on the military arm there are the marines.

Mr. SHERLEY. Technically, yes; but we were not speaking of that. The point I want to make is that the consideration of this was quite apart from the more fundamental question of framing the government that is to be maintained there.

Mr. MANN. That may be a part of it, but not on the part of the people of the Canal Zone.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am quite sure it was, because the suggestion discussed by the committee was from the standpoint of economics and not of policy.

Mr. MANN. I doubt very much whether this is economical.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The estimate was reduced upon the calculation made, and there were two reasons. The economy of this was not the only reason. It was important not only in the towns, but they are getting to the point in the completion of the locks and other works where the statement was made that it would be very desirable to have them policed and controlled by soldiers.

Mr. MANN. That may be important; I do not know that it is not; but I think there is no hurry about that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say this to the gentleman, that provision was made for a certain number of special officers—plain-clothes men——

Mr. MANN. I think whoever has authority of the Canal Zone, in charge as the chief officer, ought to have control over the police in any event.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He ought to have it now.

Mr. MANN. You take it a great deal further away from him by this provision. The chief engineer of the canal would have absolutely no control over the police on the zone and no control over the enforcement of the regulations. It would be determined purely by the military officers, who are unaccustomed to enforcing the civil law. I do not think it is desirable.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman will observe that in lines 6 and 7 it is proposed that they shall perform the duties of peace officers under the laws thereof, the idea being that thereby they would be subject, as the present officers are, to the head authority of the zone.

Mr. MANN. Not at all; that does not mean that. It means that they could arrest a man for violating the law. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If I thought that it was going to take away the control from the man that had charge of the construction, I would not be in favor of it.

Mr. MANN. I think that perhaps when the canal is completed something of this sort ought to be had, but the Adamson bill provides for a reorganization, and I think it is quite sufficient, and it will soon be a law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, has this paragraph been held to be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not ruled on it yet, but is prepared to rule. The Chair is of the opinion that while the paragraph is meritorious it is against the rule of the House, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, was the point of order made against the paragraph or the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Virginia was only read for information.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the point of order was to the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk, as a new paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 167, line 2, after the figures "$300,000," insert the following new paragraph:

"The President is authorized and directed to create a commission, to consist of one member of the Isthmian Canal Commission, three members of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, and the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor, to inquire into and report upon the most approved ways and means of utilizing the Panama Canal and the territory adjacent thereto within the Canal Zone; to foster, promote, and develop the mining, manufacturing, shipping, and fishery industries, the labor interests, and transportation facilities of the United States; and to secure for the commerce and industry of the United States a fair and full return upon the investment made by the United States in the construction of the canal; and for the purposes hereof the President is empowered to use so much as may be necessary of the moneys appropriated by this act from the departments of civil administration and law."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make or reserve for a few moments the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to address the committee for a few moments.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will not discuss the point of order, in view of the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am willing to reserve a point of order, and permit the gentleman to address the Chair.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, why did we build the Panama Canal? Was it to provide a passageway for our warships to get hastily from one ocean to the other? Was it to improve our commercial intercourse with foreign nations? Did we intend that it should serve equally for commerce and war? Or was it a philanthropic enterprise? The Adamson bill, providing for the government of the Canal Zone, does not adequately answer these questions, and the sundry civil bill, now under consideration, makes provision for fortifications and maintenance and practically gives notice to commerce that it must look out for itself. There is no provision to encourage commerce or agriculture in this bill.

On several occasions during the discussion of the Adamson bill I endeavored to obtain light upon the interest which agriculture, commerce, and industry have in the canal without any very great amount of satisfaction. It was not made clear by anyone that the trade of the United States was to have any special benefit as a result of the construction of the canal, except as it would arise from the preference given to American ships—a preference with which I fully agree. But it seemed clear that the Canal Zone was to be amply fortified and was to be made a military reservation. That impression has been confirmed during the discussion of the present or sundry civil bill. The distinguished chief engineer of the canal and a majority of his associates of the Isthmian Canal Commission supported the fortifications plan, and their recommendations have thus far been potent with Congress. Hence the inquiry: Why did we build the Panama Canal?

AN ENGINEERING MASTER STROKE.

No one who has visited the Isthmus will deny the monumental character of the work. The construction of the canal is conceded to be the engineering master stroke of the century. We may differ regarding the purpose of it or as to the methods of utilizing it, but there has been no dissenting voice, in the United States at least, as to the glory of its achievement. Political contentions and differences made difficult the work of organization under the great civil engineers who first took up the stupendous task after its abandonment by the French, but with due credit to Wallace, Shonts, and Stevens we all agree in paying tribute to the Isthmian Canal Commission as at present constituted for the skill, efficiency, and integrity with which it has forwarded the project now approaching completion. The practical accomplishments of the commission have fully justified the faith of the country in the United States Army engineers. We agree that the War Department and the country were fortunate in the selection of Col. George W. Goethals as the chief engineer of the commission. In his more than five years of firm and intelligent direction of the canal project Col. Goethals has justly earned the plaudits of Congress and the people. His fine generalship has frequently been commented upon in the House.

THE BUILDERS OF THE CANAL.

Associated with him in the commission were men of exceptional ability who are not so well known to the public, but the quality of whose service has been such as to make effective the splendid organization that now prevails.

These men knew how to take orders as well as to give them. In this they have contributed to discipline and efficiency in one of the most trying assignments ever imposed upon officers of the Government. They went to their work in hip boots, and they wore them in the jungle and the mud. They took their families with them, and they stood by their guns in torrid weather and in rain until now their great work is almost done.

With their distinguished leader they will finish the work and turn it over to the United States. Lieut. Col. H. F. Hodges, the energetic and devoted second in command; Lieut. Col. D. D. Gaillard, of the central division, who directed the work through the great Culebra Cut; Lieut. Col. W. L. Sibert, of the Atlantic division, who constructed the Gatun Dam; the Navy's representative on the commission, H. H. Rousseau, assistant to the chief engineer; the famed Col. William C. Gorgas, head of the department of sanitation; and the Hon. Maurice H. Thatcher, head of the department of civil administration. These are the leaders into whose hands the Government entrusted the great responsibility of completing this work of the centuries triumphantly and without scandal. And to our everlasting credit as a Nation they are doing it as directed.

THE GLORY IN COMMERCE, NOT WAR.

If time permitted and the list were not so long, I should like also to speak of the chiefs of the various subdivisions of the work. The scientists who have devoted themselves to the prevention of disease, the guardians and distributors of supplies, the mechanical geniuses who have made new strides in engineering and labor-saving devices, the conservitors of domestic peace and order, and the persistent and patriotic mechanics who have taken "a home pride" in their work on the Isthmus. Whether they cut through the jungle, labored along the railroad or on the dredges; whether in the shops or out in the open; whether they tended the sick or conducted the burial rites; they all participated in the consummation which has made Americans proud of them. Devol, Williamson, Wilson, Smith, and Feuille are amongst the names that are now familiarly associated with the Panama Canal.

But thousands of workmen who played a noble part in the great work will soon return to their homes and to new employment in the States. Will the glory of their service be in the consciousness that they reared fortifications to show the Nation's fighting qualities, or will it be in the knowledge that they have opened up a new avenue of commercial communication with the world? What was our purpose in sending them to build the Panama Canal? To involve us in war or to improve and extend the blessings of peace? If it was to show our fighting qualities, we need not have spent so much of our blood and treasure, for a much easier way could have been found to have the chip knocked off our shoulder. If we built it to add to the Nation's commercial prestige, then we should demand the commercial advantages which belong to the United States by virtue of its undertaking. It is fair and desirable that we should police the canal, that we should be prepared to defend it on land or sea, but there is no war in sight, except a trade war in which the odds are already with our competitors.

HAMPERED BY TREATIES.

We have had a generous discussion of treaty obligations, engineering problems, questions of toll, the necessity for courts and administrative offices, as well as of fortifications and military and naval supervision and oversight, all of which, with the exception of tolls, will require expenditure on the part of the Government; but we have had scant information as to any of the methods by which we are to derive revenue from the canal or make it of advantage to the agricultural, the commercial, and the industrial interests. We have thrashed over the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850, and we have generally agreed, I think, notwithstanding the conditions which induced us to make that treaty in 1850, that it has proven to be about as foolish an agreement as the United States ever made with any nation. No matter what the circumstances of its making, the outcome of that treaty was to place the United States in the position of being unable to own and operate a canal in its own name without inviting every other nation to use the canal on equal terms. In that treaty we told Great Britain, in effect, that if we ever spent $400,000,000, or any other amount, upon a canal linking up the two oceans, she and all other nations would forever be our guests in the use of it, while we would maintain and keep it in order for their benefit. The Hay-Pauncefote treaty of 1901 was an effort to have Great Britain yield us some leeway in order that we might at least become the owners and constructors of the canal, but the general question of our right to use it for our own benefit was left substantially as wide open as it was in the treaty of 1850. The great lawyers of Congress have differed as to the terms of the treaties and as to the meaning and effect of presidential proclamations and agreements with Colombia and Panama, but there is still reason to believe that there are many and important problems to be solved before the people of the United States fully realize their responsibility in the ownership and operation of the canal.

ORGANIC LAW HAD COMMERCE IN VIEW.

In the endeavor to ascertain the purpose for which the canal was built we must recur to the act of Congress which authorized it—the so-called Spooner Act of June 29, 1902. This important piece of legislation, which was enacted after the Spanish-American War and the celebrated cruise of the Oregon around the Horn, was entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans." And the second section of it which authorized the President to acquire the canal strip provided that the canal to be constructed should be—of such depth and capacity as will afford convenient passage of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use from the Carribean Sea to the Pacific Ocean.

And section 3 amplified the foregoing provision somewhat by providing as follows:

Such canal shall be of sufficient capacity and depth as shall afford convenient passage for vessels of the largest tonnage and greatest draft now in use, and such as may be reasonably anticipated, and shall be supplied with all necessary locks and other appliances to meet the necessities of vessels passing through the same from ocean to ocean; and he—shall also cause to be constructed such safe and commodious harbors at the termini of said canal, and make such provisions for defense as may be necessary for the safety and protection of said canal and harbors. That the President is authorized for the purposes aforesaid to employ such persons as he may deem necessary, and to fix their compensation.

These extracts from the organic law of the canal give us the most authentic clue as to the purpose of it, and I respectfully submit that the inference to be drawn from the language of the act is that it was to provide for ships of commerce and that fortifications, such as are now proposed, were not contemplated, since the original cost of the canal, fixed by the act, was limited to $130,000,000 instead of the $375,000,000 since spent upon it.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZING FOR BUSINESS.

At the time of the passage of the act we were closing up a foreign war and were returning to the problems of peace. We were beginning to talk about the expansion of trade resulting from our great success in manufactures. Our food products were going abroad, and while our home market was undeniably great, we were rapidly becoming an export nation. Great Britain, regardless of her free-trade proclivities, and Germany, with a decided inclination toward protection, were rivals for supremacy in the markets of South America, and we were beginning to open our eyes to the wisdom of entering the competition with them. The business men of the country, and particularly such organizations as the National Association of Manufacturers, were feeling their way in European and Asiatic markets, and they renewed with vigor the agitation for the creation of a department of commerce, or some similar body, with a seat at the Cabinet table of the President, which could speak for trade, as the Department of Agriculture had spoken for the great farming interests of the country. The agitation for the passage of an Isthmian Canal bill went hand in hand in many respects with the agitation which resulted in the passage of the act of February 14, 1903, creating the Department of Commerce and Labor. With the organization of this arm of the Government bringing together various disjointed and floating bureaus for the common purpose of improving the commercial and industrial conditions, it seemed as if the one great incentive for cutting a canal through the Isthmus had been duly launched.

WANTED TO PROMOTE TRADE.

The Panama Canal act provided that the purpose of the canal was—

To afford convenient passage for vessels of the largest tonnage and greatest draft now in use, and such as may be reasonably anticipated.

Not war vessels, which are built for speed and fighting purposes, but vessels of the "largest tonnage" of this and future generations. And when we speak of the tonnage of a vessel we ordinarily refer to her commerce or her commerce-carrying capacity.

So, considering the Panama Canal act in conjunction with the organic law of the Department of Commerce and Labor enacted eight months later, we find Congress following up the broadening commercial purpose of the one by a well-defined and well-organized effort to derive the advantages which were expected to ensue from the other. It was intended that the business man of the country should be put in a position to improve his trade relations with foreign countries. The purpose of the Department of Commerce and Labor as set out in the organic law fully supports this contention:

It shall be the province and duty of said department—

Says the act of February 14, 1903—

to foster, promote, and develop the foreign and domestic commerce, the mining, manufacturing, shipping, and fishery industries, the labor interests, and the transportation facilities of the United States; and to this end it shall be vested with jurisdiction and control of the departments, bureaus, offices, and branches of the public service hereinafter specified, and with such other powers and duties as may be prescribed by law.

A SETBACK FOR MANUFACTURES.

With the passage of an act so directly promising to the substantial growth of business it was believed that the Government had at last taken the initiative in a systematic development of trade, as it had already taken it in the development of agriculture. We are all familiar with the history of the Department of Commerce and Labor, of the daily grind of its dull routine in matters of navigation, immigration, corporation and steamboat and boiler inspection, coast and geodetic work, and the accumulation of labor statistics, and we have noted the efforts of several of the excellent Secretaries of the department to carry into effect the purpose of the organic law which was to "foster, promote, and develop the foreign and domestic commerce." It is no reflection upon any of the four Secretaries who have been at the head of the department to say that thus far, apart from the deadening details which the work of the bureau has imposed upon them and the one or two attempts to organize commercial bodies, no great or signal work of promotion has been undertaken. Special agents have been sent abroad to inquire into trade conditions and to make report for the benefit of the American producer, but all this has been dependent upon the will of Congress, which has not been generous to the department in this respect. The very entering wedge, if any great promotion work was to be done by the department, was the Bureau of Manufactures, the purpose of which is so comprehensive as to have been made ridiculous by the paltry appropriation which was allotted to it when it was finally authorized to begin business in 1905.

The Bureau of Manufactures was charged—to foster, promote, and develop the various manufacturing industries of the United States, and markets for the same at home and abroad, domestic and foreign, by gathering, compiling, publishing, and supplying all available and useful information concerning such industries and such markets, and by such other methods and means as may be prescribed by the Secretary or provided by law.

My recollection is that Congress permitted the organization of this bureau by authorizing for its use in its comprehensive undertakings the munificent (?) sum of $11,400. Certain statistical and editorial work involving a much larger expense was subsequently turned over to the bureau, but in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill recently brought in and passed by the Democratic majority of the House no provision was made for the Bureau of Manufactures, nor for the very important Bureau of Statistics, which has been of long and useful service to the Government and to the business community. A consolidation of bureaus has been proposed, but the high purposes of the Bureau of Manufactures are ignored, and this one promising stepping stone for promotion in the Department of Commerce and Labor is eliminated.

A TREMENDOUS MAINTENANCE COST.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in thus drawing attention to the purposes of the Department of Commerce and Labor I am not drifting very far away from the Panama Canal. The Departments of Agriculture and of Commerce and Labor represent, in theory at least, the breadwinners of the Nation, the wealth producers, the employers, and the employed. The Government derives its revenue from these sources, and most of the other departments of the Government are dependent upon them. Not only the soldiers and the sailors must look to these sources for revenue, but also the pensioners, whom it is our constant duty to sustain. It is not only fair but timely, therefore, since we are going into the fortification business, which means a great maintenance cost on the Canal Zone, to inquire whether the canal itself is to bear a portion of this expense. I am familiar with the answer about tolls. We are going to give free passage to American ships, and, whether it involves us in complications with foreign nations or not, we intend to levy a toll upon foreign ships.

The best estimate of tonnage through the canal, both foreign and domestic, however, does not exceed 10,000,000 tons, and that is believed to be a very high estimate, indeed. If we get $1 a ton on that proportion of the tonnage which is foreign, we will still have to provide for the cost of maintenance, commissary, sanitation, and subsistence from $3,000,000 to $4,000,000 per annum, and from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000, if we fortify and arm the canal, as proposed. Since the problem of "making both ends meet" thus forcibly presents itself, I hope it may not be unstatesmanlike to direct attention to the wisdom of so starting this great American enterprise that it will bring back to the people of the United States some return commensurate with the investment they have made. Most of them, I believe, will not take kindly to a program which means that we are to operate the canal at our expense for the benefit of other nations and get nothing out of it for ourselves. And how are we going to do this without encouraging commerce and agriculture?

CUTTING OUT AGRICULTURE.

I know the agricultural prospects of the Isthmus are not as attractive as they are in the Middle West, but the major part of the 10-mile strip will be above water and is capable of cultivation. The 2,500 men who will remain to operate the canal, and their families, in addition to the soldiery, estimated to number from 5,000 to 8,000 men, will have to be fed. The hospital patients will continue to need fresh milk and vegetables.

And since all food, with slight exceptions, is now forwarded from the States and is necessarily storage food, why not encourage the raising of fresh food—vegetables and fruits at least—upon the Isthmus? To that query the Adamson bill gives answer that it is undesirable even to have inhabitants upon the zone. If found anywhere within the 10-mile strip they are to be arrested subject to suspicion of intent to blow up the works.

Mr. Chairman, I have no immediate fear that anyone is going to blow up the Panama Canal. It is not likely that any foreign nation would thus want to spite its own face, and it is inconceivable that anyone in the environment of Panama would want to attempt it or would be permitted to do it. On the contrary, there is reason to believe that cultivation of the Isthmus and the encouragement of population under proper regulations would add to the security of the canal. Col. Gorgas, in his testimony before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, said the cultivation of the zone would help sanitation rather than hinder it. The commission conducts a large dairy near the Ancon Hospital and also an experimental vegetable garden.

With the view of giving agriculture a further foothold on the Isthmus I offered to the sundry civil bill item of $11,000,000 for skilled and unskilled labor on the Isthmus, the following amendment:

Provided, That so much of this appropriation as may be necessary, not to exceed $15,000, shall be expended in soil improvement and agricultural development in accordance with the recommendations and conclusions submitted in report No. 95, United States Department of Agriculture, entitled "The agricultural possibilities of the Canal Zone."

I wanted to see if the committee was willing to permit of the use of $15,000 of the $11,000,000 to enable the people on the Isthmus to help provide food for themselves. The experts of the Department of Agriculture had said it was feasible. They made a reconnoissance survey in October, 1911, which indicated that while there were agricultural possibilities on the zone, and cattle and poultry thrived there, fertilization as we understand it in the States had never been attempted. My own inquiries as to the fine herd whose milk supplies the patients at the Ancon Hospital, showed that they were dependent upon the artificially watered coarse grasses of the vicinity, and that there had been no experiments in the use of clover or alfalfa or other pasture grasses so familiar to us. But my amendment to extend the usefulness of the commission on these lines was promptly objected to and ruled out by the Chair, indicating that for the present the policy of depopulating the zone is to be sustained, and that, except as to the canal and fortifications, the 10-mile strip is to remain a jungle.

NO COMMERCE INQUIRY.

When we reached the item authorizing the President to detail officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army, not to exceed four companies, to aid in policing the zone, I offered another amendment. This time it had to do with the broad problem of commerce, and was as follows:

And the President is also authorized and directed to create a commission, to consist of one member of the Isthmian Canal Commission, three members of the National Chamber of Commerce, and the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor, to inquire into and report upon the most approved ways and means of utilizing the Panama Canal and the territory adjacent thereto within the Canal Zone, to foster, promote, and develop the mining, manufacturing, shipping, and fisheries industries, the labor interests, and transportation facilities of the United States, and to provide for the commerce and industry of the United States a fair and full return upon the investment made by the United States in the construction of the canal. For the purposes hereof the President is empowered to use so much as may be necessary of the moneys appropriated by this act from the departments of civil administration and law.

The purpose of this second amendment was to obtain some recognition, if possible, for the commercial interests through the Department of Commerce and Labor, but it was also objected to and ruled out by the Chair.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in view of the contemplated coordination of the canal and commerce, it would seem as if we ought to provide in some way for the business man who wants to do business on or through the canal. It is patent to anyone who visits the zone and stops overnight at the Tivoli Hotel that foreign nations have their representatives on the ground. It is obvious also that, so far as they have been able to do so, they have made Panama a basis for operations in the contest for the commerce of South America. We are already buying extensively from those foreign agents ourselves.

HELP OUR OWN MERCHANTS.

To what extent have we encouraged American business interests to make business by or through the canal? We know that Germany and Great Britain are already entrenched in the countries south of Panama, and that they have been more successful in making friends with the 60,000,000 of people there than we have. What warehouse facilities have we offered Americans? What banking factors or means of exchange? What opportunities to study the language and customs of South Americans or to show our samples? I do not insist that it is the business of the Government to do all these things for the individual business man, but I do believe that by our decision to make the zone a military reservation we are helping to shut the door in his face. We have certainly prepared to take away from him the small incentive we threw him in 1903, when the Bureau of Manufactures was created in the Department of Commerce and Labor. The bureau never had a fair show to do things, but with the proper spirit directing it and fair support from Congress, it could have been made a guiding star through the Panama Canal to the trade of South America. That, among other things, is what we hoped it would be, but now when the great trade channel of the world is to be opened under American auspices our official promoter is to be taken away and commerce is to do business through the War Department.

All this may work out to the satisfaction of Congress and the people. I do not say it will not, for the majority of the House has spoken; but I believe it was due to Congress and the country that in providing for the government and maintenance of the canal we should have had more light upon its possibilities for the fostering, promotion, and development of the trade and commerce of the United States. In this the producer, the consumer, and the taxpayer of the country have a mutual interest.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the land over which we have jurisdiction on the Isthmus of Panama is about 40 miles long and 10 miles wide. More than half of that will be under water after the canal is finished, and more than half of what remains is a jungle and always will be and ought to be. I do not think the history of the United States in regard to tropical countries, together with the amount of undeveloped land in our country, is such as to warrant us in any very extravagant expenditure of money looking to the development of agriculture on the Isthmus of Panama. Provision has not been made to exclude all of the proper trade conditions that will arise as a result of the canal. Conditions have not been made and are not contemplated that will create such a military situation as will destroy the benefits that are to be derived from the canal commercially; but a common-sense view has been taken by nearly everyone I have ever seen who has visited the canal and who knows something of the conditions of climate and people there that it is far from wise to expend any great amount of money in a Utopian effort to create there a civilization such as people living in this Temperate Zone know or desire.

The matter being foreign to the bill, I now make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Twelfth. For material, supplies, equipment, construction, and repairs of buildings, medical aid and support of the insane and of indigent persons permanently disabled, while in the line of duty and in the employ of the Isthmian Canal Commission, from earning a livelihood, and contingent expenses of the department of sanitation on the Isthmus, $500,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for or toward the construction of a new quarantine station.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I again call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the discussion we had some while ago as to the necessity of making these appropriations available for those works that were carried in the recent Adamson bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will offer the following amendment to take care of that situation.

The Clerk read as follow:

Amend, page 168, after line 9, by inserting:

"The foregoing sums, so far as necessary, shall be available for necessary dry dock, coaling plant, shops, and other facilities for repairing and supplying vessels and necessary wharves, sheds, and other terminal facilities, and for the consolidation and preservation of the files of papers and other records which have accumulated or may accumulate during the construction of the canal and needed or useful or having a permanent value or historical interest, as may be determined by the chairman of the Isthmian Canal Commission."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know whether that will authorize the use of these appropriations for those public works which are contemplated or included in the Adamson bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I believe so; yes; and as that bill will probably become a law after the appropriation bill, it is to make the two fit together.

Mr. MANN. That is what I understood.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of the foregoing appropriations for the Isthmian Canal shall be applied to the payment of allowances for longevity service or lay-over days other than such as may have accumulated under existing orders of the commission prior to July 1, 1909.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment, to strike out the last paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after line 20, page 169.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, in view of the climatic conditions in Panama, that this longevity pay should not be stricken out. That is all I desire to say, but it does seem to me there ought to be some incentive or extra reward paid to men who work on the canal under the conditions as they are there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I only wish to say this: The compensation of employees on the canal is from 40 to 75 per cent in excess of what it is in this country. They are furnished with quarters, light, fuel, ice at cost, medical treatment, and assistance free, and certain transportation free, and leave of absence with pay. They are the best cared for and the best paid employees in the world. This matter was thrashed out thoroughly a few years ago, and as the result of the investigation made Congress determined not to permit the extension of longevity and lay-over pay.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Is it not true in the early days of the work on the canal that it was difficult to obtain sufficient men to do the work, and that the promise of longevity pay was made by the department in order to get the men to go there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I do not believe that is true.

About 1909 longevity and overtime pay was given to three or four classes of employees. An investigation disclosed it would cost, I do not recall exactly, but I think it would have added 25 per cent to the cost of the building of the canal. It was a gross injustice to give to the steam-shovel men, the railroad men, and some other classes of employees that which was not given to other classes. Congress had to do one thing or the other—treat the employees all alike by extending the longevity and lay-over-time privileges to all or else stop. It decided in view of the extraordinarily favorable conditions under which men were working on the canal to stop it at the point indicated.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. It could scarcely have cost 25 per cent for building the canal. I think the total amount for longevity pay at the highest point it reached was only 12 per cent and that only applied to a certain class of labor on the canal, and it certainly could not have reached the rate of 25 per cent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under Executive order longevity pay was allowed until the employee reached a rate of compensation 25 per cent in excess of the basis of the employment in which he was engaged. The reason it only reached 12½ per cent of the pay roll of those who were enjoying it was because they had not all enjoyed it a sufficient length of time to obtain the maximum of longevity. The employees of the canal—and I speak with accurate knowledge—are the best treated and the best paid employees in the world. I have three times visited the canal and I know such to be so.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is it not a fact that treatment and good pay has secured the most efficient men to do work of that kind which has contributed much to the successful construction of the canal?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; they are selected men, and there is a long waiting list in Washington. I have dozens of applications from desirable mechanics in my district who are anxious to go there and who can not. The men who have been there have remained a long time. They have come back to the States, some of them, in comfortable circumstances.

I think it would be a gross injustice to the people of the United States to attempt to reestablish that system and take out of the Treasury unnecessarily, I think, something in the neighborhood of $40,000,000 additional to what is now being paid—that is, it would add to the cost of the canal about 25 per cent of the labor cost.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. This bill only provides an appropriation of about $11,000,000, I think, for skilled and unskilled labor for the fiscal year. Twelve per cent being the highest longevity, it would not amount to the sum the gentleman stated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, but the gentleman overlooks that this Executive order is still in force, and the minute this provision is stricken out of this bill the employees would be entitled to the accumulated longevity pay since 1909, and it would increase by 25 per cent the compensation of men who now receive from 40 to 75 per cent in excess of the same compensation of the same line of work in the United States in addition to the innumerable other advantages which they receive. They have their quarters; they have their food practically at cost; light, fuel, churches are maintained for them, clergymen are maintained for them, clubhouses are maintained for them, lodge rooms are maintained for them; they have free schools for their children, free medicines, and medical attendance. They receive treatment for their families at a cost of $1 a visit from the physicians.

If they wish to send them to the hospitals, the pay is insignificant compared with the pay in the United States. They receive transportation across the Isthmus once a month. They receive transportation to and from the Isthmus on their annual leave. Those on the monthly roll receive six weeks' leave with pay, and those on the per diem roll now receive two weeks with pay. They simply purchase their food and clothing. They buy their food practically at cost. A line of hotels is maintained by the Canal Commission and furnishes excellent food more cheaply than it can be furnished in the United States.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is it not due to the fact that they are not at the mercy of a trust there, only so far as the Government having to buy food from it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I believe the Government has been liberal and has treated its employees well. It was necessary for it to do so. We have a splendid aggregation of employees there, but I do not believe we will be justified in adding this burden to the Treasury for their benefit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the supply houses there, departments of the Government, although they are furnishing supplies to the employees of the canal cheaper than they can be bought in the United States, add a sufficient amount for those supplies to pay for all their buildings and cold-storage houses, and the employees there are really paying for all the expense the Government has gone to in regard to them?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I was so informed when I was down there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Food supplies are sold at some increase over what they are purchased for, but the Government of the United States is purchasing supplies to feed an army of 40,000 people, and so they purchase in great quantities and can do it cheaper than an individual.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is a sufficient amount to cover the cost of these buildings.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Even so, it is much less than the individual could purchase the supplies for elsewhere.

Mr. SABATH. The Government does not charge any rental for the buildings nor for light nor coal——

Mr. FITZGERALD. It furnishes quarters.

Mr. SABATH. And if I am not mistaken, only the cost of help is added to the cost of the materials sold to employees.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think a little more.

Mr. SABATH. About 1 per cent or 2 per cent more.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I was informed, and I never heard it denied, that they did charge a sufficient amount to pay for all those cold-storage buildings down there.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the gentleman is accurate to this extent, that there is a charge that will in time cover the cost; that is a direct incident of the commissary department. They not only do that, but they ought to do that. But, as a result of their efforts, they are giving to the workmen their food at a price less than it could be bought for here in the States.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is true; but I am also informed they have paid all the expense of those buildings.

Mr. SHERLEY. If that is true, then there will be an instant reduction in the cost of food.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It has been made, I understand.

Mr. SHERLEY. In other words, the cost of the food has been figured mathematically at what it costs the Government plus the administration of taking it there and delivering it to the purchasers.

Mr. SABATH. That is about all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. In order to avoid any technicality, the Chair will call attention to the fact that the amendment proposes to strike out all after line 20 on page 169. The Chair takes it for granted that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], who introduced the amendment, did not mean thereby to strike out all the rest of the page.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The paragraph on page 169.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is making the suggestion out of an abundance of caution. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Seacoast batteries: For construction of seacoast batteries on the Canal Zone, $1,000,000, and any balances of the appropriation for the construction of seacoast batteries on the Canal Zone made by the act of March 4, 1911.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the misspelling of the word "seacoast," on line 11, the first word on the line, and ask to have it amended by the insertion of the letter "a" after the letter "o." That is the first word of line 11, page 170.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Field fortifications and camps: For the construction of field fortifications and the preparation of camp sites on the Canal Zone, $200,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, to constitute an additional paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 170, after line 23, by inserting the following paragraph:

"For the construction on the Panama Canal Zone of accommodations for 3 regiments of Infantry, 1 squadron of Cavalry, 1 battalion of Field (mountain) Artillery, and 12 companies of Coast Artillery, including water, sewer, and lighting systems, roads, walks, and refrigerating plant, $3,587,500."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this is in pursuance of a supplemental estimate, forwarded in due form through the Treasury Department, by the Secretary of War. I shall content myself with reading House Document No. 689, second session of the Sixty-second Congress, and incorporate it in the RECORD, without objection. It is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 6, 1912.

The honorable SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith, for transmission to Congress, an additional estimate of an appropriation of $3,587,500 required by the War Department for the service of the fiscal year 1913 for the construction on the Panama Canal Zone of accommodations for 3 regiments of Infantry, 1 squadron of Cavalry, 1 battalion of Field (mountain) Artillery, and 12 companies of Coast Artillery, including water, sewer, and lighting systems, roads, walks, and refrigerating plant.

The imperative necessity for the submission of this estimate and the reason for its omission from the regular annual estimates submitted in October last are explained in the footnote to the estimate and in the accompanying memorandum of the Chief of Staff, which is made a part of the estimate.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT SHAW OLIVER,
Acting Secretary of War.

[Memorandum for the Secretary of War.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
Washington, March 29, 1912.

Relative to the estimate for $3,587,500, barracks and quarters necessary for the garrison (Coast Artillery and mobile army) on the Isthmus of Panama, I have recommended, and you have approved, a reduction of the proposed Infantry garrison from four regiments to three, the Cavalry from one regiment to one squadron, and the Field Artillery from one regiment to one battalion, all at full strength, and certain sanitary troops. The Coast Artillery garrison will be 12 companies. The mobile garrison has been reduced to the smallest force which can perform the duties required of that garrison on the Isthmus. It was thought at one time that the canal buildings would become vacant in such numbers that they could be used to quarter a large portion of the garrison for a number of years, but as this was not certain the estimate for barracks and quarters of permanent construction was included in the original estimate for the fortification, which was approved by the President, and on which Congress has already made an appropriation for fortifications. This estimate for a barracks and quarters ($3,587,500) is a part of that estimate (fortifications). We were able to secure canal buildings for one regiment of Infantry only, when it was found that practically no more buildings will be available until the spring of 1914, at which time the canal will be about completed and the garrison should be established on the Isthmus, so that the question of further use of the canal buildings had to be given up. There are also other reasons why it is inadvisable to attempt to use these buildings. The first is that the cost of moving sufficient buildings for a regiment, including their demolition, transfer, and reerection, and the subsequent installation of water, plumbing, the construction of roads, walks, etc., will, according to the estimate of Col. Hodges, of the Isthmian Canal Commission, amount to $300,000 per regiment, whereas the estimates for new buildings of permanent concrete construction, of suitable type, with proper sanitary arrangements, will cost, together with officers' quarters, less than $600,000 per regiment. It can be seen that it would not be economical to utilize the temporary buildings, even if they were to be promptly available, in view of their costing practically 50 per cent of what the permanent buildings would cost, and for the further reason that their life would not be more than 10 or 12 years, as they are most of them old buildings. Finally, there is an even stronger reason than that of economy: Col. Gorgas, the chief sanitary officer of the commission, has urgently recommended that no more troops be sent to the Isthmus until permanent camps, properly drained, with permanent buildings, have been prepared.

For the above reasons, the board has decided that it is best to commence at once the erection of permanent buildings.

After careful consideration a camp site has been selected at a point on high ground, opposite Culebra. The Panama Railroad passes through a section of the tract, and supplies can be economically forwarded. The location is healthful, and one of the coolest on the Isthmus. Such grading as has to be done can be accomplished at a relatively small cost by the use of spoil taken from canal excavation work near at hand.

LEONARD WOOD,
Major General, Chief of Staff.

NOTE.—This estimate is submitted in accordance with instructions of the Secretary of War, conveyed in memorandum of March 14, 1912, from the Chief of Staff, and covers the construction on the Panama Canal Zone of the accommodations required for the Coast Artillery and mobile troops deemed necessary to be stationed within said zone.

The buildings for barracks and quarters are to be of a type suitable for a hot climate, but with the minimum space which it is believed is possible in order to accomplish satisfactory results, the barracks to be of reenforced concrete, under the concentration plan; officers' quarters to be stucco or plaster walls. It is believed that these buildings can be constructed for the sum now asked for by purchasing material and hiring the labor, and will supply the needs of the garrison under normal conditions.

Stables and storehouses have been reduced to a minimum in accordance with instructions, and this estimate has been prepared on the assumption that electric current for power and lighting purposes can be obtained from the plant to be operated for the use of the Panama Canal.

The receipt so recently of the necessary final data and authority rendered it impracticable to include this with the annual estimates submitted for the fiscal year 1913, and the case is too important to admit of another year's delay.

J. B. ALESHIRE,
Quartermaster General United States Army.

I desire also to read from the hearings touching this proposed appropriation. The passage I shall read is to be found on page 1951. I shall not read all the passage, but will read a part of it, and insert such other portions as are material in connection with my remarks. I read:

The CHAIRMAN. Would it not, therefore, be wise to utilize the accommodations that are there now, if they be adequate, for a period of time and until it can be determined as to what would be the best location for these buildings?

Gen. WOOD. Well, we have the statistics, of course, of all the years of operation, and we have studied pretty carefully the different sites. The board finally considered two sites; one was what is known as the savanna country near Panama; you are familiar with that; and the other was the high midland country. It then took up the question of the cost of the various tracts, and it was the feeling that if we went down into the savanna country the area selected might be located in a way which would involve the possible transfer of property to the Republic of Panama, a strip connecting the city with the rest of the country to the south; and then came the question of possible yellow fever or contagious diseases in Panama, and the constant source of danger from being so near to the city; everything considered, we looked upon the highland site as being the best to be used. Frankly, and answering your question without any reservation, I think from a military standpoint and the standpoint of ultimate economy, it would be best to put the whole garrison together. We can undoubtedly use these buildings when they are available, but, as I say, I think the site we have determined upon would be the better place for the troops.

The matter under discussion was the estimate now pending, which I have just read.

Col. Goethals intervenes here:

Col. GOETHALS. The great objection to the use of the buildings is that they would all be on the wrong side of the canal.

Gen. WOOD. And it will cost more in the end to do it.

Mr. SHERLEY. What about the cost of building your barracks with the force now at hand as compared with the cost of building them subsequently when that force is no longer there?

Col. GOETHALS. It would be more economical now than later on.

Gen. WOOD. Twenty per cent at least.

Col. GOETHALS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERLEY. Would it be a sufficient economy to outweigh any saving by virtue of the use of the old buildings for a period of 5 or 10 years?

Col. GOETHALS. Oh, yes.

These buildings on the site that has been chosen are on the south side of the canal at Culebra. The buildings that were referred to are on the north side of the canal.

I do not care to talk longer about it, but it seems to me that now that the labor is there, and under the estimate of the Secretary of War, duly forwarded, and under the official statement of the Chief of Staff, as well as that of the Quartermaster General, and under the statement on examination in the hearings of Gen. Wood and the statement of Col. Goethals, this appropriation ought to be made now. Therefore I move to insert it by amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. If all of the recommendations and estimates of the War Department were to be granted, it would be impossible to supply the money for such purpose, even if the revenues were greatly increased over what they are at present.

We have at present at the Canal Zone in the neighborhood of 5,000 white employees who are American citizens. We have accommodations for them there, suitable quarters, which it has been contemplated could be utilized by the Army after the completion of the canal. In the estimate submitted for fortifications of the canal for the current fiscal year, among the balances to be submitted at some future time, is one for barracks and quarters amounting to $3,687,000. Then, in a note appended by Capt. Embick, of the general staff of the Panama fortification board, is this statement:

Experience with the durability of wooden buildings on the Canal Zone indicates that buildings erected in connection with the construction of the canal can probably be utilized for the accommodation of the permanent garrison for the Canal Zone for a period of about 10 years after the completion of the canal. For this reason an appropriation covering the item of $3,687,000 for barracks and quarters will not be needed for a number of years, but the amount was included in the above table in order to show the total ultimate cost of the project for the fortification of the canal.

When the committee made its investigation this spring as to the sums required for the fortification purposes it was then stated that an estimate would be submitted subsequently for a sum necessary to provide quarters and storehouses for certain troops in the Canal Zone, and that estimate was transmitted on the 8th of April, 1912, aggregating $3,587,500.

After the canal is completed there will be a permanent operating force of about 2,500 men. Among the statements made by those advocating this appropriation at this particular time, I wish to read one brief statement which stands out so prominently as to emphasize the fact that it is unnecessary at this time to take any action to provide these quarters:

The CHAIRMAN. Will there not be sufficient buildings at Gatun, Colon, and Ancon, outside of the flooded districts, in which, by dividing the force at the outset, the troops could be accommodated without the expense incident to the removal of the buildings?

Gen. WOOD. What do you think about that, Col. Goethals?

Col. GOETHALS. I think there would be; there are accommodations now for about 7,000 Americans, and our force would be reduced to 2,500.

What necessity is there to appropriate three and a half million dollars to provide for accommodations for troops when there will be ample accommodations on the completion of the canal for the greater part of those who will be necessary to defend it? Why should these buildings be abandoned? They are suitable and adequate for the American citizens who are building the canal. What objections can be raised against them for housing the troops who are to defend the canal? Who can say that they will not be sufficient and adequate for 10 years? A thousand American soldiers are there now and are occupying quarters built by the French 20 years ago. All of the buildings erected by the Americans since their control of the work are of a better type and more satisfactory than those built by the French.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for three minutes more.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman will take five minutes and let me ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In view of the fact that originally it was contemplated to put the great bulk of troops that were to be there out on the savannas, the other side of the city of Panama, that a change of policy has resulted in plans to concentrate them in the neighborhood of Culebra, and the fact that in the present uncompleted condition of the canal, it may be desirable hereafter to make some other change in the location, it seems to me highly desirable to wait a short time longer, or several years longer, until we can know what policy will be finally determined upon as the permanent policy of the department rather than to embark now on an expenditure of over $3,000,000 for quarters when there will be ample quarters for all troops to be sent to the zone for some time.

My attention has been called to the fact that the department has already selected a distinguished architect in the city of New York and sent him to the Canal Zone for the purpose of planning and designing these quarters. My attention was called to such a statement carried in the daily papers. I hope we are not to have a repetition of what has so frequently happened in these matters, that as soon as it becomes known that a large sum of money is to be expended for barracks and quarters at some place some distinguished architect's services become apparently inevitable, with the resulting criticism, condemnation, and dissatisfaction. For the present, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we can well wait until we know definitely and accurately that the present buildings will not suffice. The mere fact that it would save money to put up these barracks now rather than to wait 10 years from now would be a very bad policy on which to proceed.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman read what Col. Goethals said, and I also read what he said at page 1951. From what page did the gentleman read?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I read from page 1950.

Mr. CANNON. That was a partial statement and from one standpoint.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was sufficient for the purpose I had in mind.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; but on page 1951 there is the final statement, down near the bottom of the page. First we had Gen. Wood and then Col. Goethals. There is perfect agreement that this work ought to be done and done now. Of course the gentleman has that same admiration for Col. Goethals that I have.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Col. Goethals is of the opinion, and I think correctly, that if we are to construct the reservation with barracks and necessary equipment, that would cost eventually $3,500,000 or more, it would be cheaper to do it now than at the end of 10 years; but he also makes the statement that at Gatun and Colon and Ancon there will be ample accommodations for at least 5,000 men. I do not see the very great advantage that would result from this expenditure at this time and the concentration at one point of these many troops rather than the accommodation of them at the three points indicated. They would have to be transported from one place to another at any rate, and I can not justify the policy that contemplates the destruction of entire villages and towns, because there will be no use for them when we will have use for them for these troops unless we incur this very large expenditure at this time. During the coming fall, Mr. Chairman, when the committee visits the canal again, it will be able to take up more carefully the suggestions of the department, to examine more closely their proposed plans, and ascertain accurately for themselves whether the accommodations there will not be sufficient, and then to determine whether it is advisable to enter upon any such expenditure. In view of the information I have of the situation I do not believe we should authorize the work at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON) there were—ayes 10, noes 30.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Armament of fortifications: For the purchase, manufacture, and test of seacoast cannon for coast defense, including their carriages, sights, implements, equipments, and the machinery necessary for the manufacture at the arsenals, to cost ultimately not to exceed $2,324,000, $500,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to make one remark. The vote of the committee touching the amendment that I offered a moment ago was against the amendment. The Secretary of War, the Chief of Staff, the sanitary officer, Col. Gorgas, and Col. Goethals are all agreed from every standpoint of economy and from the standpoint of labor that this work ought to proceed during the coming fiscal year. I apprehend, without knowing what amendments may be placed upon this bill elsewhere, that in the end this appropriation will be made, and I am quite sure it ought to be. But I am in the minority, and of course it would not do any good to issue a defy or to threaten to resign, or do any other outrageous thing. [Laughter.] I think it would not do a bit of good, and therefore I am content that the Clerk should read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition for seacoast cannon, including the necessary experiments in connection therewith, and the machinery necessary for its manufacture at the arsenals, $575,000.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask the gentleman's construction of the word "ammunition." Does it include powder?

Mr. SHERLEY. It does.

Mr. BATHRICK. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 171 by adding at the conclusion of line 7 the following: "Provided, No smokeless powder shall be purchased with moneys herein appropriated."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, this matter was all thrashed out during the consideration of the Navy bill, wherein it was decided that our means of manufacturing smokeless powder are entirely adequate to supply all that is required. I notice that the Senate has amended the naval appropriation bill by providing a large sum of money to extend our facilities in this respect. We have been manufacturing smokeless powder, I desire to remind the committee, at a cost of approximately 43 cents, and we have been paying about 60 cents for it when we got it from private manufacturers. Aside from this, it has been shown in the hearings before the Naval Affairs Committee and the Military Committee that we had a large quantity on hand, a large surplus. For this reason, without going into all this matter that has been thrashed over here so frequently, I desire to have the amendment prevail. I do not believe it is necessary for us to purchase any powder for this particular purpose.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, in the interest of expediting the bill I withdraw the point of order and ask for a vote.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not remember the discussion about this matter. This particular ammunition is authorized at this time so as to be available for the defense of the Panama Canal. I have not had time to look into the matter of whether we can furnish all the smokeless powder needed, but I do not believe that we should take any chance in the matter.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that there is information from officials to be had in the hearings before the Military Affairs Committee and the Naval Affairs Committee that the Government powder mills are operated only one-third of the time. In other words, they can produce two-thirds more powder than they are now producing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is, they are working one shift of 8 hours instead of three shifts of 24 hours.

Mr. BUCHANAN. They are working one shift, and if they need more powder all they have to do is to work more shifts. There is no question but what they can produce this powder at a less expense. The amendment ought to be adopted if you want to save money for the Government, and if you want to give big profits to the Powder Trust the amendment ought to be defeated.

Mr. SIMS. What is there now on the Canal Zone with which to use this powder? Are there any guns or fortifications?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. SIMS. Then why provide the powder?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We are providing for the defenses, and ammunition is one of the provisions we make for that purpose.

Mr. SIMS. There is no probability of fortifications being completed by the end of one year from now which would call for the use of any smokeless powder.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know. It is put in here because it is believed to be imperatively necessary to provide it at this time.

Mr. SIMS. There is no sign of any war there or anywhere else that I can see.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I was not here when the naval bill was under consideration, but I heard the discussion of this subject during the consideration of the fortification bill and the Army bill. I am inclined to think that the Government establishment for the manufacture of smokeless powder will have a good deal more than it can do in supplying the powder that is already expected to be supplied from that quarter. I believe the Naval Committee in the Senate intends to increase the appropriation for the Government establishment to a very considerable degree in order to carry out the policy announced by the House. Of course we have not a very large attendance here. There are not very many Members here, and we have been running through these bills without these questions being interjected into them. I do not propose to have a question like this interjected into this bill without a quorum in the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, I suggest to the gentleman that there is no probability of the amendment prevailing. I did not discuss it because I was sure of that fact.

Mr. MANN. I supposed that the gentleman was going to agree to it.

Mr. SHERLEY. I was not; but I was so sure that it was not going to be agreed to that I decided not to speak to it, and thought in that way to get ahead with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I accept the statement of the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BUCHANAN) there were—ayes 26, noes 27.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, specifically for fortifications and armament thereof for the Isthmian Canal, $2,806,950.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the other day there were certain remarks made in general debate touching the policy of fortifying the canal and the cost that would result from the adoption of that policy. I shall not delay the committee now, but I have in my possession certain data touching the cost of fortifications, and I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request will be granted. [After a pause.] No objection is heard.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The chairman of the Isthmian Canal Commission is authorized to establish a division of records and, as the requirements of the service permit, to consolidate in the custody thereof the files of papers and other records which have accumulated or which may accumulate during the period of the construction of the Isthmian Canal; and he is directed to carefully preserve, properly index, and arrange for use all papers needed or useful in the transaction of current business or having a permanent value or historical interest; and he is authorized to destroy or otherwise dispose of duplications in the files and other papers which are not needed or useful in the transaction of current business and have no permanent value or historical interest and which have been recommended to him for destruction or other disposition by a committee of three competent persons who have personally examined the papers and in connection with their recommendation have submitted a concise statement of the condition and character thereof.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this paragraph and whole section, because it is new legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will reserve his point of order——

Mr. CULLOP. I will reserve the point of order if the gentleman desires to be heard.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there is on the Isthmus now a great mass of important papers and documents, and so forth, relating to the Isthmian Canal. They are scattered from one end of the Canal Zone to the other in various offices. It is of the utmost importance that these papers be collated and arranged and indexed and the unnecessary and useless duplicates destroyed and those that are of any value, either historically or otherwise, put in such shape as to make possible their utilization by those desiring them. This provision does not add to the cost of the work. It simply gives the chairman of the Isthmian Canal Commission authority to appoint three persons to pass preliminarily upon the value or necessity of preserving certain papers so that the unnecessary and useless ones may be eliminated and those that are of value preserved in such manner as will make them of value. Provision is being made for the construction of an administration building, which will cost about $250,000, in which these records will be stored. Unless in some way they can be straightened out and adjusted they will be packed in there in a useless heap and never be available for use. This work should be done at this time and be finished by the completion of the canal, or it never will be done in the future satisfactorily.

Mr. SIMS. Let me ask the gentleman if he does not think it better to have these three persons appointed by the Secretary of War and not by the chairman of the commission.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not, because the chairman of the commission will merely designate three persons in the employ of the canal to act as this committee to make their recommendations, and then the commission will pass on those recommendations. If the Secretary of War does it, he will probably appoint three persons simply for the purpose of giving them the places.

Mr. SIMS. Here is the point to which I had reference. Of course, I do not mean to question the fact that the commission would not do what is right. In regard to the question of what papers ought to be preserved and what destroyed it seems to me they are more interested than anybody else, and while they ought to be consulted it seems to me proper that somebody else should be consulted also.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Secretary of War would depend upon some one else, some subordinate official, and the man best fitted to finally determine the question is the man who is in charge of the construction of the canal and has been for some time.

Mr. SIMS. I did not mean that they should take no part in this. It should be done in cooperation with them. For instance persons are in charge of a work which involves large expenditures, and does not the gentleman think that they ought to be free from any charge that might possibly be made that they had destroyed papers that would throw light on something that might in the future come up to be examined? Of course, I do not intimate that anything relating to these gentlemen will arise.

Mr. FITZGERALD. All the expenditures are audited here in the War Department; those records are here.

Mr. SIMS. I do not care whether it is the War Department or not, but should not some person who is not interested in the work do it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. All expenditures for the canal are audited here by the Auditor for the War Department, and those records could not be affected. They are the ones which will disclose whether there has been any impropriety in regard to expenditures.

Mr. SIMS. I only have reference to the records that are to be destroyed. The gentleman knows that in investigations of corporation records it has often been found that records were destroyed and charges made that they had been purposely destroyed, and I think, as a protection to these men, there ought to be some means devised by which that could not occur.

Mr. FITZGERALD. These records are all here in the office of the Auditor for the War Department.

Mr. SIMS. What is it you want to destroy, then?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why, there is a mass of routine correspondence duplicated in three or four offices, some of it of no value at all; an order issued directing certain things to be done sometimes has to be filed in several offices. They are all preserved. They want to eliminate a lot of this useless material.

Mr. SIMS. They want to get rid of that which is absolutely useless and get the benefit of the other?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is it. The other records they desire to bring to one place and have them filed in an orderly manner. If anybody wishes to use the records for any purpose they will be of some value to them. No one could go to the Canal Zone now and attempt to make an examination of the records for the purpose of obtaining information.

Mr. SIMS. The commission has no authority to do what is sought to be given them?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. SIMS. I only know that such a thing ought to be done, and wanted to see that it was guarded properly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. All the expense accounts under the law must be audited by the Auditor for the War Department, and the auditor's office will have the records which cover expenditures. But there are a lot of papers, for instance—specifications and detailed drawings of various numbers of works—which, because of the number of different gangs that have been occupied on identical work, have been multiplied enormously, and there is a great mass of useless material there that should be cleaned out.

Mr. MANN. There are great quantities of duplicate blue prints.

Mr. SIMS. I have no doubt there is much in what the gentleman says. But I heard Col. Goethals once say, more or less jocularly, that before the canal is 15 years old Congress would have a committee appointed to investigate what was done with the money. That is why I thought these records ought to be preserved.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The one thing to protect the men on that work was the auditing of the accounts by the Auditor of the War Department.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, if these papers could be transmitted to the War Department in Washington they could be destroyed practically by a clerk.

Mr. CULLOP. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will permit, I just understood the chairman to say that most of the papers were here now in the War Department.

Mr. MANN. Not any of those that are to be destroyed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The papers affecting the expenditures are in the auditor's office of the War Department. Some of them will be of value for one purpose or another, but the great duplication of blue prints, specifications, various drawings, routine correspondence, of no value whatever, encumbering every office in the zone, should be destroyed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will that apply to the legal papers that are being used there for the condemnation of the lands that are to be covered by the artificial lake?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They will be a part of the court records. They could not destroy them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, this resolution would not cover any part of any court records?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. SIMS. It leaves the commission to determine absolutely what shall be destroyed or what shall be preserved.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not relate to court records at all. It says the files of papers that have accumulated or which may accumulate.

Mr. MANN. Whether it does or not, you have got to leave it to somebody, and either let all of our records go to pieces or else have some one determine those which shall be not kept and indexed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman think it safe to destroy any records that might be used in the condemnation of land?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Those to be destroyed under this provision are duplicates.

Mr. SHERLEY. Not only is that so, but if you do not destroy useless papers you will have great trouble in getting hold of any useful papers that you may desire.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to say it did not apply to legal papers. In view of the fact, I have no objection.

Mr. CULLOP. In view of the fact that legislation is in process of adoption by this Congress which will make a change at the completion of the canal and in the operation of it when it is completed, and when that law takes effect, as it will soon, and this new management of the business of the canal goes into operation, it will be the better time then to determine what papers ought to be destroyed and what papers ought to be preserved, and how they should be compiled. And I think it, therefore, not the proper nor opportune time to pass legislation of this kind; and, in addition to that, this legislation belongs properly to another committee. If the committees are to overlap each other in the legislation that they bring in on the same subjects or businesses connected with the Government, there will probably come a conflict between them, and a multiplication and a complication that would bring confusion into the departments. This being new legislation, Mr. Chairman, I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is true, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] says, that the paragraph carries no appropriation. Nevertheless the Chair is of opinion that it is legislation, and therefore sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That until the close of the fiscal year 1913, when any material, supplies, and equipment heretofore or hereafter purchased or acquired for the construction of the Isthmian Canal is no longer needed, or is no longer serviceable, it may be sold in such manner as the President may direct, and without advertising in such classes of cases as may be authorized by him; and the President is authorized, in his discretion, to sell and convey to the Republic of Panama the building situated in the city of Panama known as "the Administration Building," together with the ground on which the same is located, for a sum of not less than $80,000, and the proceeds of such sale, if made, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that part of the paragraph which commences in line 18 with the word "and," after the semicolon, and ending with the word "States," at the bottom of the page, and all the matter included therein. It is new legislation, and I make the point of order against it for that reason, it being included in an appropriation bill.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] if this building is located on property owned by the Government of the United States or on that owned by the Republic of Panama?

Mr. CULLOP. I am not able to state as to that, as to whether it is located on the ground of the United States or on that of the Republic of Panama.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it the gentleman's idea that this building is to be used after the canal is completed?

Mr. CULLOP. My idea is that the provision does not belong to this bill. It belongs as a part of the work of another committee. But, further, this is not the time to dispose of the building while they are talking about fortifying the Panama Canal with large appropriations asked for that purpose. This may be of very great service to the Government, and the retention of this building may hereafter save a much larger expenditure out of the Public Treasury. At least for the present I do not think we ought to dispose of it.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman think the Government needs this building?

Mr. CULLOP. I am not advised whether or not it will be needed under the new management authorized by the legislation now pending. It may be needed or it may not be needed. If it is necessary hereafter to sell it, I suppose that can be done under the new administration.

Mr. FOSTER. Is not this just giving authority now to sell this building?

Mr. CULLOP. That is what is proposed to be done.

Mr. FOSTER. If we do not need the building, why not sell it?

Mr. CULLOP. They might need it hereafter. They might find out later that they do not need it, and in that case it could be sold.

Mr. FOSTER. It could be provided for in this bill just as well as by another committee, it seems to me.

Mr. CULLOP. I do not think it is opportune just now to enact this legislation until the new administration and management comes into power under the legislation now pending, which will evidently be enacted at this session of Congress and which makes radical changes in the management of the Panama Canal.

Mr. FOSTER. The disposal of this building, as I understand, was authorized by a bill coming from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. SIMS. There was a special act.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, a bill authorizing the sale of this building, at the price fixed in this bill, to the Republic of Panama unanimously passed the House during the membership of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP]. The building is located in the city of Panama.

Mr. CULLOP. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say it was before I was a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. No such bill has been reported or considered since I have been a member of that committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman was a Member of the House, though, and it passed the House unanimously.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman's committee would not have jurisdiction of a building in the city of Panama. It is not on the Canal Zone.

Mr. CULLOP. It must have been done before I was a member of that committee and before the Sixty-second Congress. No such action has been proposed during this Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I simply state that it was authorized in a bill reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which passed the House unanimously. The building is located in the city of Panama. It is of no value whatever to the United States. It can not be utilized by the United States for any purpose. The Republic of Panama can utilize it as a public building. Our officials believe that if we can get $80,000 for it we will be doing very well. In a desire both to accommodate the Republic of Panama, and at the same time sell useless property at a very good price, the committee, with the knowledge that the matter had passed the House unanimously on a former occasion, thought that perhaps it might help get the legislation through by incorporating it in the bill.

Mr. SIMS. What did the building cost the Government?

Mr. MANN. Nobody knows. We bought it from the French, for which we paid $40,000,000 with all the other property.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was utilized by the French, and I think when we first took possession of the work it was used as an administration building. It was a part of the $40,000,000 purchase.

Mr. SIMS. It is not one of the new buildings built by the American Government?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; our people believed it was desirable not to have located in the city of Panama, under the jurisdiction of a foreign government, the employees or any part of the working force of the canal, and removed them into the Canal Zone and erected an administration building. This building has been idle for a long time; it is too large to be utilzed by any private enterprise, but the Republic of Panama could utilize it as a public building, and is willing to pay for it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said that the House passed the bill by unanimous consent for the sale of this building. Has the gentleman the date of that? I thought that that bill became a law. My impression is that the House twice has passed a bill covering this item.

Mr. SIMS. How does the gentleman arrive at the decision that it is worth more than $80,000? I know nothing about the building.

Mr. MANN. I can say to the gentleman that from my recollection, before the bill was reported from our committee—and, I think, while the gentleman from Tennessee was a member; and I know the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON], as well as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], were members—a bill was reported to sell this building. There had been some negotiations between the canal men and the officials of the Republic of Panama, and it was believed that it could be sold to the Republic of Panama, and that it might be some favor to them to sell it to them. It is absolutely useless to the United States. We long ago abandoned the use of the building, partly because it was not suitable, in our view, for the housing of the clerks and other employees down there. It was a building acquired from the French with the rest of the property connected with the Panama Zone.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CULLOP. The gentleman says, if I understand him correctly, that the House, previous to the Sixty-second Congress, passed a bill twice authorizing the sale of this building.

Mr. MANN. I know that it passed one bill, and I was under the impression that the same item was afterwards included in another bill, but I may be mistaken.

Mr. CULLOP. In view of the gentleman's thorough knowledge about the Panama Canal, which he obtained during his chairmanship of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I want to ask him if he knows anything about the use of this building by the United States Government?

Mr. MANN. The Government has no use for it whatever.

Mr. CULLOP. How long since it has been used by the Government of the United States?

Mr. MANN. It has been a number of years since any practical use was made of it. Whether there has since been anything stored in it or not I do not know.

Mr. CULLOP. Has it ever been used by this Government as a part of the executive department in the Canal Zone?

Mr. MANN. It was when we first commenced work on the canal. I visited this building when it was being used by the Government. The city of Panama is rather a hot place in summer time, and the building itself is not very well suited, according to our notions, for that work, and so our people were moved out of the building and an administration and other buildings built where they are now, and this one was abandoned.

Mr. CULLOP. How long since the Government has used this building?

Mr. MANN. Several years.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think it has been used since Col. Goethals has been chairman of the commission. I think they moved out of it before that.

Mr. MANN. The first time I was down there Mr. Wallace was the chief engineer, and at that time the Government was using it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But they afterwards moved the administration headquarters to Culebra.

Mr. BARTLETT. When I was there, in 1909, they were not using it for any Government purpose whatever.

Mr. CULLOP. Could the Government use the building in any way during the operation of the canal as proposed under the new legislation?

Mr. MANN. It could not. It is a building that is absolutely useless.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, under that view of it I shall withdraw the point of order, as I am convinced from what has been said here that it is for the best interest of the public that this provision remain in the bill. However, I desire to say I do so with some reluctance, for the reason that another committee, that of Interstate and Foreign Commerce, has jurisdiction of the legislation on this subject, and I believe it a bad practice for one committee to assume the functions of another committee. Confusion is sure to follow such a practice, and conflict in the performance of duties must necessarily occur under such circumstances.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to state that these points of order, so far as I am concerned, have been made in this way: The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON], who is chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, has been called home on account of the serious illness of Mrs. Adamson. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] requested me to make the point of order that the gentleman from Indiana has made, together with others, as being desired by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Personally I have no objection to legislation on appropriation bills and never have made points of order against legislation on appropriation bills where they are in line with the appropriation, but under the circumstances it seems to me that the chairman's wishes ought to be respected by his fellow members on the committee. If a bill has passed this House to sell this building at a time when Mr. ADAMSON was a member of the committee——

Mr. MANN. It met his approval, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. His attention no doubt was called to it. Yesterday I requested the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to wire Mr. ADAMSON and see if he was not willing to have these points of order withdrawn or not made. In view of the fact that the gentleman states that a bill was reported by the committee of which Mr. ADAMSON was the ranking member and is now the chairman, I do not feel like insisting upon the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that the gentleman from Georgia, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and myself are on very friendly terms, growing in part out of our services on that committee. I discussed with the gentleman the items in the bill in regard to which points of order might be made. I do not recall discussing this particular item with him. I do not think he called it to my attention. I do not think he would have insisted or would insist, if he were here, upon the point of order, because I know this met his approval when we reported it before.

Mr. BARTLETT. He voted for it in the House and in the committee.

Mr. SIMS. This bill was brought to me marked for points of order by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

Mr. MANN. This item is new in the bill, and I presume that is why it is marked.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statements made and the showing upon the matter, it seems to me that this provision ought to be retained in the bill. I shall not insist upon the point of order nor ask that it should be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the point of order will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, it will be observed that in this section—section 4—there is the following provision:

That until the close of the fiscal year 1913, when any material, supplies, and equipment heretofore or hereafter purchased or acquired for the construction of the Isthmian Canal is no longer needed, or is no longer serviceable, it may be sold in such manner as the President may direct, and without advertising in such classes of cases as may be authorized by him.

I am one of those who hope that the equipment and material, so far as it will be available, which is now in use in the construction of the Panama Canal will not be sold, but will be retained by the Government for use in another great enterprise which I believe the Government will undertake. I understand that an effort has already been made to sell some of this equipment and that it has been found that bids submitted were about 10 per cent only of what the equipment was regarded as being actually worth. It is quite apparent that if Alaska is to be developed, some one will be compelled to build a railroad from tidewater to the interior of Alaska. In my judgment the Government of the United States should build and operate this railroad and should use the extra equipment from Panama for that purpose. As is well known, there are several measures pending looking to some provision of that kind, and it seemed to me in this connection it would be interesting to have inserted in the RECORD certain correspondence with the Quartermaster General of the Isthmian Canal Commission relative to the disposition of this material. I therefore ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD two letters to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, leave will be granted.

There was no objection.

The letters are as follows:

THE AMERICAN MINING CONGRESS,
Washington, D. C., May 23, 1912.

Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: At the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Callbreath and the writer called upon Col. C. A. Devol, chief quartermaster, Isthmian Canal Commission, to inquire as to his availability as a witness before your committee.

We found that the colonel was leaving that day for his post of duty, but after explaining to him the importance of his making such a statement he very kindly prepared for us a letter, of which the inclosed is a copy, which I hasten to forward to you as a matter of particular interest.

Faithfully, yours,

H. HANIMAN,
Acting Chairman Alaska Committee.

ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION,
PURCHASING DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., May 20, 1912.

J. F. CALLBREATH, Jr.,
Secretary the American Mining Congress,
Munsey Building, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Replying to your verbal inquiry of this date in regard to using the plant equipment and tools now on the Panama Canal construction work for the construction of part of a railway system in Alaska, please be advised as follows: I turned over a complete list of all plant equipment, such as locomotives, steam shovels, cranes, rails, etc., to Secretary Fisher on his visit to the Canal Zone some months since. This is an itemized list, showing in detail all the articles now carried, giving the date purchased, original cost, condition at present, and probable date of release from work on the canal. In addition there is being prepared a list of shop tools, which will be turned over to the Secretary of the Interior at an early date.

Although the gauge of the Panama Railroad is 5 feet, all cars, steam shovels, etc., can be reduced to a standard gauge, or 4 feet 8½ inches, at a very moderate cost. About 24 locomotives can also be remodeled, but the greater number are so constructed that there is not sufficient room to set the tires and driving wheels in to the standard gauge.

We have on the Isthmus two large repair shops—one to repair steam shovels and one on repair of locomotives and car equipment—and all equipment is kept in first-class condition, none of it being allowed to deteriorate. Should a transfer of the surplus equipment be directed, it could all be put through the shops before leaving and be in good, serviceable condition on arrival in Alaska.

We have employed on the Isthmus at the present time about 5,000 American citizens, the greater number of whom have been identified with the construction work on the canal for a number of years. They have learned of the proposed legislation in regard to the railway in Alaska, and they are already talking the matter over and many of them are eager to go. They are accustomed to the Government service, accustomed to our methods, and entirely familiar with all the various articles of equipment that are to be shipped from the Isthmus; in other words, a portion of the canal organization, including accountants, mechanics, engineers, and all classes of men, with the appliances, with which they are entirely familiar, could be transplanted to Alaska and go to work at once under the system entirely familiar to them. There would be no loss of time incident to the formative stages of the organization; the men would know each other and would know their immediate superiors, and it would seem that the best of results should obtain.

It is presumed that a wage scale for this force would be authorized similar to the wage scale on the canal, as good men would not be induced to live in either Panama or Alaska for the same amount of wages that are paid in the United States.

Arrangements could be made to ship the equipment just as fast as it is released, and this probably would fit in with the construction work in Alaska. The transport Buford, now on the Pacific coast, possibly might be used to effect this transfer and therefore minimize the cost.

An attempt has been made recently to sell some of the surplus equipment, with very discouraging results; steam shovels, for instance, only bringing 10 per cent of the original cost, and unless some special project can be found it is not believed any better prices will be obtained in the future. It would therefore effect a very decided saving to the Government to put this plant, the total value of which amounts to about $16,000,000, into service elsewhere.

Yours, very respectfully,

C. A. DEVOL,
Chief Quartermaster, Isthmian Canal Commission.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That hereafter no payments shall be made for maintenance or other charge in connection with the Toro Point Light, Isthmus of Panama, out of moneys of the United States or of the Panama Railroad Co.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. Why should we provide in this bill for the officials down there if they think it necessary not to maintain a lighthouse?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is under a so-called concession. The Toro Light is of absolutely no value to the Panama Railway Co. or to the men who navigate its ships.

Mr. MANN. If it is of no value, why do they maintain the light?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They do not. This light is maintained by certain gentlemen residing in Panama under a so-called concession, and the United States is being mulcted in the sum of about $30,000 a year for the maintenance of the light, and we have been assured that is of absolutely no value whatever.

Mr. MANN. Why is it maintained?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have a concession under which all vessels shall pay a toll.

Mr. MANN. "They" have? Why not be specific?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not recall the names of the people, but they are certain residents of the city of Panama. They obtained this concession from Colombia.

Mr. MANN. What is the concession?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a concession to maintain this light and to charge all vessels entering the port of Colon certain fees. The Panama Railroad Co. strenuously protested against the payment of the fees. They do not use the light, but to avoid a little difference of opinion with certain persons in Panama it was decided to acquiesce.

Mr. MANN. Where is Toro Point?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is on the Atlantic side.

Mr. MANN. I understand, but where is it from Colon?

Mr. BURLESON. It is where that jetty projects from.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is where the new breakwater projects. There is another light, which is used by the masters of the vessels in reaching the port.

Mr. MANN. For the life of me, looking at it, I do not see how vessels can get in there without a light on that point.

Mr. FITZGERALD. All that I know is that the masters of these vessels state that it is absolutely useless to them, and they do not go by it or rely upon it. They pick up another light.

Mr. BURLESON. The captain of the Ancon told me that he never had used it, and he always protested against the payment of these fees.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think we pay about $30,000 a year. It is the only gold mine on the Isthmus.

Mr. MANN. Is the light on our territory?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is it is within the Canal Zone.

Mr. MANN. If they have a right to charge these vessels, how can you stop it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is very doubtful if they have that right. We went into the matter pretty extensively. There was a unanimity of opinion respecting it.

Mr. MANN. I do not know very much about it, but I will withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That all surplus earnings of the Panama Railroad Co. shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph on the ground that it is new legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if the point of order had not been made, I intended to offer as an amendment, before the word "surplus," the word "unapplied." It appears that the Panama Railroad Co. has accumulated a surplus of about $1,800,000, which is largely profit made out of the work of building the Panama Canal.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the gentleman tell us what that money is being used for now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. That is why I desire to offer this amendment. It is being utilized to construct a new hotel at Colon, and certain docks. All of the stock of this company is owned by the United States, the board of directors consisting of certain officials of the Army and other officials of the United States and one or two civilians, accumulating a surplus in the operation of the road, very largely from the charges made against the Government in the construction of the canal. It has about $1,800,000 on deposit in the banks of New York, subject to the disposition of this board of directors, with no supervision or control exercised by Congress. They are contemplating the purchase of property in the State of New Jersey for terminal facilities that will cost from half a million to a million dollars.

It seemed to the committee that so long as Congress, whenever necessary, was required to appropriate the money that the Panama Railroad Co. needs for any purpose, if it does not have the money for boats or terminals, or whatever the railroad had to have to keep it in condition, that as we appropriate the money out of the Treasury, in the interest of good administration, we should take this surplus, the unapplied portion, at least, and put it in the Treasury of the United States where it belongs.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, I understand from the gentleman's statement that the Government buys what is necessary—has been doing it—for the Panama Railroad Co. in the way of steamers, and such as that. Then, when they make a surplus they keep the surplus and spend it for what they deem necessary for the organization. Is that the situation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We bought some boats for the company.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we bought two three or four years ago.

Mr. MANN. The Government owns four out of six.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The last two we bought.

Mr. MANN. We own four out of six.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The other two belong to the Panama Steamship Co., all the stock of which belongs to the Government.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to ask the gentleman if the Panama Railroad Co. proposes to build terminals at any place?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are building at Colon a hotel that will cost, as I recall, something like half a million dollars. They are also building certain docks there.

Mr. SIMS. Without authority of Congress?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why, certainly, the board of directors decided to build the hotel and docks.

Mr. SIMS. And the board of directors are United States officials.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not all of them.

Mr. SIMS. And they are going along and building it without a law authorizing them to do so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have a law; they are officers of a corporation.

Mr. SIMS. Well, the Government owns the corporation, does it not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My own opinion is, being somewhat familiar with the laws of the State of New York, under which the Panama Steamship & Railroad Co. is incorporated, that it would be very difficult to find any authority under the laws of that State for a corporation organized for the purpose of building and operating a steamship line and a railroad to build a hotel. I think it is clearly ultra vires.

Mr. SIMS. It has always been a remarkable thing to me that the Government has to do its business in this fictitious way. If we own that railroad company, why not operate it as a Government facility and not permit it to be operated under the fiction of a corporation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think everybody realized that in the construction of the canal that in retaining this corporation certain business could better be done under a corporate form than if done by the Government. I believe it has worked out beneficially. Having accumulated this surplus, which is, I have no doubt, the result of payments to the company by the canal officials for the work it has done for the commission, this surplus lying to the credit of the company in private banking institutions, it seemed to the committee desirable that these surplus earnings should go into the United States Treasury.

Mr. SIMS. These directors authorized these deposits in private banks without any law of Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; as a corporation they properly deposited their money in banks, because if they put it in the Treasury they could not get it out. It is not desired to interfere with the corporation using its revenues to meet its current expenses, but any surplus earnings, it was believed, should be covered into the Treasury.

My attention has been called to certain conditions which require modifications in the provision. Contracts are in existence for the construction of a hotel and certain docks, and a portion of the surplus has been allotted or applied for that purpose, and to that extent this surplus fund should not be covered into the Treasury, but should continue available to carry out existing contracts.

Mr. SIMS. Now, right there: Is this railroad going ahead and undertaking enterprises that are not a part of the construction, operation, and maintenance of the canal?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I think so; it does a commercial business.

Mr. SIMS. Does not the gentleman think we had better have a little legislation on that subject?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it is of great importance that the corporation be preserved for the present.

Mr. SIMS. But building hotels and other structures that are not necessary for the building of the canal—does the gentleman think——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not discussing that.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, it is a fact that the United States Government owns all the stock of this corporation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. While some of the officers own enough stock to qualify them to be officers, the United States owns all the stock.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is all in the Treasury.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is all in the Treasury, and have not we the right to do as we please with our own money?

Mr. CULLOP. In other words, the Government owns the railroad, practically?

Mr. BARTLETT. Owns all the stock which the railroad represents.

Mr. CULLOP. Now, then, if the Government officials are taking the money and using it in the building of hotels or other enterprises, they are misappropriating the funds. Now, in the new canal bill provision is made for all the surplus earnings there.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does not the gentleman think——

Mr. CULLOP. It provides over and above the operating expense except certain of the stores there, which must be replenished from time to time, but everything else is to be covered into the Treasury, which, in my judgment, is wise, and also safeguards the Government money.

Mr. BARTLETT. The bill the gentleman speaks of may not become a law.

Mr. CULLOP. Oh, it will become a law at this session. It will, in all probability, become a law before this bill will become a law, when under this bill all these things, in my judgment and that of the committee at the time they prepared it, will be amply taken care of. This is a part of the purpose for its early enactment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We all agree that it is something that should be done.

Mr. CULLOP. Yes, indeed; I agree with the committee fully that some legislation ought to be had to correct this matter and safeguard the rights of the public, as there is really room for abuse as it now exists, and such legislation should be had at this session of Congress to secure a remedy, because it is imperatively demanded. Public policy requires it, in my judgment, but under the new bill it is well taken care of.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit a slight interruption, I think the first Panama Canal bill that I reported into the House—it was an early one anyhow—provided for practically abolishing the Panama Canal Railroad Co. and putting it under the control of the Government.

Mr. CULLOP. That ought to be done and would be wise.

Mr. MANN. I believe it ought to be there. That bill was not passed, and I was firmly convinced that my motion was somewhat erroneous. We could not have carried on the work of the canal without making use of the canal railroad. While I would not be in favor of it as a permanent policy, as a temporary expedient on the Canal Zone, owing to the harsh environment, it was big enough down there to enable the Panama Canal Railroad Co. to do things which the Government officials directly could not do, and I think it ought to be continued that way until permanent legislation goes into effect in reference to the control of the Panama Canal.

Mr. CULLOP. I fully agree with the gentleman from Illinois on that. I think it is advisable. And under this new law or legislation that is proposed and now pending, if it is adopted, that matter will be amply taken care of under the new management.

Mr. MANN. Without being in this bill?

Mr. CULLOP. Without being in this bill; and as provided in that bill the new management can amply care for it and correct this abuse as it now exists, as the gentleman says it does, at this time.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it is being abused. I think it has been used very well and usefully down there up to the present time.

Mr. CULLOP. I do not agree with the gentleman that the management of this railroad ought to take the surplus earnings of it and build hotels or any other enterprise down there without the consent of some supervisory power. It ought not to do that. It ought not to expend the surplus earnings without authority from Congress or from some other authority. A policy of that kind should not be tolerated. In such a practice abuses are likely to occur.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman believe it was a wise thing to build the bakeries down there, and the laundries down there, and the eating houses down there?

Mr. CULLOP. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN. Well, that was all done by the Panama Canal Railway Co.—every dollar of it.

Mr. CULLOP. But it was done more under the direction or advice of Congress.

Mr. MANN. It was not done by the advice of Congress at all. It was done by the same officials that were managing the construction of the canal. It was done through a form of law which we could not undertake and make applicable throughout the United States, and ought not to, as a permanent thing. But it was useful down there and was done in that way. That is the way they get their meat and vegetables down there as well as other supplies.

Mr. CULLOP. I think the gentleman from Illinois will concede this, while that was all done wisely and justly, still a policy of that kind continued without some restriction around it, and for any great length of time would be subject and liable to great abuse, because the license is unbridled.

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman that it ought not to be the permanent policy, but I think it ought to be pursued until the canal is finished.

Mr. CULLOP. Until it is finished and under the management provided by the new legislation, and ready for operation. I insist upon the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

First, the number of persons, if any, intended to be employed and the rates of compensation to each, and the amounts contemplated to be expended for each of any other objects or classes of expenditures specified or contemplated in the estimate; and

Second, the number of persons, if any, employed and the rates of compensation paid each, and the amounts expended for each other object or class of expenditures out of the appropriation corresponding to the estimate so submitted, during the completed fiscal year next preceding the period for which the estimate is submitted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that paragraph. How is it practicable to comply with the provisions of that paragraph?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is very easy. We get one part of the information now in one way, and the balance of the information is furnished during the course of the investigation. If it were all furnished when the estimates are submitted, it would be of immense value to the committee. We have, for instance, a provision which requires to be stated under certain lump-sum appropriations the manner in which the money is expended during the preceding fiscal year. In making up the estimates for the ensuing fiscal year the proposed expenditures are always classified in the same way. If such information were included in the Book of Estimates, so that the two columns could be printed together, the committee would have the advantage of it in advance of the examination instead of having it submitted after the examination is completed. It would be of very great service.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my point of order, owing to the dulcet tones of my friend from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. Hereafter no specific or indefinite appropriation made in any regular annual appropriation act shall be construed to be permanent or available continuously without reference to a fiscal year unless it belongs to one of the following five classes: "Rivers and harbors," "lighthouses," "fortifications," "public buildings," and "pay of the Navy and Marine Corps," last specifically named in and excepted from the operation of the provisions of the so-called "covering-in act" approved June 24, 1874, or unless it is made in terms expressly providing that it shall continue available beyond the fiscal year for which the appropriation act in which it is contained makes provision.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman had better tell why it goes in first.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The amendment is to correct a date.

Mr. MANN. There will be no trouble about that if it stays in.

Mr. Chairman, I asked the gentleman the other day in reference to the act that was passed recently concerning the covering-in act, and then another joint resolution or act that we passed exempting certain things from the operation of the other act. We have had at least three acts on this subject; two in the last couple of years, I think. Has the gentleman examined this?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have examined it. This has no reference to it. Under the covering-in act there are six classes of appropriations that are not covered in at the expiration of the two years.

Mr. MANN. Those are the six named here? No; there are five named here. What is the other one?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The other class is what are called permanent specific appropriations. The Treasury Department has construed a number of appropriations to be permanent appropriations, to continue available until used. For instance, I can illustrate in this way: In 1893 an appropriation of $50,000 was made to enable certain services to be employed in connection with some suits affecting the Pacific railroads. A part of the appropriation was used, and the balance remained unexpended for a number of years. About 1908 the Comptroller of the Treasury construed that appropriation to be a permanent specific appropriation, and some others persons were employed under it. This year, the appropriation giving out, an estimate was submitted for additional money, and it was discovered that out of this appropriation, made in 1893 for one purpose, during the last three or four years certain other services were being paid of which Congress had no knowledge whatever. That is an illustration.

Mr. MANN. I know, but that might happen under any of these appropriations or under any appropriation that was made available until expended.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was not made available until expended.

Mr. MANN. I understand, but it might happen under any appropriation that was made available until expended. They construed it to be available until expended.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The purpose of this is to prevent such action. I will cite another class of cases. We frequently make specific appropriations for surveying public lands in certain States. No one that I know of or have consulted with ever knew until this year that the Comptroller of the Treasury construed those to be permanent specific appropriations.

No one that I have consulted with knew that the Comptroller of the Treasury construed those to be permanent and specific appropriations; so that they were not available only for the specific year, but until the money was expended.

Mr. MANN. I have heard that statement made several times on the floor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I never have known it, and I have been connected with the work for some time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has no public land in his State to be surveyed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; but I have had gentlemen from States that have public land within their borders furnish me with about all the possible available information upon the subject.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman remembers that a short time ago we passed an act affecting the covering-in act liable to hold up all the river and harbor appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was in 1909, and it grew out of this situation: During the Spanish War an appropriation of $3,000,000 was made to meet unforeseen emergencies that might arise in the War Department. In 1908 it was found that there were several million dollars unexpended in that appropriation, and the Comptroller of the Treasury construed it to be a permanent specific appropriation, and it was used to pay certain expenses in connection with the Brownsville investigation. Then Congress passed this act:

SEC. 10. The Secretary of the Treasury shall cause all unexpended balances of appropriations which remained on the books of the Treasury on the 1st day of July, 1904, except permanent specific appropriations, judgments and findings of courts, trust funds, and appropriations for fulfilling treaty obligations with the Indians, to be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury: Provided, That such sums of said balances as may be needed to pay contracts existing and not fully discharged at the date of this act shall remain available for said purposes. For the purposes herein declared no appropriation made prior to July 1, 1904, shall be construed to be a permanent specific appropriation unless by its language it is specifically and in express terms made available for use until expended.

That was in the sundry civil act of March 4, 1909.

Mr. MANN. That went through with a statement something like this, and it caused lots of trouble.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My attention is called to the fact that it was a provision put on in the Senate as an amendment, and was not discussed here. It was discovered later that in certain river and harbor work there were unexpended balances that would be affected that it was not contemplated should be covered by the act, and on the 25th of June it was provided that that act should not be construed as applying to the unexpended balances of river and harbor appropriations, the use of which might be essential in the judgment of the Secretary of War in the further maintenance and prosecution of the work.

The reason for that was that the river and harbor appropriations made for improvements sometimes included authority for maintenance. The estimates for the river and harbor work for the next ensuing fiscal year had been based on the fact that there were unexpended balances out of appropriations made prior to 1904 for river and harbor improvements. If they were not excepted, additional sums would have to be appropriated for that purpose. That was the only place that it worked out in a way that had to be corrected.

Mr. MANN. This provision reads:

SEC. 8. Hereafter no specific or indefinite appropriation made in any regular annual appropriation act shall be construed to be permanent or available continuously without reference to a fiscal year, unless it belongs to one of the following five classes.

Of course this would not apply to any permanent, indefinite, or specific appropriation made heretofore——

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would not apply to any appropriation made heretofore that may have been construed as a permanent specific appropriation.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not retroactive.

Mr. MANN. It is retroactive. It says hereafter it shall not be construed so and so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The trouble is that they have all been construed.

Mr. MANN. That would not make any difference; this would not permit them to be construed that way hereafter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In this bill and other appropriation bills we make appropriations available until used.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 175, in line 7, strike out the word "twenty-fourth" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twentieth."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. After June 30, 1912, postmasters, assistant postmasters, collectors of customs, collectors of internal revenue, and chiefs of field parties are required, empowered, and authorized, when requested, to administer oaths, required by law or otherwise, to accounts for travel or other expenses against the United States, with like force and effect as officers having a seal; for such services when so rendered, or when rendered on demand after said date by notaries public, who at the time are also salaried officers or employees of the United States, no charge shall be made; and on and after July 1, 1912, no fee or money paid for the services herein described shall be paid or reimbursed by the United States.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that paragraph. It has no relevancy to the Canal Zone.

Mr. MANN. No; this is general legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it has been ascertained that travel vouchers, which must be verified, are sworn to before all sorts of officials, and fees are collected that amount to about $60,000 a year. This is to give authority to certain designated officials of the United States to administer such oaths and compel the oaths to be made before such officials whenever it is feasible rather than to employ outside persons and incur expense.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Certain of those officials are specified in this paragraph. How does the gentleman explain "the chief of field parties"? How would you locate him?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is a well-recognized term. For instance, the Geological Survey has field parties, and one person is designated as the chief. This is to give him the authority to administer an oath rather than to have men hunt all over the country for somebody who under the law is empowered to administer oaths.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask why it was advisable to insert such a paragraph in this bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is designed to prevent the expenditure of about $60,000 to reimburse officers for fees they have paid for these travel vouchers. It is in the interest of economy and efficiency. If a man is out in the field and he gets to a point where he has to put in a travel voucher, a chief of that party is authorized to administer the oath. Otherwise the man might be compelled to go a considerable distance to find some official who is authorized to administer the oath.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And it has been shown to the committee that there is a necessity for this legislation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We think it is a very desirable thing. It will not only facilitate business, but will prevent the expenditure unnecessarily of fifty or sixty thousand dollars a year.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. All of the records relating to naturalization or declarations of intention to become citizens of the United States and all certificates of naturalization filed, recorded, or issued prior to an act to validate certain certificates of naturalization approved June 29, 1906, in or from the police court of Louisville, Ky., shall for all purposes be deemed to be and to have been made, filed, recorded, or issued by a court with jurisdiction to naturalize aliens, but shall not be by this act further validated or legalized.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph is subject to a point of order. The purpose of it is simply to cure the question of whether the police court of Louisville—its proper name is the city court of Louisville—was a court authorized to naturalize aliens. There are some ten or fifteen thousand certificates that were issued under the old naturalization law under the belief that the court was a court having jurisdiction to naturalize aliens. The only effect of this provision, if agreed to, would be to cure that question. It does not validate any naturalization papers that are subject to attack because of any other reason such as fraud or noncomplince with the law in any particular. It is similar to remedial legislation that was passed in one of the courts of Cook County, Ill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think that a matter of this kind should have gone before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that it is a matter of such plain understanding and is one that every principle of equity would warrant action being had, and that the committee was justified in placing it here. It is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thought it would be fair for the gentleman to make his explanation. I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization present, but I think it ought to be said that there are other questions of this kind coming before that committee and that that is the proper place for this legislation to go.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, this proposition is on all fours with the proposition which I presented to the House coming from Cook County, at one time. The law then in force in reference to naturalization, it was determined, did not cover the criminal court of Cook County, which for years, being a court of record, had been naturalizing citizens. In fact, it was almost the favorite court for that purpose. It was finally determined that there was some doubt about it, and finally, that probably no one of the people naturalized there were properly naturalized. I presented a bill and it went to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. It was reported with a unanimous report, together with a good deal of information in connection with the report. The bill passed the House and became a law. This is identically like that, and the same question has arisen.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman will agree that where committees of the House are regularly constituted to consider special legislation, those committees ought to be considered. I do not know whether the chairman of the committee has been consulted about the matter. It seems to me that this is a matter that should go to the proper committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, the chairman of the committee would be no more the person to consult than any other member of the committee. The matter was referred to the officials of the Bureau of Naturalization. It plainly shows upon its face that the only effect of it is to validate the power of the court to issue naturalization papers. It was a police court having a limited criminal jurisdiction, a court with a seal, and a court that was supposed to have jurisdiction. It is not a matter that requires any intricate investigation, and I have in my hand here a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor saying there is no objection to the legislation.

Mr. MANN. Of course, this is practically asking unanimous consent for the consideration of the proposition, but the gentleman has managed to get it where it comes in in this way. The person who is really interested is the man who wants to be a citizen.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Some of the committees of this House are much more powerful than other committees, and some gentlemen who happen to get upon these powerful committees have much more influence than gentlemen who are on committees of less importance.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman should remember that he may be on the most powerful committee himself before a very great while.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I had not heard of that. But, Mr. Chairman, this is a matter of legislation which, I think, should have gone to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That all sums appropriated by this act for salaries of officers and employees of the Government shall be in full for such salaries for the fiscal year 1913, and all laws or parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are repealed.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman if the repealing provision is not pretty broad?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; it is the same as is carried every year.

Mr. Chairman, this concludes the reading of the bill. There were several places which were passed over. On page 21 the paragraph from lines 17 to 21, inclusive, were passed over to ascertain whether the committee would offer an amendment relative to a central power plant. I have no amendment that I wish to offer at this time.

Mr. SISSON. Was not a point of order reserved on that power-plant proposition?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not in here. We passed this point so that the committee might, if it desired, return to permit an amendment to be offered. I shall not offer any amendment. It was understood that if an amendment were offered no Member would lose his right to make the point of order if the amendment proposed were subject to the point of order. But this provision was not subject to a point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in view of explanations that have just been made to me, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the point of order made by me a moment ago against the item affecting the naturalization court at Louisville.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the point of order will be withdrawn. [After a pause.] No objection is heard.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment to that section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 176, line 6, strike out the words "police court at Louisville" and insert the words "Louisville city court, sometimes called the Louisville police court."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman state the reason for that amendment?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am just trying to give the accurate title of the court. As printed it is "police court of Louisville," and the actual title of the court is "Louisville city court."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is a clerical correction?

Mr. SHERLEY. Absolutely.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire leave to print with my remarks a letter from the district attorney of the western district of Kentucky and one from the Acting Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor touching the matter just disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that leave will be granted. [After a pause.] No objection is heard.

The letters are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
WESTERN DISTRICT OF KENTUCKY,
Louisville, May 23, 1912.

Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am just in receipt of yours of the 20th, referring to your correspondence with Mr. Tincher, touching the status of certain foreign-born residents of Louisville, who undertook to be naturalized in the Louisville police court, and the validity of whose naturalization papers has been questioned.

Undoubtedly, in my judgment, the police court was without jurisdiction to issue naturalization papers under the old law, as it did not have common-law jurisdiction, although it had the other requisites—a clerk and a seal.

Tincher informs me that he counted the list in the police court, and ascertained that there were somewhere between ten and twelve thousand orders made admitting aliens to citizenship. The certificates were issued upon printed blanks, which recite that the Louisville police court was a court having common-law jurisdiction, a clerk and a seal, half of which was perhaps true. In other words, the Louisville city court perpetrated a fraud upon the applicants for naturalization. These people, being themselves misled as to their status, clearly come within the last proviso of the first subsection of section 4 of the present act (Naturalization Laws Pamphlet of 1911, p. 4), which was added by the act of June 25, 1910, and they are entitled to make application and obtain their final papers under that proviso.

It seems to me that, while of course great numbers of those naturalized have moved away from here or died, it is a hardship to compel these people to incur the expense and trouble of again obtaining their final papers, and that they might very well be put upon an equality with persons who obtained certificates of naturalization from the criminal court of Cook County, Ill. (Act of June 29, 1906, 34 Stats., p. 630; Naturalization Pamphlet, p. 18, sec. 2, at foot of page.)

I can see no reason why Congress should make fish of the Chicago people, who were naturalized in a court which had not jurisdiction by virtue of having common-law jurisdiction, and fowl of the Louisville aliens in like condition.

I may add that Mr. Frederick W. Weber, United States naturalization examiner, of Chicago, who usually attends the hearings here of applicants for naturalization, with whom I had some talk on this subject the last time he was here, seemed to fully agree with me as to the propriety of adopting an act similar to the one relating to the criminal court of Cook County, Ill., and applicable to the "Louisville city court, called the Louisville police court."

Very respectfully,

GEORGE DU RELLE,
United States Attorney.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, June 11, 1912.

Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY,
Representative in Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: The department has to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th instant, addressed to the Chief of the Division of Naturalization, inclosing a letter addressed to you by the United States attorney at Louisville, Ky., in relation to certificates of naturalization issued by the police court at Louisville prior to the passage of the naturalization act of June 29, 1906.

It is noted from the said inclosure that somewhere between ten and twelve thousand orders were made by the said court admitting aliens to citizenship, and that many of the persons so naturalized have since moved from Louisville or died.

It would appear that the same situation exists with regard to the persons so naturalized as in the case of those aliens who had been admitted to citizenship by the criminal court of Cook County, Ill. In both instances the persons naturalized have been the victims of an error upon the part of the said courts in assuming a jurisdiction which they were not by law authorized to exercise. Recognizing this situation apparently, the act of June 29, 1906, entitled "An act to validate certain certificates of naturalization," was passed, which validated all certificates theretofore issued by the said criminal court of Cook County, Ill., so far as lack of jurisdiction was concerned, but no further.

The department can see no reason why similar action should not be taken on behalf of those persons who have been admitted to citizenship by the police court of Louisville. In fact it sees no other means by which injustice to such of the persons so naturalized as were qualified to become citizens may be avoided.

In compliance with your request, the letter addressed to you by Mr. Du Relle is herewith returned.

Very truly, yours,

BENJ. S. CABLE,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask to return to page 55, and I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 55, after line 1, insert:

"The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to grant and lease in the manner hereinafter provided, for a period of 25 years, such surplus water of the United States within the limits of or pertaining to the military reservation of Schofield Barracks (Waianae Uka), island of Oahu, Territory of Hawaii, as may not be needed for the supply of the military post and troops on said reservation; and he is further authorized and directed to include in such grant or lease authority to the grantee or lessee thereunder to enter upon such reservation and make surveys thereon for, and construct and maintain, dams, reservations, canals, ditches, flumes, tunnels, and pipe lines for the purpose of diverting and conducting from the reservation the water covered by such grant or lease at such places on said land as said grantee or lessee may select, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and to include also the right to said grantee or lessee to take from the lands of the United States adjacent thereto, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, earth and stone necessary for such construction and maintenance: Provided, That said grant or lease shall be made to or entered into with the highest responsible bidder for such surplus water, under sealed proposal, after public advertisement of the terms and conditions thereof for a period of not less than 30 days in a newspaper or newspapers of general circulation published at Honolulu, in the Territory of Hawaii; such terms and conditions to be fixed by the Secretary of War when not inconsistent with the provisions of this act: Provided further, That the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will reserve the point of order, I think it is due to the House that a statement be made as to why the committee recommended this legislation.

Mr. KAHN. The Delegate from Hawaii is not present in the House, and I understand he is opposed to this legislation.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the gentleman is misinformed. The Delegate from Hawaii, though we had very elaborate hearings, did not in any way indicate that he was interested in it at all, and I can not imagine that the Delegate from Hawaii is interested in a proposition that is in some respects a question between rival companies. It is not a question involving the Hawaiian Islands at all.

Mr. KAHN. I understand that it is a question between rival companies that ought to be adjudicated by the courts, but if the gentleman desires I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think it is only due to the House that it should know what occurred and why we proposed this legislation.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York whether he expects to finish this bill to-night?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I desire to finish it.

Mr. MANN. It does not look to me as though it would be possible.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I think it is possible; we have only a few more items.

Mr. MANN. Well, there are a number of other items, and I will say frankly to the gentleman at the proper time——

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are four or five more, and we can finish, I think, by 6 o'clock. It would be a matter of great personal convenience to me.

Mr. MANN. It would be a matter of great personal convenience to me if you did not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I think the gentleman and myself can arrange this so as to accommodate ourselves.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the Waianae-Uka tract of land, situated in Oahu, contains the military reservation of Schofield Barracks, consisting of about 14,000 acres. There are certain rights to the waters that rise upon this military reservation and lands adjoining them. Some of those rights occur as a result of the ancient water rights of the Kingdom. Others occur as a result of certain leases which were granted from the Crown at one time and which expired in 1912. In 1909 the Congress of the United States, at the instance of a water company, passed an act giving them a right of way to the extent of the ground covered by water impounded by the company, and so forth. The act is as follows:

That the Wahiawa Water Co. (Ltd.), a corporation organized under the laws of the Territory of Hawaii for the purpose of irrigation, be, and is hereby, granted the right of way through the lands of the United States to the extent of the ground occupied by the water of the reservoirs and canals of said company and their laterals, and 50 feet on each side of the marginal limits thereof, including that portion of said company's irrigation works located within the limits of the military reservation made by the order of the President July 20, 1899, setting aside a portion of Waianae-Uka, in the island of Oahu, Territory of Hawaii, and as published in the general orders of the War Department No. 147, and dated August 10, 1899, and including also the right to take from the lands of the United States adjacent to the line of the canals earth and stone necessary to the consiruction thereof, the said reservoir sites, canals, and laterals, and waterways being now occupied under an outstanding lease from the former authorities of said Territory to said company and so recognized in said general orders: Provided, That the plans for the works herein proposed shall be submitted to the Secretary of War for approval, and shall be carried out in conformity to such regulations in respect to maintenance and operation as he shall prescribe: Provided also, That the servitude herein granted shall not prevent the movement of troops over the said right of way, and when the movement of field artillery and wagon trains is impeded or prevented, due to the use of gulches for water storage by said company, bridges suitable for the passage of troops, artillery, and wagon trains across said gulches, with suitable approaches thereto, shall be provided by said company when required by the Secretary of War, said bridges and approaches to be constructed in accordance with plans approved by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That during the occupation of said military reservation by troops the said company shall furnish, free of charge, all the water needed for post or encampment purposes, and, in case an electric power plant is erected by said company, it will furnish power to the United States, if required, and, if it be obtainable without interference with the irrigation supply, at not to exceed 1 cent per kilowatt hour, measured at the dynamos.

It is the contention of this company that by that act they were granted in perpetuity the right to the surplus waters of the south branch of this stream. Now, I do not desire to go into an elaborate legal discussion of the proposition, except to state this fact for the consideration of the gentleman from California and then let him, if he feels that he should make the point of order, make it. The failure to act by Congress in this matter is in effect an adjudication in behalf of this company whereby, in my judgment, water that is worth as much as $40,000 a year is given without the payment of one cent.

The committee, after an elaborate hearing that lasted a whole day, after a consideration of briefs of eminent counsel, came to the conclusion that there was not the slightest basis for their claim of title to these surplus waters, and that the nonaction by Congress was simply to permit them to use water that was of this great value without compensation, and that, therefore, inasmuch as the War Department had asked that action be taken, we were warranted, and, in fact, it was our duty, to present the proposition to the House. I suggest to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] that inasmuch as the failure to act at all by Congress is actually for the benefit of these people, the proper procedure is to let the whole matter come before this committee. Let him, if he desires to present the proposition this company has to offer, offer it as an amendment to the proposition offered by the committee, and then let Congress act on it. But we ought not, by failure to act, continue to permit these people to enjoy this water without compensation, if the position of the committee is a correct one.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. They have a right to dig canals and build dams and reservations. What is meant by the word "reservation"?

Mr. SHERLEY. It means reservations in lands being used to impound the water.

Mr. KAHN. It practically means reservoirs.

Mr. SHERLEY. Practically.

Mr. KAHN. Has the gentleman concluded?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; I have no desire to go into an elaborate discussion of the matter for nothing if the point is to be made.

Mr. KAHN. This controversy is a fight between two sugar plantation companies as to rights to use the water. I think it is a matter of sufficient importance to go before the Committee on Military Affairs that would have jurisdiction of this matter, and it ought to be taken up in a separate bill and ought to be thoroughly discussed. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. The Committee on Military Affairs has no jurisdiction, and could not have any jurisdiction of the bill.

Mr. KAHN. I think the Committee on Military Affairs would have jurisdiction.

Mr. WILLIS. I understood this was a fight between two companies. As I heard the reading of the amendment it simply proposes the right of the Government should be put up and sold to the highest bidder. Why is it a fight, then, between two companies?

Mr. KAHN. I was in Honolulu last summer and heard much about the conflicting interests. There is a company there that expended something like three or four hundred thousand dollars to put up a dam to impound the water. And they agreed to furnish, free of cost to the Government, all the water the Government desired. They offered to expend something like $200,000 in putting in a reservoir to supply the Government needs in that direction. They offered to furnish the Government all the electric power it might desire. They offered the Government to build, free of cost to the Government, the bridges across the ditches and across the gullies where this water is impounded.

There is a disposition to divert the water from the plantation that is now using it, the Waialua, to the Oahu plantation, on the other side of the island, and the matter is in such shape that I think the rights of the company that is now using the water ought to be judicially determined. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit just a moment, I desire to say this: The committee is not presenting the claim of one company as against the other. The committee believed there was a plain right in the Government to this surplus water; that there was no reason on earth why the Congress should voluntarily becloud the Government's own title, which is what this company desires Congress to do. Knowing these waters were of value, the testimony of the Judge Advocate General of the War Department being that he estimated them to be worth $40,000 a year, we felt it was incumbent upon Congress to provide for the sale of these water rights to the highest bidder.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. MANN. How did the matter come to the committee?

Mr. SHERLEY. It came from the two alternative propositions that the War Department submitted.

Mr. MANN. Why should that go to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. SHERLEY. The Committee on Appropriations makes appropriations for barracks and quarters, and this was in connection with the water supply of the Schofield Barracks; and I might say to the gentleman that the Government, realizing absolutely there was no cloud upon its title, is proceeding now, at this very moment, to build a reservoir to impound the waters for its own use at the Schofield Barracks. This was simply to use the surplus waters.

Mr. KAHN. The Judge Advocate General, in a decision rendered September 20, 1909, I believe, says that this company that is using the water has rights.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; that Judge Advocate General reversed himself and has since been reversed by the present Judge Advocate General and the Secretary of War; and I think it would be demonstrable to any lawyer in five minutes that a grant is not contained in the proviso, and it is undisputed that when they came here and asked permission to go upon the Government land they were not asking for and did not think that they would obtain thereby a right to this water. But now they claim that the Government having placed certain limitations on the grant that was given to them they thereby acquired a right to this water.

Mr. KAHN. But the Judge Advocate General held that they had a right; and that in itself would show, it seems to me, that there is some judicial question involved, and it ought to be decided in a judicial way.

Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I want to yield, first, to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. I wanted to inquire about the jurisdiction of the committee. I could see how the committee took jurisdiction of this matter in connection with barracks and quarters. I believe that the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction over Army barracks and quarters. As a legislative proposition would the Committee on Military Affairs have jurisdiction of this, or would the Committee on Territories have it?

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not catch what the gentleman said.

Mr. MANN. I asked if, as a legislative proposition, the Committee on Military Affairs would have jurisdiction over this subject, or whether the Committee on Territories would have it?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think unquestionably the Committee on Military Affairs would not have jurisdiction. I am inclined to think the Committee on Territories would.

Mr. KAHN. Then it ought to go to that committee and be fully thrashed out. It ought to be brought into the House as a separate proposition, so that all the facts can be placed before the Members. I insist, Mr. Chairman, on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offered an amendment on page 57, to which a point of order was reserved by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. I do not wish to detain the committee any further than to say that I have here an opinion by the Attorney General in which he construes this identical language to be a limitation merely upon the appropriations that are contained in the bill. The amendment covers lines 20 to 23. The Attorney General says:

> There are certain reasons why I am of opinion that the proviso is properly to be construed as applicable only to the appropriations carried by the act in which it appears, notwithstanding the fact that the language of the clause, not being in terms explicitly limited, is, standing alone, open to the other construction.

That was the opinion of the Attorney General.

Mr. MANN. I believe, then——

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was on his opinion, delivered in 1910, that I relied in the statement I made that the provision was in order.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman does not contend that it was not subject to a point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would not if it had not been for the opinion of the Attorney General, who was able to hold and rule in that extraordinary way.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. MANN. That is not fair after having the paragraph passed for another purpose, not for the purpose of preparing an amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I passed it over for the purpose of getting this decision, which was challenged.

Mr. MANN. You will never pass over another paragraph in that way. You passed it over in order to get an amendment prepared.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It adds only the word "herein."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The Clerk read as follows:

> On page 57, after line 19, insert "No part of any appropriation herein for national cemeteries or the repair of roadways thereto shall be expended in the maintenance of more than a single approach to any national cemetery."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. There was only one "aye."

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the "aye" was a big one.

The CHAIRMAN. Is a division asked for?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. MANN. I did not ask for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The "ayes" have it, and the amendment is adopted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The next amendment is on page 92, line 21, and line 5 on page 93.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Enlarging the Capitol Grounds: To continue the acquisition of the land described in the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 25, 1910, and as authorized and prescribed in said act, for enlarging the Capitol Grounds, $500,000: Provided, That in addition to the persons named in the said sundry civil act the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall be a member of the commission constituted to acquire said land, and hereafter any three members thereof shall constitute a quorum and be competent to transact the duties devolving on them.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the point of order on the whole paragraph. I do not know that I will make it, but I want to discuss it. I reserved the point on the entire paragraph, but it was on account of the proviso only.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve the point of order on the whole paragraph.

Mr. SIMS. I reserved it on the whole paragraph, but what I cared about chiefly was the latter part; that is, the legislative provision that makes the Speaker of the House a part of the commission to investigate and purchase this land. I know it has been general heretofore, and I understand the reason for it in some respects. They put the Vice President on and the Speaker of the House on, but I think there is a reason that goes beyond what is on the surface. Gentlemen who want to get up these deals want men upon the commission that it would be embarrassing to Members of the House to differ with in their judgment. It is not that I lack any confidence in the Speaker that we have, or have had, or perhaps will have, but it seems evident that the present Speaker of the House will not be in the House very long and can not serve as such commissioner, and could not, like the present ex-Speaker, remain on the commission. I think it is a rather indelicate thing for Members to be forced if they disagree with the purchasing commission in their judgment to have to criticize or differ with the presiding officer of the House. I have not thought it was a good thing to do so. I always opposed the commission, and for that reason I do not think the office of Speaker of the House ought to be involved in this way.

I do not mean to reflect at all upon the present Speaker, or any Speaker. I think it would be better to make the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, or some member of that committee, a member of the commission rather than to have the Speaker of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope the relations of the other Members of the House are not more unfriendly to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations than they would be to the Speaker of the House.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, we can scrap with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and he always takes it in good humor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He has the advantage of the Speaker in that respect, for he can give and take.

Mr. SIMS. And for that very reason, that the Speaker can not give and take, we dislike to criticize him or differ with him while he is presiding over the House. I do not think that the Speaker of the House ought to be put on any purchasing commission.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It never has interfered with gentlemen on the floor in recent times in indulging in such criticisms as they wished.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman from Tennessee will allow me, I have been Speaker of the House for a number of years and for many years chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. Let me say that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who is something of a power on the floor and in the preparation of these bills, can give any of the Speakers cards and spades in influencing legislation.

Mr. SIMS. I have no reference to influencing legislation or anything of that kind, but I should feel a delicacy in opposing something that even the gentleman from Illinois, the ex-Speaker, should favor.

Mr. MANN. I have never noticed that.

Mr. CANNON. I have not any feeling of that kind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think the gentleman from Illinois should disparage the power and importance of the Speaker, whether he exercise more power in one place or another. There is a reason for putting the Speaker of the House on this commission. In reference to the grounds surrounding the Capitol, where Congress meets, it was believed that the Speaker, representing the House, and the Vice President, representing the Senate, should more properly than any other persons be on the commission. I do not believe their exalted position would protect them from criticism if occasion required it.

Mr. SIMS. I do not believe the Speaker would exercise any improper influence, but it is the feeling Members have in deference to the Speaker on matters of judgment, and it seems to me that the Speaker ought not to be on the commission. I know that the ex-Speaker discharged his duties well, and he got his training on the Appropriations Committee. I have no criticism to make of what he has done, and I am perfectly willing for him to stay on the commission. But I do think that we ought not, at least, to cause Members to feel a hesitancy in criticizing a matter on which the Speaker has made a report in a matter that does not belong to his office.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Sometimes Members are glad of an excuse to criticize the Speaker.

Mr. SIMS. That might be, but I am opposed to the purchase of this land and to the whole business and always have been.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman going to make the point of order?

Mr. SIMS. I am willing to leave it to the House, and therefore I move to amend by striking out "the Speaker" and inserting "the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I shall object to that.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I notified the gentleman that I only want to substitute for the Speaker the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SISSON. I do not want to lose any of my own rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will not lose his rights.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman that as far as I am concerned I only wanted to bring this matter up and move to amend it, and so far as I am concerned I do not care to insist upon the point of order.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. CANDLER. I understand the gentleman to say that he is opposed to this whole proposition?

Mr. SIMS. I am opposed to buying the land.

Mr. CANDLER. And because he is opposed to this proposition he has reserved the point of order and offered this amendment to substitute somebody in place of the Speaker.

Mr. SIMS. I reserved it only as to the proviso.

Mr. CANDLER. I thought the gentleman was opposed to the whole proposition. I am opposed to it all.

Mr. SIMS. We can vote it down.

[Mr. SISSON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, touching the legislation to condemn or purchase the property between the Capitol and the Union Station, so far as I recollect I had nothing to do with it. It may be that I voted for it. I do not know. I will say that if I had been voting, I should have voted for it, because I believe that property ought to be acquired by the United States. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], after the legislation is enacted and after $1,100,000 worth of this property has been condemned, talks for the better part of an hour against purchasing any more of it.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. I will say to the gentleman that I made an effort at the special session of Congress, before any of this property had been condemned, to get a resolution considered instructing the commissioner not to proceed to the purchase of any of this property.

Mr. CANNON. Well, the gentleman's effort seemingly, with his party friends, did not materialize. He is a little bit in the position that I was once as a young lawyer when I failed to win. I cussed the court.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I will say that I am not responsible for what any of my colleagues on that committee did.

Mr. CANNON. O Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has had his time. I want to make a statement. This act was passed and became a law. Five hundred thousand dollars was appropriated, and a provision was enacted that there should be $500,000, I believe, appropriated every year. The commission, under the provisions of the law, was to try to purchase the property at private sale, and the law was careful to have in it this proviso:

Provided, That they shall not purchase any property above its fair actual value.

I happened to be Speaker at the time, and under the law I was a member of the commission and still am. The Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds is a member, and the Vice President is a member. We instructed one member of the commission, the superintendent, to advertise. He did so. He got bids. We instructed him to find out whether those bids were put in at a fair value or at less than a fair value. After an investigation we found, so far as we could ascertain, that the bids that were made voluntarily were not put in at their fair value or less than the fair value of the property, but rather above. I did not suppose for a moment the offers ever would be made at a fair value; and I want to say that I would have hesitated long before I would have purchased this property or voted to buy it at private sale as the law authorized, for the very reason that some gentlemen in the House or somebody abounding in the newspapers would get up and say that it was bought at two or three times its assessed value. We did not know who owned it. What difference does it make who owned it—whether it was owned by a lord or a pauper, whether by a rich man or a poor man, whether by a trust company or a railroad company? What difference does it make? Yet I knew, and I think the commission knew, that if we purchased this property or tried to purchase, it would have been subject to all kinds of criticism. We did not purchase because we did not consider it was offered at its fair value. I do not suppose that there ever will be purchased at private sale by any commission under this law any part of this property, because I apprehend it will not be offered at its fair value. I want to say further, in view of what the gentleman from Mississippi says, that I would never voluntarily place myself in a position where I would be criticized. I doubt if any Members of the House would place himself in that position.

It was our duty, as we did not purchase at private sale, to condemn the property. I never examined the decree of the court. I never had anything to do with it except to sign a request to the Department of Justice to proceed to condemn two squares under the law. We thought we had money enough, so far as we could ascertain, to purchase two squares. Condemnation proceeded, and in the fullness of time was concluded. I never saw the decree, and I do not suppose I ever will see the decree. As a matter of information, I will state that I have been told that the witnesses for the Government in court valued the property and improvements at about $900,000. The witnesses for the parties who owned the property valued it at $1,500,000 or $1,600,000. I am not precisely accurate in these figures. The commissioners found its value to be about $1,100,000. I have never seen the decree of the court, but I have been informed that the court confirmed the judgment of the commissioners. That is all I know about it, and it is all I care about it.

The gentleman from Mississippi is strong and virile and forceful and industrious, and I have great respect for him, but I wondered at my friend to know just where he was trying to go. He says that the cabin or the house of a man is his castle. He complains that a great Government comes to turn the man out and then the gentleman turns around and claims that he is turned out by that great Government at a price greatly above the value of the property. He says that nobody has approached him to say that they were sorry that they were being sold out or condemned, and finally he comes around to the point of saying that after all he was not for this legislation and he does not believe in taking this property.

I am aware that he was not for it, because he said so. I did not know until long after that he was not for it, because I never examined the roll. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] says that he was not for it. Men differ about these things. I am for it. I believe that the balance of this property should be condemned and that the Government should acquire it. I believe it can acquire it at a less price under condemnation proceedings now than ever hereafter.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Let us take the instance of where a Member opposed the legislation in its original passage. Does the gentleman think he is under any obligation now, since Congress has passed the law and undertaken to take that property, to vote for an appropriation for that purpose? What is the gentleman's view upon that?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I can not enter the domain of morals. I never criticize anybody's motives for voting against an appropriation or for it, against a law or for it.

Mr. GARNER. But I thought this, since the Government had already passed a law and has undertaken to take this property now, is it not the duty of Congress to continue to carry out that contract?

Mr. CANNON. I apprehend if the Congress appropriates the money and the law is not repealed that this property will be acquired. I apprehend so, yet far be it from me to criticize any gentleman who believes this law ought to be repealed. That is up to him.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. I want to state, Mr. Chairman, I do not know that anybody could have done any better upon the commission than my friend from Illinois. It is not my purpose in any way to criticize him or to criticize the action of this commission. I do not want the gentleman to have that idea at all, because it is not in my mind. While I am on my feet I would like to ask him what construction he places upon the law that you can not condemn this property until the money is appropriated?

Mr. CANNON. That is my opinion. Some others hold a different opinion. It is merely my opinion. I did not take the opinion of anybody else. Now, in my judgment, this property should be acquired, and if I have the opportunity I shall vote for the appropriation.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I heartily agree with the course that the commission took in having the property condemned. I think like the gentleman from Illinois, the ex-Speaker, that there might have been criticism, but I do not think public officials ought to be placed in a position where it is necessary for them to do a certain thing, and that they then should be put in such position as to be assailed and attacked. I was opposed to the acquiring of the property myself. We did not need it. I can not imagine why this Capitol Square here which now has artistic shape ought to be destroyed to open up a vista to the Union Station, and take in a lot of property between the Peace Monument and the Union Station so that anybody coming up Pennsylvania Avenue can get a glimpse of the Union Station. I think it absolutely destroys its symmetry, and I was opposed to acquiring it at all.

Mr. GARNER. If Congress refuses to make this appropriation, do I understand the people who own that property will remain in statu quo?

Mr. SIMS. They have got their property and they will still have it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will not claim they are in the position——

Mr. SIMS. No. If you make it mandatory on the Government to buy a piece of property it advances the price of that property, whether it is procured by condemnation or any other way. When we passed a law authorizing the acquiring of property on which to build the House Office Building, just before that time a house which was sold opposite the Varnum Hotel at public auction was sold for about six thousand some odd dollars. The purchaser failed to comply with the terms of the sale and the parties entitled to the proceeds brought suit to make him comply with the terms of sale.

During that litigation a bill was passed to acquire that property, and then all at once he sought to comply with the sale and the beneficiary brought suit to keep him from complying with the sale, and that house and lot, which sold at public auction and brought only $6,000, was valued under condemnation proceedings at between $12,000 and $13,000. It would not under any circumstances have brought any such price if Congress had not passed a law to acquire that property. Now, why is it necessary for us to do this now when we are refusing to make appropriations for actual necessaries on account of the condition of the Treasury? We will not build battleships, which I heartily indorse, on account of the condition of the Treasury, but here we are going to acquire this property for which there is no immediate necessity. The criticism I made on the point of order a while ago is another matter. I think the whole paragraph ought to be stricken out by a vote. Well, people will say, here is a law passed for us to acquire this property, but it is not mandatory on us to acquire it. I think this is a good time to stop with what we have already done until we have more money to acquire property which we do not need now. I think we ought not to appropriate the money. I think there is no need for the property, no immediate need for it, and there is great immediate need of protecting the Treasury against the taking of half a million dollars out of it just at this time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling on the point of order.

Mr. KAHN. I hope the gentleman will not——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am going to offer an amendment and close debate in a very brief time. We have had over an hour on this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that as yet no point of order has been made.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the point of order. I make it now.

Mr. KAHN. I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order until——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will make it now or never make it.

Mr. SISSON. I make the point of order. It was reserved for the purpose of discussion. I have no desire to cut any gentleman off from whatever remarks he wishes to make. But I now make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Taking the paragraph as a whole, the Chair finds that the appropriation is authorized by act of Congress, which is to be found in volume 36 of the United States Statutes at Large, on page 738. Under that statute three officials are named to acquire the property, namely, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Superintendent of the Capitol Buildings and Grounds. Later that act was amended. The amendment is found in the same volume, on page 1414, and says, after the proviso:

> That the persons designated in said act to acquire said land described therein for the purposes stated, etc.

The original act creates a commission of not three persons or individuals in that capacity to acquire the land, but it does create a commission composed not of individuals named, but officials, described by the positions which they then held. If the act of March 4, 1911, went no further than to refer to these officials as persons, then the Chair could, perhaps, upon that ground sustain the point of order. But the draftsman of the act of March 4, 1911, staggered around and finally gave such a description of the persons as let them come in under the original description of officials. Upon that ground the Chair will construe the act contrary to the principle that each act shall speak for itself, but give it the intention——

Mr. SISSON. I desire to call the Chair's attention to the fact that there is a provision there as to what constitutes a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not reached that yet.

Instead of construing the statute upon the old principle that it must speak for itself, the Chair will give the statute the benefit of whatever doubt there may be concerning it and construe it according to intention. The intention, badly expressed, seems to have been to continue the officials who first constituted the commission by designating them as "persons." The point of order as to that is overruled. We now have before us for determination the point of order as to the proviso, which reads in these words:

Provided, That in addition to the persons named in the said sundry civil act, the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall be a member of the commission constituted to acquire said land, and hereafter any three members thereof shall constitute a quorum and shall be competent to transact the business devolving upon them.

The original act created a commission of three officials. The amendment to that act continued, as I have just held, those same men in office as commissioners. That act makes two a quorum. Under this proviso, the Chair is of the opinion that there are two pieces of legislation in it—the addition of the present Speaker of the House of Representatives to that commission and the change of a quorum from two to three.

The Chair holds these to be legislation, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 92, insert, after line 20, the following:

"Enlarging the Capitol Grounds: To continue the acquisition of the land described in the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 25, 1910, and as authorized and prescribed in said act for enlarging the Capitol Grounds, $500,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up much time. The acquisition of these grounds was authorized by Congress. I am one of those who believe they should be acquired. At the time the Union Depot legislation was pending a great many gentlemen protested violently against the plaza being 800 feet across in front of the depot and wished it narrowed to 200 feet. No one now would advocate any such restricted plaza.

Between the Capitol and between the Senate Office Building and the Union Station is property that properly should be part of the Capitol Grounds. It is useless for us to look at this matter from the viewpoint of the situation of to-day. It means the permanent beautification of the city of Washington. The property referred to should properly be included in the Capitol Grounds. It will cost large expenditures from time to time to keep the city of Washington in that shape in which the Capital of the United States should be maintained. I know of no one who ever visits this city who begrudges the expenditures for proper improvements in this city. There is not a man in Congress to-day who would not regret, 10 years from now, the failure of Congress to acquire this property at this time if, during that period, upon this intervening property there were erected a class of houses similar to those now upon that property between the Capitol and the Union Depot. They should be cleaned out. Furnished-room houses should not occupy any such place. We should have between the entrance to the city and the Capitol an approach that would appeal to the artistic sentiments not only of our own people but of visitors from all over the world.

I do not know who owns the property. I do not care. I remember when the legislation originally enacted was passed. I doubted then the wisdom of one feature of it, and that was the limitation of $500,000 a year upon the amount that could be purchased. I have had some experience in the practice of law in connection with condemnation proceedings, and there is no doubt that unless the law be modified so as to permit the institution of a proceeding to condemn the entire tract at one time that as each particular tract is condemned it will enhance the value of the remaining tracts. It would be economical and an advantage to change the law so as to enable one proceeding to be initiated and payments to be made for the property from time to time, as the proceedings might be completed.

I believe it is a wise and proper thing to continue the acquisition of the property. We have acquired now under the condemnation proceedings the two squares directly north of the Capitol Grounds, which are improved. There is considerable vacant property. Some portions of that which is to be acquired, if I were to determine the matter, I should eliminate, but I should prefer to take all that the law provides rather than to stop and permit the property between the Capitol and between the Senate Office Building and the Union Station to be "improved" by the erection of nondescript buildings, cheap houses, hotels, and eating houses, instead of becoming part of an attractive and beautiful approach to the Capitol from the Union Depot. [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. SISSON. I offer it as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The Clerk read as follows:

That so much of an act approved June 25, 1910, being "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes," and the act approved March 4, 1911, amending said act, as refers to enlarging the Capitol Grounds, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, said portion of said act being as follows, to wit:

"Enlarging the Capitol Grounds: It is hereby declared to be the purpose of Congress to ultimately acquire all of squares Nos. 632, 633, 634, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 721, 722, and 723, in the city of Washington, D. C., for the enlargement of the Capitol Grounds, and for the construction of a direct avenue of about 150 feet in width from the junction of Pennsylvania Avenue and First Street NW. to the Union Station Plaza, the center line of said avenue to be located on the axis of the Peace Monument and the site of the westerly foundation in said Plaza. The Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds are hereby authorized and directed to acquire said premises by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, and to expend for that purpose not more than $500,000 in any one fiscal year, commencing with the year 1911, and the persons authorized to acquire such property shall annually, within said limit, purchase whatever of said property is in their judgment offered at the lowest prices relative to its actual value, provided they shall not purchase any property at above its fair actual value. If in any year there should not be offered property substantially up to said sum of $500,000 at its fair value or less, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds are authorized to institute condemnation proceedings in order to secure any or all of the land herein authorized to be acquired, but for not to exceed what they estimate to be $500,000 worth in any one fiscal year. If such condemnation proceedings are deemed necessary, they shall be in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890, providing a site for the enlargement of the Government Printing Office (Stat. L., vol. 26, chap. 837). For the execution of the foregoing, $500,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I make a point of order, Mr. Chairman, or reserve it.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I prepared that amendment to offer as an amendment to the bill. The purpose was to repeal the entire act carried in the sundry civil bill. I ask unanimous consent to modify the caption of the amendment—that is, to strike out that the amendment is a substitute for that of the amendment of the gentleman from New York and put in the caption which is "to repeal so much of an act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses for the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes, as relates to enlarging the Capitol Grounds."

Mr. MANN. That would make no difference as to the point of order. I wish the gentleman would state briefly what his purpose is, and then I hope that the committee may rise.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is to repeal the provision.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. The purpose is to repeal the entire act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Mississippi that he offered his amendment as a substitute, and the Chair followed the reading of that substitute and it is an exact copy of the statute.

Mr. SISSON. Yes, Mr. Chairman; and now I want to repeal the entire act. My contention is that this item went into the appropriation bill in the sundry civil act, and under the Holman rule I contend it is in order, because it saves money.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair correctly understands the gentleman from Mississippi, it is this: He at first offered an exact copy of the statute as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. Now the gentleman from Mississippi wishes to add to that amendment which he has already offered a repealing provision.

Mr. SISSON. Yes, Mr. Chairman. I thought when I offered the amendment that it was in that form, but upon just looking at it at the Clerk's desk I noticed that the repealing provision was stricken out.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that the language which the gentleman has offered is the language in the existing law which the gentleman desires to repeal?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Well, I make the point of order, and I hope that the committee will rise.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 25069, the sundry civil appropriation bill, but had reached no conclusion thereon.

FIXING HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, which I shall not do, I take it that when we get through with the sundry civil bill to-morrow, and I apprehend that we will get through with it early in the day, under the rule we will proceed with the call of the Private Calendar.

Mr. HAWLEY. Pensions.

Mr. MANN. The pension proposition the other day excepted Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays.

The SPEAKER. The recollection of the Chair is—of course the RECORD will show—that when we get through with the appropriation bills somebody had the next day after.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] asked unanimous consent that the first day following the disposition of the sundry civil bill, except Monday and Wednesday, be substituted for pension day, and at my request, made on the floor, Friday was excepted. Of course that would provide that the Private Calendar would be called to-morrow and pensions on Saturday.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My object in asking for an early meeting to-morrow is to make it possible that the greater part of to-morrow may be available for the Private Calendar.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to be able to take up both the Private Calendar and the Pension Calendar this week.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think so.

Mr. MANN. For that purpose I hope the request may be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 22006. An act authorizing the Choctawhatchee River Light & Power Co. to erect a dam across the Choctawhatchee River in Dale County, Ala.;

H. R. 22204. An act granting a right of way to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co., or such successors or assigns as may be approved by the Secretary of War, across the Fort Mason Military Reservation, Cal.; and

H. R. 16493. An act to correct the military record of William Z. Norman.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. To make certain about a question that was raised here to-day, the Chair appoints the following conferees on the part of the House on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill (H. R. 24023), whom the Clerk will announce.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina, Mr. BURLESON, Mr. GILLETT.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. FITZGERALD (at 5 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until Friday, June 21, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m.
